branches (although perhaps not then informed of the amount of the incumbrances), he entered into possession of the lots, and thenceforth collected the rents; and within nine months after the conveyance he had notice of the clause assuming payment of incumbrances, and was requested to pay the plaintiff's mortgage, and declined to pay it or to recognize any personal liability for it; yet he afterwards sold and conveyed away two of the lots, and continued to keep possession and to collect rents of the other two. Having thus accepted the benefit of the conveyance, he cannot repudiate the burden imposed upon him by the express agreement therein, and would clearly have been liable to his grantor for any breach of that agreement. Blyer v. Monholland, 2 Sandf. Ch. 478; Coolidge v. Smith, 129 Mass. 554; Locke v. Homer, 181 Mass. 98; Muhlig v. Fiske, 181 Mass. 110.

The case therefore stands just as if Ashford had himself received a deed by which he in terms agreed to pay a mortgage made by the grantor. In such a case, according to the general, not to say uniform, current of American authority, as shown by the cases collected in the briefs of counsel, the mortgagee is entitled in some form to enforce the agreement against the grantee; and much of the argument at the bar was devoted to the question whether his remedy should be at law or in equity.

Upon the question whether the mortgagee could sue at law there is no occasion to examine the conflicting decisions in the courts of the several States, because it is clearly settled in this court that he could not.

This case cannot be distinguished from that of St. Louis Second Nat. Bank v. Grand Lodge, 98 U. S. 123 [25: 75], and clearly falls within the general rule upon which the judgment in that case was founded.

It was there held that a contract by which the Grand Lodge, for a consideration moving from another corporation, agreed with it to assume the payment of its bonds, would not support an action against the Grand Lodge by a holder of such bonds; and Mr. Justice Strong, delivering judgment, after observing that the contract was made between and for the benefit of the two corporations, that the holders of the bonds were not parties to it, and that there was no privity between them and the Grand Lodge, said: "We do not propose to enter at large upon a consideration of the inquiry how far privity of contract between a plaintiff and a defendant is necessary to the maintenance of an action of assumpsit. The subject has been much debated, and the decisions are not all reconcilable. No doubt the general rule is that such a privity must exist. But there are confessedly many exceptions to it. One of them, and by far the most frequent one, is the case where, under a contract between two persons, assets have come to the promisor's hands or under his control, which in equity belong to a third person. In such a case it is held that the third person may sue in his own name. But then the suit is founded rather on the implied undertaking the law raised from the possession of the assets, than on the express promise. Another exception is where the plaintiff is the beneficiary solely interested in the promise, as where one person contracts with another to pay money or deliver some valuable thing to a third. But where a debt already exists from one person to another, a promise by a third person to pay such debt being primarily for the benefit of the original debtor, and to relieve him from liability to pay it (there being no novation), he has a right of action against the promisor for his own indemnity; and if the original creditor can also sue, the promisor would be liable to two separate actions, and therefore the rule is that the original creditor cannot sue. His case is not an exception from the general rule that privity of contract is required." (98 U. S. 124.) See also Cragin v. Lovell, 109 U. S. 194 [27: 908].

In the earlier case of Hendrick v. Lindsay, 98 U. S. 148 [23: 855], cited by the defendant, a request, accompanied by a promise of indemnity, to one person to sign an appeal bond, was construed to include another person who signed it as surety, and therefore to support a joint action by the principal and the surety, both of whom had signed the bond relying upon the promise, so that the only consideration for the promise moved from them.

In the case at bar, the promise of Ashford was to Thompson and not to the mortgagees, and there was no privity of contract between them and Ashford. The consideration of the promise moved from Thompson alone. The only object of the promise was to benefit him, and not to benefit the mortgagees or other incumbrancers; and they did not know of or assent to the promise at the time it was made, nor afterwards do or omit any act on the faith of it. It is clear, therefore, that Thompson only could maintain an action at law upon that promise.

In equity, as at law, the contract of the purchaser to pay the mortgage, being made with the mortgagor and for his benefit only, creates no direct obligation of the purchaser to the mortgagee. Parsons v. Freeman, 2 P. Wms. 664, note; S. C. Ambler, 115; Orford v. Rodney, 14 Ves. Jr. 417, 424; Re Empress Engineering Co. L. R. 16 Ch. Div. 125; Gandy v. Gandy, L. R. 80 Ch. Div. 57, 67.

But it has been held by many state courts of high authority, in accordance with the suggestion of Lord Hardwicke in Parsons v. Freeman, Ambler, 116, that in a court of equity the mortgagee may avail himself of the right of the mortgagor against the purchaser.

This result has been attained by a development and application of the ancient and familiar doctrine in equity that a creditor shall have the benefit of any obligation or security given by the principal to the surety for the payment of the debt. Maure v. Harrison, 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 98, pl. 5; Bacon, Abr. Surety, D. 4; Wright v. Morley, 11 Ves. Jr. 12, 22; Phillips v. Thompson, 2 Johns. Ch. 418; Curtis v. Tyler, 9 Paige, 432, 435; New Bedford Savings Inst. v. Fairhaven Bank, 9 Allen, 175; Hampton v. Phipps, 108 U. S. 260, 263 [27: 719, 721].

In Hampton v. Phipps, just cited, this court declared the doctrine to be well settled, and applicable "equally between sureties, so that securities placed by the principal in the hands of one, to operate as an indemnity by payment of the debt, shall inure to the benefit of all;" and declined to apply the doctrine to the case before it, because the mortgage in question was given by one surety to another merely to indemnify him against being compelled to pay a greater share of the debt than the sureties had agreed between themselves that he should bear, and he had not been compelled to pay a greater share.

The doctrine of the right of a creditor to the benefit of all securities given by the principal to the surety for the payment of the debt does not rest upon any liability of the principal to the creditor, or upon any peculiar relation of the surety towards the creditor, but upon the ground that the surety, being the creditor's debtor, and in fact occupying the relation of surety to another person, has received from that person an obligation or security for the payment of the debt, which a court of equity will therefore compel to be applied to that purpose at the suit of the creditor. Where the person ultimately held liable is himself a debtor of the creditor, the relief awarded has no reference to that fact, but is grounded wholly on the right of the creditor to avail himself of the right of the surety against the principal. If the person, who is admitted to be the creditor's debtor, stands, at the time of receiving the security, in the relation of surety to the person from whom he receives it, it is quite immaterial whether that person is or ever has been a debtor of the principal creditor, or whether the relation of suretyship or the indemnity to the surety existed, or was known to the creditor, when the debt was contracted. In short, if one person agrees with another to be primarily liable for a debt due from that other to a third person, so that as between the parties to the agreement the first is the principal and the second the surety, the creditor of such surety is entitled, in equity, to be substituted in his place for the purpose of compelling such principal to pay the debt.

It is in accordance with the doctrine, thus understood, that the Court of Chancery of New York, the Court of Chancery and the Court of Errors of New Jersey, and the Supreme Court of Michigan have held a mortgagee to be entitled to avail himself of an agreement in a deed of conveyance from the mortgagor by which the grantee promises to pay the mortgage. Halsey v. Reed, 9 Paige, 446, 452; King v. Whitely, 10 Paige, 465; Byer v. Monholland, 2 Sandf. Ch. 478; Klapworth v. Dressler, 18 N. J. Eq. 62; Hoy v. Bramhall, 19 N. J. Eq. 74, 563; Crowell v. Currier, 27 N. J. Eq. 152; S. C. on appeal, sub nom Crowell v. St. Barnabas Hospital, 27 N. J. Eq. 650; Arnaud v. Grigg, 29 N. J. Eq. 482; Youngs v. Trustees of Public Schools, 31 N. J. Eq. 290; Crawford v. Edwards, 33 Mich. 354, 360; Miller v. Thompson, 34 Mich. 10; Higman v. Stewart, 38 Mich. 513, 523; Hicks v. McGarry, 38 Mich. 667; Booth v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 43 Mich. 299. See also Pardee v. Treat, 82 N. Y. 885, 887; Coffin v. Adams, 131 Mass. 133, 137; Biddel v. Brizzolaro, 64 Cal. 354; George v. Andrews, 60 Md. 26; Osborne v. Cabell, 77 Va. 462.

The grounds and limits of the doctrine, as applied to such a case, have been well stated by Mr. Justice Depue, delivering the unanimous judgment of the Court of Errors of New Jersey, in Crowell v. St. Barnabas Hospital, as follows:

"The right of a mortgagee to enforce payment of the mortgage debt, either in whole or in part, against the grantee of the mortgagor, does not rest upon any contract of the grantee with him, or with the mortgagor for his benefit.

... The purchaser of lands subject to mortgage, who assumes and agrees to pay the mortgage debt, becomes, as between himself and his vendor, the principal debtor, and the liability of the vendor, as between the parties, is that of surety. If the vendor pays the mortgage debt, he may sue the vendee at law for the moneys so paid. . . .

"In equity, a creditor may have the benefit of all collateral obligations for the payment of the debt, which a person standing in the situation of a surety for others holds for his indemnity. It is in the application of this principle that decrees for deficiency in foreclosure suits have been made against subsequent purchasers, who have assumed the payment of the mortgage debt, and thereby become principal debtors as between themselves and their grantors.

... "But the right of the mortgagee to this remedy does not result from any fixed or vested right in him, arising either from the acceptance by the subsequent purchaser of the conveyance of the mortgaged premises, or from the obligation of the grantee to pay the mortgage debt as between himself and his grantor. Though the assumption of the mortgage debt by the subsequent purchaser is absolute and unqualified in the deed of conveyance, it will be controlled by a collateral contract made between him and his grantor, which is not embodied in the deed. And it will not in any case be available to the mortgagee, unless the grantor was himself personally liable for the payment of the mortgage debt. . . .

"Recovery of the deficiency after sale of the mortgaged premises, against a subsequent purchaser, is adjudged in a court of equity to a mortgagee not in virtue of any original equity residing in him. He is allowed, by a mere rule of procedure, to go directly as a creditor against the person ultimately liable, in order to avoid circuity of action, and save the mortgagor, as the intermediate party, from being harassed for the payment of the debt, and then driven to seek relief over against the person who has indemnified him, and upon whom the liability will ultimately fall. The equity on which his relief depends is the right of the mortgagor against his vendee, to which he is permitted to succeed by substituting himself in the place of the mortgagor." 27 N. J. Eq. 655, 656.

The decisions of this court, cited for the defendant, are not only quite consistent with this conclusion, but strongly tend to define the true position of a mortgagee, who has in no way acted on the faith of, or otherwise made himself a party to, the agreement of the mortgagor's grantee to pay the mortgage; holding, on the one hand, that such a mortgagee has no greater right than the mortgagor has against the grantee, and therefore cannot object to the striking out by a court of equity, or to the release by the mortgagor, of such an agreement when inserted in the deed by mistake (Elliott v. Sackett, 108 U. S. 182 [27: 678]; Drury v. Hayden, 111 U. S. 223 [28: 408]); and, on the other hand, that such an agreement does not, without the mortgagee's assent, put the grantee and the mortgagor in the relation of principal and surety towards the mortgagee, so that the latter, by giving time to the grantee, will discharge the mortgagor. Shepherd v. May, 115 U. S. 505, 511 [29:456, 457].

The present case is a strong one for the application of the general doctrine. The land has been sold under a prior mortgage for a sum insufficient to pay that mortgage, leaving nothing to be applied towards the payment of the mortgage held by the plaintiff; and the plaintiff has exhausted her remedy against the mortgagor personally by recovering judgment against him, execution upon which has been returned unsatisfied.

Although the mortgagor might properly have been made a party to this bill, yet as no objection was taken on that ground at the hearing, and the omission to make him a party cannot prejudice any interest of his, or any right of either party to this suit, it affords no ground for refusing relief. Alexandria Mechanics Bank v. Selon, 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 299 [7:152]; Whiting v. Bank of United States, 38 U. S. 18 Pet. 6 [10:33]; Miller v. Thompson, 34 Mich. 10.

Decree reversed and case remanded, with directions to enter a decree for the plaintiff.

THE BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS OF DELAWARE COUNTY, INDIANA,
Pff. in Err.,
v.

THE DIEBOLD SAFE AND LOCK COM-PANY ET AL.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 473-495.)

Suits removed from state court—unnecessary parties—Indiana county commissioners—complaint in another suit, not evidence—Indiana law as to suit by assignee—contract involving personal confidence, when cannot be assigned without consent—partial assignment of contract to construct a jail not assignable without county's consent—public policy as to assignment.

1. The restriction that plaintiff cannot prosecute a suit in the circuit court, where his assignors could not have prosecuted it by reason of one of them being a citizen of same State as the defendant, does not extend to suits removed into such court from a state court.
2. Objection to nonjoinder of parties defendant does not go to the jurisdiction of the court. Persons, made parties defendant, who disclaim all interest in the suit and against whom no relief is sought, are unnecessary parties.
3. If the defendant not only had notice of the assignment to the plaintiff, but consented to that assignment, there would be a new and direct promise from the defendant to the plaintiff, and the assignors would not be necessary parties to the cause of action.
4. Under the statutes of Indiana, the proceedings of county commissioners, in passing upon claims against a county, are not a trial inter partes, and an appeal from their decision is tried by the circuit court of the county as an original cause; hence, the trial in the circuit court of the county is "the trial" of the case, before which at any time it may be removed into the circuit court of the United States, under clause 3 of section 639 of the Revised Statutes.

5. A complaint in another suit, not under oath, nor signed by the plaintiff, but only by its attorneys, is incompetent to prove an admission by the plaintiff that upon the facts alleged it had not a cause of action against this defendant.

6. In Indiana, the assignee of part of a contract may sue thereon jointly with his assignor, or may maintain an action alone if no objection is taken by demurrer or answer to the nonjoinder of the assignor. This rule governs the practice and pleadings in actions at law in the federal courts held within that State.

7. When rights arising out of contract are coupled with obligations to be performed by the contractor, and involve such a relation of personal confidence that it must have been intended that the rights should be exercised and the obligations performed by him alone, the contract, including both his rights and his obligations, cannot be assigned without the consent of the other party to the original contract.

8. A partial assignment of a contract to construct a jail for a county and furnish materials therefor, at a gross sum,—that is to say, an assignment of the furnishing and putting in place the iron work of the jail,—is not binding on the county, without its assent.

9. It is against public policy to permit municipal corporations, in the administration of their affairs relating to the construction of public works, to be embarrassed by subcontracts between their contractors and third persons, to which they have never assented.

Submitted April 26, 1889. Decided March 3, 1890.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Indiana to review a judgment for plaintiff in an action to recover for work done and materials furnished for a jail in Delaware County, Indiana, under a subcontract with the original contractor. Reversed.

Statement by Mr. Justice Gray:

The original suit was commenced March 4, 1885, by the Diebold Safe and Lock Company, a corporation of the State of Ohio, against the Board of Commissioners of Delaware County in the State of Indiana, by a claim in the form of a complaint, filed with the county auditor and by him presented to the Board of County Commissioners, in accordance with the provisions of the Revised Statutes of Indiana of 1881 (which are copied in the margin*), and containing the following allegations:

That on January 20, 1882, the Board of Commissioners entered into a written contract with William H. Meyers and Edward F. Meyers, partners as W. H. Meyers & Son (a copy of

*SEC. 5740. The auditor of the county shall attend the meetings of such commissioners, and keep a record of their proceedings; and the sheriff of the county shall also, by himself or deputy, attend and execute their orders.

SEC. 5742. Such commissioners shall adopt regulations for the transaction of business; and in the trial of causes they shall comply, so far as practicable, with the rules for conducting business in the circuit court.

SEC. 5758. Whenever any person or corporation shall have any legal claim against any county, he shall file it with the county auditor, to be by him presented to the board of county commissioners.

SEC. 5759. The county commissioners shall examine into the merits of all claims so presented, and may, in their discretion, allow any claim in whole or in part, as they may find it to be just and owing.

SEC. 5760. No court shall have original jurisdiction which was annexed), showing that Meyers & Son agreed to construct a jail for the County on or before September 4, 1882, agreeably to the plans and specifications of a certain architect, and to provide all the materials therefor, for the sum of $20,000, which the Board of Commissioners agreed to pay, in monthly payments, on the architect's certificate, reserving on each payment twenty per cent, to be paid on the completion and acceptance of the building; Meyers & Son agreed to give bond to secure the performance of the agreement; and it was agreed that "the County will not in any manner be answerable to or accountable for any loss or damages that may happen in or to said works, or any part or parts thereof, respectively, or for any of the materials or other things used and employed in finishing and completing the said works;" and that "should the contractors fail to finish the work on or before the time agreed upon, they shall pay to the party of the first part the sum of twenty-five dollars per diem for each and every day thereafter the said works shall remain unfinished, as and for liquidated damages."

That a part of the work to be done and materials furnished under the contract consisted of iron work; and that on March 6, 1882, Meyers & Son assigned to the plaintiff so much of that contract as related to this work, by an agreement in writing as follows:

"Fort Wayne, Ind., March 6th, 1882. We, the Diebold Safe and Lock Company, at Canton, O., hereby agree to construct and place in position in the new jail to be erected in the City of Muncie, Delaware Co., Ind., all of that portion of the work for same (locks included), and described under the head of iron and chrome-steel work in specifications and according to plans delineating them, as already adopted by the Board of County Commissioners of said County, the same as though the contract for such work had been awarded us direct; the contract price for said work to be seventy-seven hundred dollars ($7,700) for above work, completed and accepted by the superintendent of the building and the County Commissioners, to be paid by the said County Commissioners in monthly estimates, less amount retained according to law and contract between the County Commissioners and Wm. H. Meyers & Son, on completion of said work in full, as per amount named in this contract and charged by them against W. H. Meyers & Son, and in full settlement with them for such iron and chrome-steel work under their contract with the County Commissioners; and any questions that may arise on the construction of the work, or deviations from the plans and specifications that may arise or be deemed advisable, to be arranged and settled wholly between ourselves and the County Commissioners and the superintendent of the building; and we, the Diebold Safe and Lock Company, in consideration of the acceptance of the foregoing proposition by the said W. H. Meyers & Son, agree to do said work, and insure the same in perfect working order, according to the terms proposed and to the acceptance of the said architect and County Commissioners, and in such quantities and time as shall not materially interfere with the completion of said building, and to complete the whole work on or before August 1st, 1882.

"Diebold Safe & Lock Co.

"We, the said W. H. Meyers & Son, named in the foregoing proposition, do hereby accept the same, and agree that the said Diebold Safe & Lock Company shall do and perform the work and labor and furnish the iron and chrome-steel work for said jail, in manner and form as proposed and agreed by them in the foregoing proposition and agreement, and that they shall receive payment therefor as proposed. Dated Fort Wayne, Ind., March 6th, 1882.

"W. H. Meyers & Son."

That the Board of Commissioners and the County had notice of and consented to this agreement and assignment when it was made, and before the jail was erected, and before any payments were made to Meyers & Son on account thereof; that the plaintiff, with the knowledge and consent of the Board, did the iron work and furnished the materials therefor, in accordance with the original contract of the Board with Meyers & Son, and to the acceptance of the architect; that such work and materials were of the value of $7,700, and Meyers & Son did the rest of the work upon the building; and that the Board had not paid anything on account of the iron work, although the plaintiff had duly demanded payment therefor; and the plaintiff claimed payment of the sum of $7,700.

The complaint contained a second paragraph, alleging the contract between the Board of Commissioners and Meyers & Son, its performance by Meyers & Son and its nonperformance by the Board, an assignment dated November 25, 1884, from Meyers & Son to the plaintiff of all their claims and demands against the Board on account of building the jail, and that the sum of $10,000 was due on account thereof from the Board to the plaintiff.

The Board of Commissioners disallowed the claim. The plaintiff appealed to the Circuit Court of the County; and immediately after the entry of the appeal in that court, and before tion of any claim against any county in this State, in any manner except as provided for in this Act.

SEC. 5761. No allowance shall be made by such commissioners, unless the claimant shall file with such commissioners a detailed statement of the items and dates of charge, nor until such competent proof thereof is adduced in favor of such claim as is required in other courts; but if the truth of such charge be known to such commissioners, it may be allowed without other proof, upon that fact being entered of record in the proceedings about the claim.

SEC. 5769. Any person or corporation, feeling aggrieved by any decision of the board of county commissioners, made as hereinbefore provided, may appeal to the circuit court of such county, as now provided by law.

-188 U. S.

SEC. 5774. The auditor shall make out a complete transcript of the proceedings of said board relating to the proceeding appealed from, and shall deliver the same, and all the papers and documents filed in such proceeding, and the appeal bond, to the clerk of the court to which the appeal is taken.

SEC. 5777. Every appeal thus taken to the circuit court shall be docketed among the other causes pending therein, and the same shall be heard, tried and determined as an original cause.

SEC. 5778. Such court may make a final determination of the proceeding thus appealed, and cause the same to be executed, or may send the same down to such board, with an order how to proceed, and may require such board to comply with the final determination made by such court in the premises.

further proceedings there, filed a petition and bond for the removal of the case into the circuit court of the United States, on the grounds that the plaintiff was a citizen of Ohio, and the defendant a citizen of Indiana, and that by reason of prejudice and local influence the plaintiff could not have a fair trial in the state court.

The case having been entered on the equity docket of the circuit court of the United States, a motion was made by the defendant to remand the case to the state court, upon the ground that Edward F. Meyers, one of the plaintiff's assignors, was and always had been (as was admitted) a citizen of Indiana (it being also admitted that William H. Meyers was and always had been a citizen of Michigan), and that the petition for removal was filed too late, after the case had been tried and decided by the Board of County Commissioners, and been appealed to the Circuit Court of the County. The motion was denied.

The plaintiff then, by leave of the court, made William H. Meyers, and Edward F. Meyers parties defendant; and they appeared and answered, admitting the allegations of the complaint, and disclaiming all interest in the suit; and the record showed no further proceedings in regard to them.

A demurrer filed by the Board of Commissioners, upon the ground that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, was overruled; the motion to remand the case to the state court was renewed, and again denied; and the defendant excepted to the overruling of its demurrer and to the denial of its motion to remand.

The Board of Commissioners then filed an answer, setting up the following defenses:

1st. A denial of all the allegations of the complaint.

2d. Payment.

3d. Payment to Meyers & Son without notice of the pretended assignment of the contract to the plaintiff.

4th. Payment, before the assignment mentioned in the second paragraph of the complaint, to Meyers & Son, upon a settlement of accounts, and deducting damages for delay in the work.

5th. That, by the laws of Indiana, no contract for the building of a jail shall be let without giving notice by publication for at least six weeks in some newspaper of general circulation in the county; the board of county commissioners is prohibited from entering into any contract for such building until the contractors have filed a bond with surety for the faithful performance of the work; and all laborers or materialmen may have an action on the bond for work done or materials furnished; that the Board took such a bond from Meyers & Son, which remained on file in the auditor's office, subject at all times to be sued upon by the plaintiff or any other laborer or materialman engaged in the construction of the jail; that before the commencement of the suit, and long before the Board had any notice of the assignment set out in the second paragraph of the complaint, the Board fully settled its account with Meyers & Son, including the value of the work claimed to have been performed by the plaintiff, and paid the amount found to be due to Meyers & Son, after deducting damages for delay in completing the building; that the Board could not by law enter into the contract which it was alleged in the first paragraph of the complaint to have entered into, or lawfully consent or agree to treat the plaintiff's agreement with Meyers & Son as an assignment of so much of their contract with the County, and never did in fact recognize or assent to it, or promise to pay the plaintiff, but always treated Meyers & Son as the only contractors with whom it had anything to do; and that the plaintiff, having full knowledge of all the facts aforesaid, elected to rely wholly upon the responsibility of Meyers & Son for their pay in doing the work mentioned in the complaint, and on June 30, 1884, brought an action of assumpsit against Meyers & Son on the same cause of action, which was still pending.

6th. That the circuit court of the United States had no jurisdiction, because the plaintiff was a citizen of Ohio, the Board of Commissioners and Edward F. Meyers citizens of Indiana, and William H. Meyers a citizen of Michigan.

By agreement of the parties, and order of the court, the case was transferred to the law docket. A demurrer to the last three paragraphs of the answer was sustained, and the defendant excepted to the ruling. The plaintiff filed a replication, denying the allegations in the second and third paragraphs of the answer. The second paragraph of the complaint was dismissed by the court upon the plaintiff's motion; and a trial by jury was had upon the issues of fact open upon the pleadings.

At the trial, the plaintiff introduced in evidence the original contract of January 20, 1882, the bond given and taken therewith, and the agreement of March 6, 1882.

The plaintiff also introduced evidence tending to show that shortly after the execution of its agreement with Meyers & Son, and before any work had been done or money paid out on account of the construction of the jail, and while the Board was in lawful session, engaged in transacting county business, oral notice was given to it by the plaintiff of the execution and provisions of this agreement, and the Board made no objection to the agreement or assignment; that on December 6, 1882, the plaintiff's agent filed in the office of the auditor of the County a written copy of this agreement, together with a written notice to the Board that the plaintiff expected to do the iron work, and to receive pay therefor directly from the Board, in the same manner as Meyers & Son would have been entitled to do under their contract with the Board, and that it would demand payment from the Board of the sum of $7,700 out of the contract price to be paid by the Board for the construction of the jail, and that in April or May, 1883, before the plaintiff did the iron work and furnished the materials, the Board, while in session, was notified orally by the plaintiff's agent and others of the execution and provisions of the agreement between Meyers & Son and the plaintiff.

On the other hand, the Commissioners severally testified that they had no notice or knowledge of that agreement, or of the plaintiff's claim, until December 6, 1883. The auditor testified that there was no such notice in his office, and he had no recollection of any such notice having been filed there or brought to his knowledge. But the deputy auditor testified that a written claim, for $7,700, presented by the plaintiff on account of said work and contract, was in the office before that date, and had been returned by him to the plaintiff by order of a member of the Board.

It was proved, and not denied, that at all times prior to April and May, 1883, the Board of Commissioners had in the county treasury, of the fund provided for the erection of the jail and the payment of the contract price therefor, after deducting all payments made on account thereof, about $12,000, not taking into consideration any damages accruing to the County by reason of delay in completing the jail; that the value of the work then done did not exceed $7,000 or $8,000; that the plaintiff did all the iron work and furnished all the materials therefor according to the original contract, and to the acceptance of the Board of Commissioners, and to the value of more than $7,700, but not within the time stipulated in that contract; and that neither the plaintiff nor any person on his behalf had ever received anything in payment therefor, either from the Board of Commissioners or from Meyers & Son.

The plaintiff introduced evidence tending to show that the Board of Commissioners never paid to Meyers & Son or to their order, or to anyone for their benefit, more than the sum of $13,000, on account of the construction of the jail.

The defendant introduced evidence tending to show that it had so paid out more than $18,000; that in the spring of 1883, after the work on the jail had progressed for some time, and about $8,800 had been paid by the defendant to Meyers & Son, but before any of the iron work had been done, the defendant refused to pay any more money to Meyers & Son, and put one Parry in charge of the work; and that on September 5, 1883, the jail being then in a forward state of completion, a settlement was had between the Board of Commissioners and Meyers & Son, as a part of which it was agreed that the sum of $4,500 should be considered as the damages sustained by the County for delay in completing the jail, and be deducted from the contract price, and the amount necessary to complete the jail was estimated, and the balance found to be due Meyers & Son was paid to them by the County, and the jail was taken off their hands by the Board of Commissioners; that at the time of that settlement the amount actually necessary to complete the jail, together with the aforesaid sum of $4,500, exceeded by more than $2,000 the contract price of the jail; and that the plaintiff had then been engaged upon the iron work for a week, and completed that work on September 24, 1883.

The plaintiff introduced evidence tending to show that at the time of that settlement the defendant agreed in writing with Meyers & Son to pay them the sum of $2,000, as part of the aforesaid sum of $4,500, in case one Secrist, who was then prosecuting a claim against the County for stone furnished to Meyers & Son for the jail, should not finally recover the same against the County, and that Secrist's suit was finally determined against him and in favor of the County by the judgment of the Supreme Court of Indiana, reported in 100 Ind. 59, yet no part of the said sum of $2,000 had ever been paid to Secrist or to anyone else; that the actual damages sustained by the County on account of the delay in completing the jail did not exceed the sum of $25; and that the $4,500 deducted from the contract price on account of such delay was not intended to be enforced against Meyers & Son.

The defendant offered evidence tending to show "that the settlement was made in good faith, and that the two thousand dollars which the defendant promised to pay Meyers & Son in case the Secrist claim was defeated was not intended as a sham."

The complaint, signed by the plaintiff's attorneys, in an action brought June 30, 1884, by the plaintiff against Meyers & Son, setting forth the same facts as the complaint in the present case, and seeking to recover against Meyers & Son the sum of $7,700 for work done upon the jail, was offered in evidence by the defendant, as tending to show that at that time the plaintiff did not claim to have any such demand as it now asserted against the present defendant. This evidence was objected to by the plaintiff, and excluded by the court; and to the ruling excluding it the defendant excepted.

The defendant requested the court to instruct the jury that, by the statutes of Indiana, contracts for the construction of county jails and other public buildings must be advertised and let by the board of county commissioners as an entirety, and not in parts; and that the contract between the Board of Commissioners and Meyers & Son was not so divisible and assignable by the latter, that an assignment of a part thereof by them, and mere notice given by the assignee to the Board of Commissioners of the assignment, obliged the Board to recognize the assignment and to account and settle with and pay the assignee for work done and materials furnished by the assignee.

The court refused to give the instructions requested; and instructed the jury that the effect of the agreement between Meyers & Son and the plaintiff was to put the plaintiff into a position of being entitled to do the iron work and to get the pay therefor from the County; that Meyers & Son made no agreement to pay the plaintiff, and the plaintiff by doing that work acquired no right of action against Meyers & Son, but was entitled simply to look to the County; and that if the Board of Commissioners had notice of the agreement between Meyers & Son and the plaintiff before the settlement with Meyers & Son, the defendant was bound by that agreement, and obliged to withhold from Meyers & Son money enough to pay the plaintiff, and the plaintiff might maintain this action; and that if a copy of the contract was presented by the plaintiff and received by the auditor at his office, that was legal notice to the Board of Commissioners.

To this instruction, as well as to the refusal to give the instructions requested, the defendant duly excepted.

The court further instructed the jury that if the defendant, before and at the time of the settlement with Meyers & Son, had no notice of the plaintiff's claim, the plaintiff could not recover if the settlement was made in good faith; but that if the settlement was a sham, not intended as between the parties to be a settlement, the plaintiff might recover in this suit the sum in the defendant's hands owing to Meyers & Son under the original contract. No exception was taken to this instruction at the trial.

The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff in the sum of $8,739.50, upon which judgment was rendered; and the defendant sued out this writ of error.

French*, 19 Ind. 274.

Mr. Justice Gray delivered the opinion of the court:

Before proceeding to consider the merits of this case, it is necessary to dispose of the objections taken to the jurisdiction assumed by the circuit court of the United States.

1. It was contended that that court had not cognizance of the suit, because the plaintiff's assignors could not have prosecuted it, inasmuch as one of them was a citizen of the same State as the defendant. But that restriction was applicable only to suits commenced in the federal court, and did not extend to suits removed into it from a state court. Act of March 3, 1875, chap. 137, §§ 1, 2 (18 Stat. 470); Claphin v. Commonwealth Ins. Co. 110 U. S. 81 [28: 76].

2. It was further objected that the assignors were necessary parties to the suit, because they had assigned to the plaintiff part only of their original contract with the defendant; and because the statutes of Indiana, while they require every action arising out of contract to be prosecuted by the real party in interest, provide that "when any action is brought by the assignee of a claim arising out of a contract, and not assigned by indorsement in writing, the assignor shall be made a defendant, to answer as to the assignment or his interest in the subject of the action." Indiana Rev. Stat. of 1881, §§ 251, 276. But this objection was rather to the nonjoinder of defendants than to the jurisdiction of the court, and presented no valid reason why the court should not proceed. The assignors were not parties to the suit at the time of the removal into the circuit court; and as soon as they were made parties in that court, they disclaimed all interest in the suit; and, as no further proceedings were had, or relief sought or granted, against them, their presence was unnecessary. Walden v. Skinner, 101 U. S. 577 [25: 963]; Morrison v. Ross, 118 Ind. 186. Besides, the first paragraph or count of the complaint (upon which alone the trial proceeded) alleged that the defendant not only had notice of the assignment to the plaintiff, but consented to that assignment. If that were so, there would be a new and direct promise from the defendant to the plaintiff, and the assignors would be in no sense parties to the cause of action.

3. It was also objected that the petition for removal was filed too late, after the case had been tried and determined by the Board of County Commissioners. But under the statutes of Indiana then in force, although the proceedings of county commissioners, in passing upon claims against a county, are in some respects assimilated to proceedings before a court, and their decision, if not appealed from, cannot be collaterally drawn in question, yet those proceedings are in the nature, not of a trial inter partes, but of an allowance or disallowance, by officers representing the county, of a claim against it. At the hearing before the commissioners there is no representative of the county, except the commissioners themselves; they may allow the claim, either upon evidence introduced by the plaintiff, or without other proof than their own knowledge of the truth of the claim; and an appeal from their decision is tried and determined by the circuit court of the county as an original cause, and upon the complaint filed before the commissioners. Indiana Rev. Stat. §§ 5758-5761, 5777; State v. Washington County Comrs. 101 Ind. 69; Orange County Comrs. v. Ritter, 90 Ind. 362, 368. It follows, according to the decisions of this court in analogous cases, that the trial in the Circuit Court of the County was "the trial" of the case, at any time before which it might be removed into the circuit court of the United States, under clause 3 of section 639 of the Revised Statutes. Mississippi & R. R. Boom Co. v. Patterson, 98 U. S. 408 [25: 206]; Hess v. Reynolds, 118 U. S. 73 [28: 927]; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Kansas City, 115 U. S. 1, 18 [29: 319, 325]; Searl v. School District No. 2, 124 U. S. 197, 199 [31: 415, 416].

The only ruling upon evidence which is excepted to is to the exclusion of the complaint in an action brought by the present plaintiff against its assignors. But there is no material difference between the facts stated in that complaint and those stated in the complaint in the present suit; and the former complaint, not under oath, nor signed by the plaintiff, but only by its attorneys, was clearly incompetent to prove an admission by the plaintiff that upon those facts it had not a cause of action against this defendant. Combs v. Hodge, 62 U. S. 21 How. 297 [16: 115]; Pope v. Allis, 115 U. S. 363 [29: 393]; Dennie v. Williams, 135 Mass. 28.

We are then brought to the main question of the liability of the defendant to the plaintiff, depending upon the validity and effect of the partial assignment to the plaintiff from the original contractors of their contract with the defendant.

By the law of Indiana, the assignee by a valid assignment of an entire contract, not negotiable at common law, may maintain an action thereon in his own name against the original debtor; and the assignee by valid assignment of part of a contract may sue thereon jointly with his assignor, or may maintain an action alone if no objection is taken by demurrer or answer to the nonjoinder of the assignor. Indiana Rev. Stat. § 251; Groves v. Ruby, 24 Ind. 418. These rules govern the practice and pleadings in actions at law in the federal courts held within the State. Rev. Stat. § 914; Thompson v. Ohio Cent. R. Co. 78 U. S. 6 Wall. 134 [18: 765]; Albany & R. Iron and Steel Co. v. Lundberg, 121 U. S. 451 [30: 982]; Arkansas V. Smelting Co. v. Belden Min. Co. 127 U. S. 379, 387 [32: 246, 248]. The case at bar was therefore rightly treated by the court below as an action at law; and the real question in controversy is not one of the form of pleading, but whether the plaintiff has any beneficial interest as against the defendant in the contract sued on.

A contract to pay money may doubtless be assigned by the person to whom the money is payable, if there is nothing in the terms of the contract which manifests the intention of the parties to it that it shall not be assignable. But when rights arising out of contract are coupled with obligations to be performed by the contractor, and involve such a relation of personal confidence that it must have been intended that the rights should be exercised and the obligations performed by him alone, the contract, including both his rights and his obligations, cannot be assigned without the consent of the other party to the original contract. Arkansas V. Smelting Co. v. Belden Min. Co. 127 U. S. 379, 387, 388 [32: 246, 248]. And the fact that that party is or represents a municipal corporation may have a bearing upon the question whether the contract is assignable, in whole or in part, without its assent.

By the Revised Statutes of Indiana, it is the duty of the county commissioners to cause jails and other county buildings to be built and furnished, and to keep them in repair. Indiana Rev. Stat. § 5748. But they are forbidden to contract for the construction of any building, the cost of which exceeds $500, except upon public advertisement for bids and to the lowest responsible bidder, and taking from him a bond with sureties to faithfully perform the work according to the contract, and to promptly pay all debts incurred by him in the prosecution of the work, including labor and materials furnished; and any laborer or materialman having a claim against the contractor may sue upon that bond. Indiana Rev. Stat. §§ 4244, 4247.

It has been held by the Supreme Court of Indiana that the only remedy of laborers and materialmen is against the contractor, or upon his bond, and that they have no lien upon the building, or right of action against the county; as well as that a county cannot be charged by process in the nature of garnishment or foreign attachment for the debts of its creditors to third persons; and the reason assigned in each class of cases is, that it would be contrary to public policy that a county should be involved in controversies and litigations between its contractors and their creditors. Parke County Comrs. v. O'Conner, 86 Ind. 531; Sechrist v. Delaware County Comrs. 100 Ind. 59; Wallace v. Lawyer, 54 Ind. 501.

In Bass Foundry & Mach. Works v. Parke County Comrs. 115 Ind. 284, where a contractor, to whom the county commissioners had let a contract for the construction of a court-house and jail, sublet the iron work to the plaintiff, and, after partially completing the building, abandoned the work and declared his inability to resume it, and it was alleged in the complaint, and admitted by demurrer, that the commissioners agreed with the plaintiff to pay it for such work, it was held that it was within the incidental power of the commissioners, without letting a new contract, to take charge of the work and complete the building, and to bind the county to pay the plaintiff the actual and reasonable value of iron work done by him at their request; but that they had no power to assume, on behalf of the county, debts due from the contractor to the plaintiff; and the court, after referring to the Statutes above cited, said: "In the event that a contractor should abandon his contract when the work was at such an incipient stage as that to complete it would amount practically to the construction of a court-house by county commissioners, without regard to the contract previously let, it might be a question whether the contracts made by them for labor and materials would be binding as such upon the county." 115 Ind. 248.

In Bartholomew County Comrs. v. Jameson, 86 Ind. 154, cited for the plaintiff, the assignment was of an entire sum due to the assignor for personal services. In Smith v. Flack, 95 Ind. 116, likewise cited for the plaintiff, the municipality was not a party to the suit, nor were its rights or liabilities brought in question; but the controversy was upon the effect of an assignment as between the parties to it and persons claiming under them.

In the case at bar, by the original contract between Meyers & Son and the County Commissioners, the contractors agreed to construct a jail for the County, and to provide all the materials therefor, for a gross sum of $20,000, which the Commissioners agreed to pay, partly in monthly payments, on their architect's certificate, and the rest upon the completion and acceptance of the building; and it was expressly agreed that the County should not in any manner be answerable or accountable for any materials used in the work; and also that, if the contractors should fail to finish the work by the time agreed on, they should pay to the Commissioners, as and for liquidated damages, the sum of twenty-five dollars for every day the work should remain unfinished. Meyers & Son executed a bond for their faithful performance of the contract, as required by the Statute.

By the subsequent assignment, to which neither the County nor the Board of Commissioners was a party, Meyers & Son undertook to assign to the plaintiff the obligation to construct and put in place in the jail all the iron work required by the original contract, as if the contract for such work had been awarded directly by the Commissioners to the plaintiff; and undertook to fix the contract price for such work at $7,700, to be paid by the Commissioners at the times mentioned in the original contract.

The plaintiff in fact did the iron work according to the original contract and to the acceptance of the Commissioners, and to the value of more than $7,700, but not within the time stipulated in that contract. Soon after the plaintiff began to do that work, the Commissioners made a settlement with the original contractors, which, if valid, left in their hands much less than that sum.

The court declined to instruct the jury, as requested by the defendant, that the statutes of Indiana required contracts for the construction of jails and other county buildings to be advertised and let by the Board of Commissioners as an entirety, and not in parts; and that the contract between Meyers & Son and the Board of Commissioners was not divisible and assignable by the contractors, and their assignment of part of the contract to the plaintiff and mere notice thereof to the Board did not impose any obligation upon the Board to recognize the assignment, and to account and settle with and pay the plaintiff for work done and materials furnished by the latter.

There was conflicting evidence upon two points: 1st. Whether the Commissioners before the settlement had notice of the assignment to the plaintiff; 2d. Whether the settlement was made in good faith. The judge instructed the jury that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, either if the defendant had such notice, or if the settlement was in bad faith. Exceptions were taken to the refusal to give the instruction requested, and to the instruction given upon the first alternative only. But it cannot be known on which alternative the jury proceeded in coming to their verdict. Upon the evidence before them and the instructions given, they may have concluded that the settlement between the defendant and the original contractors was in perfect good faith, and left in the defendant's hands much less than the sum claimed by the plaintiff, and that the defendant never assented to any assignment or division of the contract, and may have found for the plaintiff upon the single ground that they were satisfied that the defendant had notice of the assignment. The decision of the case therefore turns on the correctness of the instructions refused and given upon the effect of the assignment and notice.

This case does not require us to consider whether an assignment of the entire contract for the construction of the jail would have been consistent with the intention of the parties as apparent upon the face of the contract, or with the intention of the Legislature as manifested by the Statutes under which the contract was made. The plaintiff claims under no such assignment.

Those Statutes and the judicial exposition of them by the Supreme Court of the State, as well as the terms of the contract itself, are quite inconsistent with the theory that the original contractors can, at their pleasure, and without the assent of the county commissioners, split up the contract and assign it in parts, so as to transfer to different persons or corporations the duty of furnishing different kinds of material and labor, and the right of recovering compensation for such material and labor from the county commissioners.

Both the Statutes and the contract contemplate that the county commissioners shall be liable only to the contractors for the whole work, and not to any persons doing work or supplying materials under a subcontract with them.

The original contract of the County Commissioners was for the construction by Meyers & Son of the building as a whole by a certain date; for the payment to them by the Commissioners of a gross sum of $20,000 for such construction, upon an accounting with them from time to time; and for the payment by the contractors of twenty-five dollars, as liquidated damages, for every day that the building should remain unfinished beyond that date.

The assignment was not in the nature of a mere order for the payment of a sum of money, but it was of that part of the contract which related to the iron work, and required the assignee to perform this part of the work, and assumed to fix at the sum of $7,700 the compensation for this part, which the assignee should receive from the Commissioners. There is nothing, either in the original contract, or in the evidence introduced at the trial, to show what proportion the iron work bore to the rest of the work requisite for the construction and completion of the jail, or that any separate estimate of the cost or value of the iron work was contemplated by the original contract, or ever made by the defendant, or by any officer or agent of the County.

In short, the only agreement which the County Commissioners were proved to have made was with Meyers & Son, to pay them a gross sum of $20,000 for the whole work upon an accounting with them, and Meyers & Son paying damages as agreed for any delay in its completion. The agreement of Meyers & Son with the plaintiff assumed to compel the Commissioners to pay the plaintiff, for its performance of part of the work, a definite sum of $7,700, and made no provision for damages for delay, and thus undertook to fix a different measure of compensation from the original contract.

The facts that the iron work was done by the plaintiff to the acceptance of the Commissioners, though after the time stipulated in the original contract, and was of the value of more than $7,700, did not conclusively prove, as matter of law, that the Commissioners, on behalf of the County, made or recognized any contract with or liability to the plaintiff, in the place and stead of its assignors and employers; or preclude the Commissioners from insisting on the right to pay no more than the amount due, according to the original contract, for the whole of this and other work necessary to complete the building, and to ascertain the amount so due by an accounting and settlement with Meyers & Son, in which the sum due for all kinds of work, as well as the stipulated damages for any delay in completing the building, could be taken into consideration.

The County Commissioners could not, without their consent, and at the mere election of the original contractors and their subcontractors and assignees, be compelled to account with the latter separately, or be charged with a separate obligation to pay either of them a part of the entire price, instead of accounting for and settling the whole matter with the original contractors.

It might be within the authority of the Commissioners, upon becoming satisfied that Meyers & Son, after having performed a substantial part of their original contract, were unable to complete it, to give their consent to such an agreement with the plaintiff as was described in the assignment; and it is possible that the jury would have been authorized upon the evidence to find such a consent.

But the difficulty with the instructions given to the jury is, that no question of such consent was submitted to or determined by them; and that they were in effect instructed, in direct opposition to the request of the defendant, that mere notice to the defendant of the assignment to the plaintiff would prevent the defendant from afterwards making a settlement with the original contractors in good faith and according to the sums justly due by the terms of the contract from either party to the other, without retaining in its hands enough to pay the plaintiff's claim. This instruction held the defendant bound by a contract to which it was not proved to have ever assented, and requires a new trial to be granted.

The cases in other States, cited for the plaintiff, in which municipal corporations have been held liable to an assignee of a contract, upon notice of the assignment, without proof of their consent, expressed or implied, are distinguishable from the case before us, and quite consistent with our conclusion.

In some of them, the assignments were of the whole or part of money already due, or to become due, to the contractor; in other words, assignments of a fund, and not of any obligation to perform work. Brackett v. Blake, 7 Met. 385; Field v. Mayor, 6 N. Y. 179; Hall v. Buffalo, 1 Keyes, 193; Parker v. Syracuse, 31 N. Y. 376; People v. Comptroller, 77 N. Y. 45. In others, the assignments were of entire contracts for the labor of convicts, or for work upon streets, which were held, from the nature of the subject, to imply no personal confidence in the contractor. Horner v. Wood, 23 N. Y. 350; Devlin v. Mayor, 63 N. Y. 8; Ernst v. Kunkle, 5 Ohio St. 520; St. Louis v. Clemens, 42 Mo. 69; Taylor v. Palmer, 81 Cal. 241.

The plaintiff much relied on a decision of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, in a case in which a contractor to build a school-house for a city assigned his right to all moneys due or to become due under it; the city, with notice of the assignment, and after the school-house had been built by the assignees and accepted and occupied by the city, paid the last installment of the price to the original contractor. There was no controversy as to the performance of the work, or as to the amount to be paid, but only as to the person entitled to receive payment; and the court, treating the assignment as one of money only, held the assignee entitled to recover against the city. Philadelphia v. Lockhardt, 73 Pa. 211, 216.

On the other hand, that court, speaking by the same judge, in a case decided within five years afterwards, and more nearly resembling the one now before us, where a contractor for building a bridge assigned all his interest in the contract, "except the item of superstructure," to one who had expended money upon the bridge, held that such a partial assignment of the contract, though notified to the city, did not make it liable to the assignee, because "the policy of the law is against permitting individuals, by their private contracts, to embarrass the financial affairs of a municipality." Philadelphia's Appeal, 86 Pa. 179, 182. See also Geist's Appeal, 104 Pa. 351, 354.

It thus appears that the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania has taken the same view as the Supreme Court of Indiana, as already shown, holding it to be against public policy to permit municipal corporations, in the administration of their affairs relating to the construction of public works, to be embarrassed by subcontracts between their contractors and third persons, to which they have never assented.

Judgment reversed, and case remanded with directions to set aside the verdict and order a new trial, and to take such further proceedings as may be consistent with this opinion.

v.

WALTER S. JOHNSTON.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 566-578.)

Bank check, refusal to pay—acceptance of deposit by bank after it is insolvent constitutes fraud—responsibility of bankers—necessary averments—suit for proceeds of draft—liability of bank for proceeds of draft fraudulently received.

1. The holder of a bank check cannot sue the bank for refusing payment without proof that it was accepted by the bank or charged against the drawer; but the depositor can sue for the breach of the contract to honor his checks.
2. The acceptance of a deposit of drafts by a bank, irrevocably insolvent, constitutes such a fraud as entitles the depositor to reclaim his drafts or their proceeds.
3. Bankers are held to rigid responsibility for good faith and honest dealing; a banker who is, to his own knowledge, hopelessly insolvent, cannot honestly continue his business and receive the money of his customers; and, although having no actual intent to cheat and defraud a particular customer, he will be held to have intended the inevitable consequence of his act, which is to cheat and defraud all persons whose money he receives, and whom he fails to pay before he is compelled to stop business.
4. There must be sufficient equity apparent on the face of a bill to warrant the court in granting the relief prayed; and the material facts on which the complainant relies must be so distinctly alleged as to put them in issue. And if fraud is relied on, it is not sufficient to make the charge in general terms.
5. Where a bill alleged the insolvency of the bank to the knowledge of its officers, and a wrongful neglect to disclose its insolvency to complainant; that by continuing in business it represented itself to be solvent; that complainant, on the faith of such representation and believing the bank solvent, deposited with it a draft; that next morning the bank closed its doors and the draft was thereafter collected, and that by reason of the premises the draft did not become the property of the bank, and the receiver of the bank denied these allegations,—the issue thus framed was sufficient to enable the court to proceed to a decree.
6. The fraudulent intention flowed from the guilty knowledge, and the bank must be held to the consequences of a representation which it knew to be contrary to the fact, and upon which the complainant innocently acted.

APPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York dismissing a suit in equity against the receiver to obtain the proceeds of a draft deposited in the Marine National Bank. Reversed.

Opinion below, 23 Blatchf. 489, 27 Fed. Rep. 248.

188 U. S.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

For more than five years prior to the 6th day of May, 1884, the St. Louis and San Francisco Railway Company had an account with the Marine National Bank of the City of New York. On the 5th day of May of that year it drew a sight draft on the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad Company at Boston, Massachusetts, payable to the order of the Marine Bank, for the sum of $17,835, an amount due from the latter company, and sent the same to the Marine Bank with a deposit ticket filled up by the assistant treasurer of the San Francisco Company, in the following words and figures:

"Deposited by the St. Louis & San Francisco Railway Co. in the Marine National Bank May 5th, 1884.

Dollars. Cents.

"Checks $17,835."

The messenger who took the draft and deposit ticket to the bank had no special instructions, and handed them to an assistant of the receiving teller, who was absent at the time. The Railway Company's pass-book was then, and had been since April 30, 1884, in the possession of the bank, and no entry was made in it until some days afterwards, and then not by direction of the Railway Company. The assistant receiving teller applied to the assistant cashier for instructions, and was by him directed to receive the draft as cash, and it was so entered on the credit ledger of dealers with the bank, but not with the knowledge or by the request of the Railway Company. The Marine Bank sent the draft to the Atlantic National Bank of Boston for collection and credit, and it was by that bank presented to the Atchison Company on the 6th of May, 1884, and that company at five minutes before one o'clock P. M. of that day delivered its check on the National Bank of North America to the Atlantic Bank, which was presented for payment and paid to the Atlantic Bank on May 7, 1884. The Marine Bank was insolvent when it received the draft, and closed its doors at twenty minutes before eleven o'clock on the morning of the 6th of May, 1884, and never resumed business.

Walter S. Johnston was appointed receiver of the bank on the 13th of May, 1884, and thereupon a correspondence ensued between the receiver and the San Francisco Company, which resulted in an agreement between them that the receiver might retain the proceeds, subject to the right of the San Francisco Company to assert its claim thereto, which it does in this action. It is conceded that the Marine Bank never paid or advanced anything to the San Francisco Company on the draft, and that the latter, at the time the draft was sent to the bank, or at any time since, was not indebted to it. The balance to the credit of the Railway Company in the Marine Bank at nine o'clock A. M. on May 6, 1884, not including the draft, was $117,981.72, besides some checks it had drawn and which it was obliged to take up.

The treasurer and assistant treasurer of the Railway Company testified that there was no arrangement or understanding, verbal or written, or dealing, to their knowledge, with the Marine Bank, by which the San Francisco Company was authorized or entitled to draw against out-of-town paper before actual collection, and that no drafts were ever so drawn; that they knew of no such agreement, verbal or in writing; that they drew on what they had and not on what they did not have; that the Railway Company had no occasion to draw against drafts or checks before collection, and did not do so; and that the Company was allowed interest on its daily balances. Four deposits of out-of-town paper, other than that in question, were proven to have been made under the dates of August 23, August 27 and November 8, 1883, and April 10, 1884. The deposit tickets in each case referred to the deposit as "checks." The deposits of August 23, August 27 and November 8 were made up of two items each, but neither was marked on the tickets as cash, and there was no evidence that either of them was. The receiving teller testified that generally foreign paper (paper outside of the City of New York), of large amount, when received, was marked "F," and such a mark in red pencil appeared on the deposit tickets of November 8, 1883, for $17,860; of April 10, 1884, for $18,930; and of May 5, 1884, for $17,835, being the deposit in controversy. The witness said this was done, so "that if any of the officers should ask what certain checks consisted of—if a large deposit—we would be able to tell." These drafts or checks on banks outside of the city were kept on a slip called "Foreign and general office slip," and put in a different pigeon hole from that where domestic paper was placed.

The assistant note-teller had charge of the transmission of paper drawn on banks or persons outside of the City of New York, and testified thus: "Q. And all that you had to do, as it was out-of-town paper, was to transmit it for collection, was it not? A. And see that we got the money back again. Q. Those were all your duties in regard to it? A. Well, I had other duties. Q. What were they? A. To see that the St. Louis and San Francisco Railway Company did not deposit too many large foreign checks as cash. Q. Why did you do so? A. Because I had entire charge of the foreign checks. The foreign checks are usually out five days, and that is five days' interest, and unless those concerned kept a large balance we charged them exchange, and where we paid interest on the balances we then charged interest and exchange where they kept large balances, and for that reason we watched all foreign checks deposited. . . . Q. What were the instructions you received in regard to the St. Louis and San Francisco Railway Company? A. To see whether they were depositing many large foreign checks and how much it cost, and whether it was advisable to get exchange from them. . . . Q. Do you recollect what officer it was who gave you those instructions? A. No, sir. Q. Did you ever after that enforce them? A. I do not understand the meaning of the word 'enforce.' I notified the officers of all large checks deposited by the St. Louis and San Francisco Railway Company. Q. How frequently? A. I don't remember; as often as they came in."

This particular draft was marked "F," and put in the foreign pigeon-hole, and credited as cash by direction of the assistant cashier. The form of letter universally used in transmitting foreign paper for collection was put in by defendant, and contained this paragraph: "Please return as promptly as possible all unpaid collections protested, unless marked thus X, when please return without protest." In the five instances of the deposit of these out-of-town drafts, they were credited to the San Francisco Company on the bank's books, and the San Francisco Company entered and added their amount on the margin of its check-book.

It appeared from the evidence that the bank had been insolvent for a year, and that it was hopelessly so on Saturday, the third day of May, and until its doors were closed. The receiver said that he got judgment for over $730,000 on the over-drafts of a firm doing business with the bank, which over-drafts occurred in the last two or three days in one account, and had been running for two or three weeks in the other account; that the over-draft in the individual account of one of the partners amounted to $140,000; in the firm account, to $300,000; and in the firm special account, to $350,000, most of which was before Saturday, the third of May. Estimating the assets of the bank at what they were actually worth, and not at their face value, the deficit, according to the receiver's judgment when he took charge, was over a million and a half of dollars. The bank was really insolvent from the time the indebtedness from the firm in question, which was insolvent, grew to such a point, that, if called and not paid, the bank could not meet its obligations. The president of the Marine Bank was a partner of that firm.

The bill in this case was filed to obtain the proceeds of the draft as the property of the San Francisco Company, and among other things alleged:

"On the said 5th day of May it was well known to the said bank and to its officers, and so the said fact was, that the said bank was insolvent, and, well knowing the fact, the said bank wrongfully neglected to disclose the same to your orator, but by continuing business with open doors, and otherwise representing to your orator and all other persons dealing with it that the said bank was solvent, and, on the faith of such representations, your orator believed the said bank to be solvent, and had no knowledge or suspicion or means of knowing that it was insolvent or in danger of becoming so, and, acting upon such representations and relying on the solvency of said bank, your orator delivered the said draft to it, and the bank received the same for collection, as aforesaid. Thereafter, and on the same day, the said bank, by its cashier, indorsed the said draft as follows: 'Pay Atlantic National Bank of Boston or order, for collection, for account of Marine National Bank of the City of New York,' and transmitted the said draft, so indorsed, to the said Atlantic National Bank for collection."

And "that, by reason of the premises, the said draft, when delivered as aforesaid to the said bank, did not become the property of the said bank, and that your orator did not part with its title to or interest in the said draft, but that it remained the property of your orator, and that the proceeds of the said draft, when collected, likewise did not become the property of the said bank, or of the defendant, but remained always, and still are, the property of your orator, and your orator is entitled to follow them specifically into the hands of the defendant and to recover them from him." Upon final hearing the bill was dismissed, and the opinion of the Circuit Court will be found reported in 28 Blatchf. 489, and in 27 Fed. Rep. 248.

Mr. John E. Burrill, for appellant:

Property in paper received by a banker to be credited to the dealer vests in the banker only when he has become absolutely responsible for the amount to the depositor.

The combination of three circumstances is sufficient to entitle the injured party to relief at law or in equity; first, that the representation is contrary to the fact; secondly, that the party making it knew it to be contrary to the fact; thirdly, that it should be this false representation which gave rise to the contracting of the other party.

There is no evidence that the directors of the bank had any knowledge of its condition. Such knowledge cannot be presumed where fraud is charged.

Wakeman v. Dalley, 51 N. Y. 27; Balbach v. Frelinghuysen, 15 Fed. Rep. 688.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

This was not the deposit of a check on the Marine Bank itself. In such a case it was held in Oddie v. National City Bank, 45 N. Y. 785, that the check, if received and credited, could not be charged back for want of funds. Nor was it a check on another bank, as to which Church, Ch. J., remarks, a different principle would be applied, as the presumption of agency might arise. It was a sight draft drawn by the San Francisco Company on its debtor in Boston, and collected through the Marine Bank's correspondent at that place. Neither it, nor the money collected upon it, passed into the hands of any third person for value. The collection was made after the Marine Bank had closed its doors. It is not claimed that there was any express arrangement or understanding between the San Francisco Company and the bank that the deposits of out-of-town paper should be treated as cash. Can such an understanding be implied from the mere fact that the San Francisco Company was credited with the draft upon the books of the bank, as if the deposit were of money, although the deposit ticket named it under the head of checks, and that the Company itself added on the stubs of its check-book such deposits to the current amount, coupled with an alleged commercial usage to allow good customers to draw against a credit thus created? In five years of business between them, the San Francisco Company had never drawn against such paper. The evidence of the bank's clerks leaves no doubt that, as to out-of-town drafts for large amounts, the bank kept track of them and reserved the right to charge exchange and also interest for the average time taken in collection, notwithstanding its agreement to pay interest on the daily balances. This was not consistent with the theory of an understanding between the bank and the Company that the title to this and similar drafts should pass absolutely to the bank. If the draft had not been paid, the bank could have canceled the credit, as it clearly accepted no risk on the paper. The draft was entered at its full value, which indicated that it was not discounted, but credited for convenience and in anticipation of its payment.

It is settled law in this court that the holder of a bank check cannot sue the bank for refusing payment, in the absence of proof that it was accepted by the bank or charged against the drawer (National Bank of the Republic v. Millard, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 152 [19:597]; First National Bank v. Whitman, 94 U. S. 843, 844 [24:229,230]; Laclede Bank v. Schuler, 120 U. S. 511, 514 [30:704,705]); but the depositor can sue for the breach of the contract to honor his checks. If, under the circumstances disclosed in this case, the only balance the San Francisco Company had was made up of the deposit of this draft, and it had drawn against it, and the bank had declined to honor the check, could the San Francisco Company have sustained an action on the ground of a general commercial usage, when by the course of dealing for five years it had never drawn against paper so deposited? Because banks often let good customers overdraw, do the latter thereby get the right to do so when the bank deems it improper to permit it? Undoubtedly if the San Francisco Company had overdrawn, and this draft had been credited to cover the over-draft, or if the Company had drawn against the draft, the bank could hold the paper until the account was squared. And if the bank had transferred the draft to one occupying the position of a bona fide holder, such transfer would have conferred title on its transferee by reason of its reputed ownership, so far as the latter was concerned. Metropolitan National Bank v. Loyd, 90 N. Y. 530.

In that case, as reported in 25 Hun, 101, which was affirmed in 90 N. Y. 530, the court of appeals remarking in reference to the opinion that it "so fully reviews the evidence and the authorities that we should be content with simply expressing our concurrence, if the case had not been sent here by that court as involving a question of law which ought to be reviewed," the supreme court says "that the intention that the check should be received as cash is to be inferred from the fact that the check was due immediately and was drawn on a bank, and for all purposes of the parties was equivalent to so much money, . . . and such intention is confirmed by preceding transactions, admitted by the depositor, in which checks were deposited and entered as cash in his bank book, and that the custom of the bank in its dealings with him was to credit him with all checks as money."

And in Scott v. Ocean Bank, 28 N. Y. 289, it was held that "the property in notes or bills transmitted to a banker by his customer to be credited the latter, vests in the banker only when he has become absolutely responsible for the amount to the depositor," and that "such an obligation, previous to the collection of the bill, can only be established by a contract to be expressly proved or inferred from an unequivocal course of dealing."

"Every man who pays bills not then due into the hands of his banker," said Lord Ellenborough in Giles v. Perkins, 9 East, 11, 14, "places them there as in the hands of his agent to obtain payment of them when due. If the banker discount the bill or advance money upon the credit of it, that alters the case; he then acquires the entire property in it, or has a lien on it pro tanto for his advance."

If there be no bargain that the property should be changed, the relation resembles that of principal and agent. Mere liberty to draw does not make out such a bargain, particularly where interest is allowed by the banker upon the bills only from the time when their amount is received. Ex parte Barkworth, 2 De. G. & J. 194; Thompson v. Giles, 2 Barn. & C. 422; Ex parte Sargeant, 1 Rose, 153.

The question was one of fact rather than of law, and we think there should be something more in the evidence tending to establish that the San Francisco Company understood that the bank had become owner of the paper, than these mere credits for convenience, before that can be held to be the fact, notwithstanding it may be a recognized usage to allow a customer to draw. So far from there being shown an unequivocal course of dealing tending to support that conclusion, it seems to us the tendency of the evidence is otherwise.

But if there could be any question on that branch of the case, we are unable to see that there could be on the other. This bank was hopelessly insolvent when the deposit was made, made so apparently by the operations of a firm of which the president of the bank was a member. The knowledge of the president was the knowledge of the bank. Martin v. Webb, 110 U. S. 7, 15 [28:49, 52]; Manhattan Bank v. Walker, 130 U. S. 267 [32:959]; Crayle v. Hadley, 99 N. Y. 131. In the latter case it was held that the acceptance of a deposit by a bank irretrievably insolvent constituted such a fraud as entitled the depositor to reclaim his drafts or their proceeds. And the Anonymous Case, 67 N. Y. 598, was approved, where a draft was purchased from the defendants, who were bankers, when they were hopelessly insolvent, to their knowledge, and the court held the defendants guilty of fraud in contracting the debt, and said their conduct was not like that of a trader "who has become embarrassed and insolvent, and yet has reasonable hopes that by continuing in business he may retrieve his fortunes. In such a case he may buy goods on credit, making no false representations, without the necessary imputation of dishonesty. Nichols v. Pinner, 18 N. Y. 295; Brown v. Montgomery, 20 Id. 287; Johnson v. Monell, 2 Keyes, 655; Chaffee v. Fort, 2 Lans. 81. But it is believed that no case can be found in the books holding that a trader who was hopelessly insolvent, knew that he could not pay his debts and that he must fail in business and thus disappoint his creditors, could honestly take advantage of a credit induced by his apparent prosperity and thus obtain property which he had every reason to believe he could never pay for. In such a case he does an act the necessary result of which will be to cheat and defraud another, and the intention to cheat will be inferred." And it was decided that "in the case of bankers, where greater confidence is asked and reposed, and where dishonest dealings may cause widespread disaster, a more rigid responsibility for good faith and honest dealing will be enforced than in the case of merchants and other traders;" and that "a banker who is, to his own knowledge, hopelessly insolvent, cannot honestly continue his business and receive the money of his customers; and although having no actual intent to cheat and defraud a particular customer, he will be held to have intended the inevitable consequences of his act; i. e., to cheat and defraud all persons whose money he receives, and whom he fails to pay before he is compelled to stop business."

The circuit court did not, in the present case, express any different view, but held that the bill was not properly framed to present the question. Certainly there must be sufficient equity apparent on the face of a bill to warrant the court in granting the relief prayed; and the material facts on which the complainant relies must be so distinctly alleged as to put them in issue. Harding v. Handy, 24 U. S. 11 Wheat. 103 [6: 429]. And if fraud is relied on, it is not sufficient to make the charge in general terms. "Mere words, in and of themselves, and even as qualifying adjectives of more specific charges, are not sufficient grounds of equity jurisdiction, unless the transactions to which they refer are such as in their essential nature constitute a fraud or a breach of trust, for which a court of chancery can give relief." Van Weel v. Winston, 115 U. S. 228, 237 [29: 384]; Ambler v. Choteau, 107 U. S. 558, 591 [27: 322, 324]. The defendant should not be subjected to being taken by surprise, and enough should be stated to justify the conclusion of law, though without undue minuteness.

The bill alleged that the bank was insolvent on the 5th day of May; that this was well known to its officers; that it wrongfully neglected to disclose its insolvency to complainant, and, by continuing business and otherwise, represented to complainant and all other persons dealing with it that it was solvent; that complainant, on the faith of these representations, believed such to be the fact, without suspicion that the bank was, or was in danger of becoming, insolvent; that, acting upon the representations, and relying on the bank's solvency, complainant delivered the draft; that next morning the bank closed its doors, and the draft was collected thereafter; and that, by reason of the premises, the draft or its proceeds did not become the property of the bank. The receiver in his answer specifically denied these averments. We think the issue thus framed was sufficient to enable the court to proceed to a decree. The fraudulent intention flowed from the guilty knowledge, and the bank must be held to the consequences of a representation which it knew to be contrary to the fact, and upon which the complainant innocently acted. Granted that the mere omission to disclose the insolvency, if there had been ground for the supposition that the bank might continue in business, would not be sufficient, there is nothing for such a belief to rest on here. As a matter of pleading, the averment was that the bank wrongfully neglected to make the disclosure; as a matter of fact the condition of the bank was so hopeless that it was its duty to make it. The omission to specifically state in the pleading the degree of insolvency which rendered the bank's conduct fraudulent was not fatal, as the conclusion asserted showed the intention of the pleader, and the particular contention could fairly be tested on the hearing.

The decree is reversed, and the cause remanded with directions to enter a decree in favor of the complainant according to the prayer of the bill and to take further proceedings in conformity with this opinion.

Mr. Justice Brewer was not a member of the court when this case was argued, and took no part in its decision.

THE WISCONSIN CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

PRICE COUNTY ET AL.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 496-514.)

Property of United States not taxable—taxation of lands to which purchaser is entitled to patent—public lands, when they become private property—grant of land to railroad—present title—location of road—identification of land—when land subject to taxation—issue of patent—indemnity lands—when title to vests—Land Department.

1. A State has no right to tax the property of the United States within its limits.
2. When the donee or purchaser of public lands has complied with the conditions upon the performance of which he is entitled to a patent, and to their use, and the government has ceased to have any interest therein which will justify it in withholding a patent, then the donee or purchaser is the beneficial owner of the lands and they are subject to taxation as his property.
3. After public lands have been entered at the land office and a certificate of entry obtained they are private property, the government agreeing to make a conveyance as soon as it can, and in the mean time holding the naked legal fee in trust for the purchaser, who has the equitable title.
4. Congress, by a grant of land to a Railroad to aid in its construction, conferred a present title to the designated sections along its route, with such restrictions upon their use and disposal as to secure them for the purposes of the grant.
5. The title conferred by the grant was imperfect until the land was identified by the location of the road; but when the route of the road was fixed, the sections granted became susceptible of identification and the title attached to them and took effect as of the date of the grant, so as to cut off all intervening claims.
6. When the road has been built according to the terms of the grant, the company has to the granted lands, designated along its route, an indefeasible title, and the lands are subject to taxation against the company, although patents for them have not been issued.
7. The subsequent issue of the patents by the United States was not essential to the right of the company to the designated and granted lands, although useful as evidence that the grantee had complied with the conditions of the grant.
8. Indemnity lands are those which are, by the grant in aid of the railroad, allowed to be selected in lieu of parcels lost from the designated or granted lands by previous disposition or reservation.
9. No title to indemnity lands becomes vested in any company until the selections are made and they have been approved of, as provided by statute, by the Secretary of the Interior; until which time such indemnity lands are not subject to taxation.

10. The refusal of the Land Department, after the decision of the Leavenworth Case, 92 U. S. 733 (23:334), to allow deficiencies, arising in the designated or granted sections before the date of the Act, to be supplied by selections from the indemnity lands and to issue patents for them, was erroneous.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Wisconsin to review a judgment reversing a judgment of the State Circuit Court in favor of the Wisconsin Central Railroad Company, plaintiff, restraining defendants from collecting certain taxes upon land. Reversed, with directions to enter a decree enjoining collection of taxes for indemnity lands and dismissing complaint as to the granted lands. Reported below, 64 Wis. 579.

Statement by Mr. Justice Field:

In April, 1884, the plaintiff in this suit, the Wisconsin Central Railroad Company, a corporation created under the laws of Wisconsin, was the owner of certain lands situated in the Town of Worcester, in the County of Price, in that State, and had a patent for them from the State bearing date on the 25th of February, 1884, upon which taxes had, in the year 1888, been assessed by that County, although, as claimed by the plaintiff, the title to a part of these lands was at that time in the United States, and to the remainder of them in the State of Wisconsin. Upon a claim that the lands were thus exempt from taxation, the plaintiff, in April, 1884, brought the present suit in a circuit court of the State, to obtain its judgment that the state taxes were illegal, and to enjoin proceedings for their enforcement.

The facts, out of which this claim that the lands were exempt from taxation arose, are briefly these: On the 5th of May, 1864, Congress passed an Act making a grant of lands to the State of Wisconsin to aid in the construction of three distinct lines of railway between certain designated points. (18 Stat. 66.) One of this lines is now held by the plaintiff. The grant in aid of it is in the third section of the Act, the language of which is as follows:

"That there be, and is hereby, granted to the State of Wisconsin, for the purpose of aiding in the construction of a railroad from Portage City, Berlin, Doty's Island or Fond du Lac, as said State may determine, in a northwestern direction, to Bayfield, and thence to Superior, on Lake Superior, every alternate section of public land, designated by odd numbers, for ten sections in width on each side of said road, upon the same terms and conditions as are contained in the Act granting lands to said State to aid in the construction of railroads in said State, approved June three, eighteen hundred and fifty-six. But in case it shall appear that the United States have, when the line or route of said road is definitely fixed, sold, reserved or otherwise disposed of any sections or parts thereof, granted as aforesaid, or that the right of pre-emption or homestead has attached to the same, that it shall be lawful for any agent or agents of said State, appointed by the governor thereof, to select, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, from the lands of the United States nearest to the tier of sections above specified, as much public land in alternate sections, or parts of sections, as shall be equal to such lands as the United States have sold or otherwise appropriated, or to which the right of pre-emption or homestead has attached as aforesaid, which lands (thus selected in lieu of those sold and to which the right of pre-emption or homestead has attached as aforesaid, together with sections and parts of sections designated by odd numbers as aforesaid, and appropriated as aforesaid) shall be held by said State, or by the company to which she may transfer the same, and for the use and purpose aforesaid: Provided, that the lands to be so located shall in no case be further than twenty miles from the line of said road."

The seventh section enacted: "That whenever the companies to which this grant is made, or to which the same may be transferred, shall have completed twenty consecutive miles of any portion of said railroads, supplied with all necessary drains, culverts, viaducts, crossings, sidings, bridges, turnouts, watering places, depots, equipments, furniture, and all other appurtenances of a first-class railroad, patents shall issue conveying the right and title to said lands to the said company entitled thereto, on each side of the road, so far as the same is completed, and coterminous with said completed section, not exceeding the amount aforesaid, and patents shall in like manner issue as each twenty miles of said road is completed: Provided, however, That no patents shall issue for any of said lands unless there shall be presented to the Secretary of the Interior a statement verified on oath or affirmation by the president of said company, and certified by the governor of the State of Wisconsin, that such twenty miles have been completed in the manner required by this Act, and setting forth with certainty the points where such twenty miles begin and where the same end; which oath shall be taken before a judge of a court of record of the United States."

The ninth section declared: "That if said road mentioned in the third section aforesaid is not completed within ten years from the time of the passage of this Act, as provided herein, no further patents shall be issued to said company for said lands, and no further sale shall be made, and the lands unsold shall revert to the United States."

By the Act of Congress of April 9, 1874, the time for the completion of the road and for the reversion of the lands was extended to December 31, 1876. (18 Stat. 28, chap. 82.)

All the lands embraced by section three of the Act of 1864 were granted in 1866 by the State of Wisconsin to the Portage and Lake Superior Railroad Company and to the Winnebago and Superior Railroad Company, respectively, companies which had been incorporated under the laws of that State. (Private and Local Laws of Wisconsin of 1866, chap. 314, sec. 8; chap. 362, sec. 9.) In 1869 the consolidation of these two companies, under the name of the Portage, Winnebago and Superior Railroad Company, was authorized by the State, and, in 1871, the name of the consolidated company was changed to the Wisconsin Central Railroad Company, the plaintiff in this suit.

The Portage, Winnebago and Superior Railroad Company duly filed the location of its road from Stevens' Point to Bayfield on October 7, 1869; and in December following the commissioner of the General Land Office withdrew from sale, pre-emption and homestead entry the odd-numbered sections of land within the twenty-miles limit along the line of the location. The road was built in sections of twenty miles each. Section six and portions of sections five and seven fell within Price County. Section five was completed in February, 1874, section six in December, 1876, and section seven in June, 1877.

The whole number of acres in the odd-numbered sections along the line of the railroad within the ten-mile limits was 1,377,888.98. Of this number 789,622 acres had been disposed of by the United States before the Act of May 5, 1864, was passed, and 161,659.53 were disposed of after its passage and before the line of the road was located in October, 1869.

The plaintiff, the Wisconsin Central Railroad Company, received from the United States, prior to November 16, 1877, patents for the 240,868.54 acres within the place limits, that is, within ten miles on either side, of the line of the road as located, and patents for 203,459.62 acres within the indemnity limits, that is, between ten and twenty miles of the line of the road. On January 9, 1878, the Company received from the United States a patent for 162,622.89 acres, and on August 10, 1878, a patent for 29,396.51 acres, both of these patents covering land within the place limits. No other patents were issued by the United States to the Company previous to the commencement of this suit, and the patents issued did not include the land upon which the taxes were assessed, to restrain the collection of which the suit is brought. Of the lands in question, eleven parcels of forty acres each lay within the place limits. The remainder of the lands lay within the indemnity limits. A list of selections of lands within the place limits claimed by the Company, on account of the sixth section of the road from Stevens' Point to Bayfield, was filed in the local land office on December 5, 1876; they included, among other lands, the eleven forties mentioned. A list of selections of land within the indemnity limits claimed by the Company, on account of the same section of railway, was filed in that office on the 9th and 15th of December, 1876; they included the remainder of the lands referred to in the complaint. Repeated demands were made by the Railroad Company, from the time these lists were filed until after the trial of this cause, for patents covering the lands referred to, but no patents were granted for any of them. A full statement of the efforts to secure patents is given in the testimony of the vice-president and general legal manager of the Company.

It appears from this statement, the accuracy of which is not questioned in any particular, that up to the time of the decision of this court in Leavenworth, Lawrence & Galveston R. Co. v. United States, 92 U. S. 733 [23: 634], which was rendered in April, 1876, it had been the practice of the Land Department to allow grantees by the United States of land to aid in the construction of railroads, whose grants were similar in their terms to the one under consideration here, to take land from the indemnity limits in lieu of lands sold or otherwise disposed of by the United States prior to the passage of the Act, and of lands to which a pre-emption or homestead right had previously attached; but that this practice was subsequently changed in consequence of the language of the court in that case and its supposed decision that indemnity could be allowed only for such lands as were sold or reserved or otherwise disposed of, or to which the right of pre-emption or homestead had attached, between the passage of the Act and the time the line or route of the road was definitely fixed.

The commissioner of the General Land Office, in a letter addressed to the Secretary of the Interior, under date of November 16, 1877, contained in the record, stated that this practice had existed since the inauguration of the railroad land-grant system, but that it would appear from the decision in question that the practice was erroneous; that indemnity could only be allowed for lands sold or disposed of after the passage of the Granting Act, and applying that rule to the grant under consideration the Company had received patents for 41,820.09 acres in excess of the indemnity authorized. The Secretary of the Interior, in answer to this letter, under date of December 26, 1877, referred to the decision of the supreme court, and held in pursuance of it that lands sold or disposed of by the United States prior to the passage of the Act granting lands to the State of Wisconsin were excepted from the operation of the grant, and that indemnity could not be obtained for the lands thus lost—citing from the opinion of the court to show that such was its decision. The Secretary concluded by stating that in accordance with that rule the Company had already received 41,820.09 acres in excess of what it was entitled to, and instructed the commissioner to call upon the Company to relinquish its claim to that quantity of land, in order that it might be restored to the public domain. Repeated efforts were afterwards made by the agents of the Company to induce the Secretary of the Interior to change his views upon that point, but without success. Accordingly no selections of indemnity lands for lands lost from the grant within the place limits along the line of the constructed road known as section six were ever approved by him, and no patents of the United States were issued for such lands, or for any lands within the place limits along that section, until after this suit was commenced.

Having failed to secure any patent from the United States the plaintiff made application in February, 1884, to the State of Wisconsin for a patent, and, on the 25th of that month, a patent by the State was issued to it embracing the lands mentioned in the complaint. When application was thus made to the officials of the State, a careful examination was had by them of the selections in order to determine whether any of the parcels were swamp lands.

There was no controversy concerning the facts of the case, and the trial court found substantially as follows:

1. That the lands described in the complaint were all wild, unoccupied and unimproved and situated in the Town of Worcester in the County of Price, and were a portion of the lands granted to the State by the third section of the Act of Congress of May 5, 1864, for the purpose of constructing what is now the plaintiff's railroad.

2. That 11 forties of the land described were situated within the ten-mile limits of said grant, and all the rest within the indemnity limits, and all in odd-numbered sections.

3. That all of said lands were assessed in that town in 1888 and put on the tax-roll, and the amount of tax carried out against each respective piece, but were not assessed to the plaintiff by name, or to anyone else, or to "unknown owners," and that none of the real estate included in the assessment-roll for that year was assessed to the owners thereof; that a warrant was attached to said tax-roll, and the roll with said warrant attached placed in the hands of the town treasurer for collection; that the taxes were unpaid thereon, and the town treasurer returned the same to the county treasurer as delinquent.

4. That on the 25th of February, 1884, the plaintiff received a patent from the State for all said lands, and thereby acquired the absolute title in fee to the same; that until then the plaintiff could get no title to the lands and had no right to sell or convey the same; that until they were segregated and identified and the grant applied thereto, the grant was "a float."

5. That the plaintiff's right to the lands was in dispute between the State and the United States; that said lands and others were withheld from the State and the plaintiff by the Secretary of the Interior, and thereby the issue of patents therefor by the United States was delayed; that the plaintiff did not in any manner cause the delay, but, on the contrary, was diligent and persistent in its efforts to procure the patents; that the delay in their issue was caused entirely by the government of the United States and the General Land Office, against the protest of both the plaintiff and the State, and in spite of continued and unintermitted efforts made by both to obtain their issue by the Interior Department.

6. That the lands described had at the time the taxes were levied and assessed thereon in 1888 been selected as lands to which said land grant applied, but said selections had not been approved by the Secretary of the Interior and had not been certified to the State, or in any manner identified as lands for which the plaintiff would eventually receive patents, but, on the contrary, the Secretary of the Interior refused to recognize the right of the State to the lands or to approve the selections made.

As conclusions of law the court found, in effect:

1. That it was not the intent and meaning of the Act of Congress that said lands should be subject to taxation until they had been earned by the plaintiff and patented by the United States; that while they had been in truth earned by the plaintiff before they were assessed for taxation, yet the plaintiff's right to the same and to patents therefor had been denied by the Secretary of the Interior; that the plaintiff could not exercise control over them until it should be determined whether it was entitled to receive patents for them as part of the lands granted.

2. That the lands were "a float" as long as the plaintiff's right thereto was not admitted and recognized by the Secretary of the Interior, but denied and disputed by him and patents therefor withheld by him against the will and request of the plaintiff, and hence during such time the lands were not subject to taxation by the State.

3. That said lands were not subject to taxation in 1888, and that the taxes levied and assessed thereon for that year were illegal and void for the reason that said lands were then exempt from taxation.

4. That said tax was a cloud upon the plaintiff's title to said lands, and it was therefore entitled to the relief prayed for in the complaint.

Upon these findings judgment in favor of the plaintiff perpetually restraining the defendants from collecting said taxes was entered. The defendants appealed to the Supreme Court of the State, by which the judgment below was reversed, and the cause remanded to the circuit court with directions to dismiss the complaint. To review this latter judgment the cause is brought to this court on writ of error.

Messrs. Edwin H. Abbot, Louis D. Brandeis and Jeremiah Smith, for plaintiff in error:

A State has no power to tax the property of the United States within its borders.

Van Brocklin v. Tennessee, 117 U. S. 151 (29: 845).

All of the public domain within the State remains exempt from taxation, except so far as the United States has voluntarily parted with its title to the same, which act of segregation is ordinarily evidenced by the issue of a patent.

McGoon v. Scates, 78 U. S. 9 Wall. 23 (19: 545).

The only exception to this proposition is found in the rule that where the United States has by contract or statute undertaken to grant away its interest in any part of the public domain, and the land has been identified, all acts have been done to entitle the grantee to a conveyance, and his right thereto has been recognized by the United States, so that he is at liberty to enter upon the full enjoyment thereof, then the mere fact that there has been delay in the issue of a patent will not prevent the land from becoming taxable as property of the grantee.

Carroll v. Safford, 44 U. S. 8 How. 441, 460 (11: 671, 680); Witherspoon v. Duncan, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 210, 218, 219 (18: 389, 343); Astrom v. Hammond, 8 McLean, 107; Carroll v. Perry, 4 McLean, 25, 27; Coleman v. Peshtigo Lumber Co. 30 Fed. Rep. 817; Wallace v. Seymour, 7 Ohio, 156; Gwynne v. Niewanger, 15 Ohio, 367; S. C. 20 Ohio, 556; Mattheus v. Rector, 24 Ohio St. 439; Stockdale v. Webster County, 12 Iowa, 536; Iowa Homestead Co. v. Webster County, 21 Iowa, 221; Dubuque & P. R. Co. v. Webster County, 21 Iowa, 235; *Chicago, B. & Q. Unless the land be identified and thus segregated from the mass of public land, it will not be taxable, although the other conditions to the vesting of the right to it have been performed.

Unless every act made a condition to the perfect right to the land has been performed, the land will not be taxable, although the grantee have the full enjoyment of it, and the delay in the performance of the condition be attributable to him.

Kansas P. R. Co. v. Prescott, 88 U. S. 16 Wall. 603 (21:873); Union P. R. Co. v. McShane, 89 U. S. 22 Wall. 444 (22:747); Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Traill County, 115 U. Burlington & M. R. R. Co.* 5 Neb. 398; Elling v. Theuton, 7 Mont. 330; Musser v. McKee, 38 Minn. 409.

Unless the claimant's right to the land has remained undisputed and the beneficial enjoyment was undisturbed by the United States, the land was not taxable, although it be subsequently established that the full right in the claimant to the legal conveyance of the land by the government at all times existed.

The plaintiffs had such an interest in the land as to justify them in applying to a court of equity to prevent a sale for taxes.

Pike v. Wassell, 94 U. S. 711, 715 (24:307, 310).

The tax proceedings not being void upon their face, the facts present a proper case for the application of the doctrine of removal of clouds upon title.

The indemnity lands were exempt from taxation because their selection was not approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Messrs. Willis Hand, M. Barry and J. C. Spooner, for defendants in error:

The Act of Congress was a grant in praesenti, passing the equitable title to all the lands within the granted limits immediately to the State of Wisconsin. The legal title remained in the United States, to be conveyed by patent to the beneficiary of the grant whenever the terms of the Granting Acts should be fully complied with.

Mr. Justice Field delivered the opinion of the court:

It is familiar law that a State has no power to tax the property of the United States within its limits. This exemption of their property from state taxation—and by state taxation we mean any taxation by authority of the State, whether it be strictly for state purposes or for mere local and special objects—is founded upon that principle which inheres in every independent government, that it must be free from any such interference of another government as may tend to destroy its powers or impair their efficiency. If the property of the United States could be subjected to taxation by the State, the object and extent of the taxation would be subject to the State's discretion. It might extend to buildings and other property essential to the discharge of the ordinary business of the national government, and in the enforcement of the tax those buildings might be taken from the possession and use of the United States. The Constitution vests in Congress the power "to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States." And this implies an exclusion of all other authority over the property which could interfere with this right or obstruct its exercise. Van Brocklin v. Tennessee, 117 U. S. 151, 168 [29: 845, 851].

This doctrine of exemption from taxation of the property of the United States, so far as lands are concerned, is in express terms affirmed in the Constitution of Wisconsin, which ordains that the State "shall never interfere with the primary disposition of the soil within the same by the United States, nor with any regulations Congress may find necessary for securing the title in such soil to bona fide purchasers thereof, and no tax shall be imposed on land the property of the United States." (Constitution of 1848, art. II. sec. 2.)

It follows that all the public domain of the United States within the State of Wisconsin was in 1883 exempt from state taxation. Usually the possession of the legal title by the government determines both the fact and the right of ownership. There is, however, an exception to this doctrine with respect to the public domain, which is as well settled as the doctrine itself, and that is that, where Congress has prescribed the conditions upon which portions of that domain may be alienated, and provided that upon the performance of the conditions a patent of the United States shall issue to the donee or purchaser, and all such conditions are complied with, the land alienated being distinctly defined, it only remaining for the government to issue its patent, and until such issue holding the legal title in trust for him, who in the meantime is not excluded from the use of the property—in other words, when the government has ceased to hold any such right or interest in the property as to justify it in withholding a patent from the donee or purchaser, and it does not exclude him from the use of the property—then the donee or purchaser will be treated as the beneficial owner of the land, and the same be held subject to taxation as his property. This exception to the general doctrine is founded upon the principle that he who has the right to property and is not excluded from its enjoyment, shall not be permitted to use the legal title of the government to avoid his just share of state taxation.

Thus, in Carroll v. Safford, 44 U. S. 8 How. 441, 460 [11: 671, 680], the complainant had entered certain lands belonging to the United States in the local land office, paid for them the required price, and received from the office a land certificate. Patents were issued for them, but, before their issue, the lands were assessed for taxation and sold for the taxes. The question whether they were subject to taxation by the State after their entry and before the patents were issued was answered in the affirmative. Said the court: "When the land was purchased and paid for, it was no longer the property of the United States, but of the purchaser. He held for it a final certificate, which could no more be canceled by the United States than a patent;" and again: "It is said the fee is not in the purchaser, but in the United States, until the patent shall be issued. This is so, technically, at law, but not in equity. The land in the hands of the purchaser is real estate, descends to his heirs, and does not go to his executors or administrators;" and again: "Lands which have been sold by the United States can in no sense be called the property of the United States. They are no more the property of the United States than lands patented. So far as the rights of the purchaser are considered, they are protected under the patent-certificate as fully as under the patent. Suppose the officers of the government had sold a tract of land, received the purchase money, and issued a patent-certificate; can it be contended that they could sell it again, and convey a good title? They could no more do this than they could sell land a second time which had been previously patented. When sold, the government, until the patent shall issue, holds the mere legal title for the land in trust for the purchaser; and any second purchaser would take the land charged with the trust."

In Witherspoon v. Duncan, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 210, 218 [18: 339, 342], a similar question arose and was in like manner answered. Said the court: "In no just sense can lands be said to be public lands after they have been entered at the land office and a certificate of entry obtained. If public lands before the entry, after it they are private property. If subject to sale, the government has no power to revoke the entry and withhold the patent. A second sale, if the first was authorized by law, confers no right on the buyer, and is a void act;" and again: "The contract of purchase is complete when the certificate of entry is executed and delivered, and thereafter the land ceases to be a part of the public domain. The government agrees to make proper conveyance as soon as it can, and in the mean time holds the naked legal fee in trust for the purchaser, who has the equitable title." See also Kansas P. Railway Co. v. Prescott, 83 U. S. 16 Wall. 603, 608 [21: 378, 374]; Union P. Railway Co. v. McShane, 89 U. S. 22 Wall. 444, 461 [22: 747, 751].

In the light of these decisions, it will be necessary, in order to determine the liability of the property held by the plaintiff to taxation in 1888, to consider the nature and extent of its interest in the property at that time acquired under the grant of Congress of May, 1864, and by its subsequent construction of the road.

Numerous grants of land were made by Congress between 1860 and 1880 to aid in the construction of railroads; some directly to incorporated companies, others to different States, the lands to be by them transferred to companies by whom the construction of the roads might be undertaken. The different Acts making these grants were similar in their general provisions, and so many of them have been, at different times, before this court for consideration, that little can be said of their purport and meaning, the title they transfer, and the conditions upon which the lands could be used and disposed of, which has not already and repeatedly been said in its decisions. Each grant gave a specified quantity of lands, designated by sections along the route of the proposed road, with the exception of such as might, when the line of the road should be definitely fixed, have been disposed of or reserved by the government, or to which a pre-emption or homestead right might then have attached. For these excepted sections, which otherwise would have been taken from those designated along the line of the road, other lands beyond those sections within a specified distance were allowed to be selected. The title conferred was a present one, so as to insure the donation for the construction of the road proposed against any revocation by Congress, except for nonperformance of the work within the period designated, accompanied, however, with such restrictions upon the use and disposal of the lands as to prevent their diversion from the purposes of the grant. It was the practice of the Land Department, as shown by the evidence in this record, up to the decision of Leavenworth, Lawrence & Galveston Railroad Co. v. United States, in April, 1876, 92 U. S. 733 [23: 634], to allow deficiencies in the quantity of land intended to be granted, arising from sales or other disposition made before the date of the grant, as well as those made subsequently, and those arising from the attachment of pre-emption or homestead rights, to be supplied from lands lying beyond the original sections, within what were termed the indemnity limits. This practice was held, in Winona & St. Peter R. Co. v. Barney, to have been correct. (113 U. S. 618, 625 [28: 1109, 1111].) As the court there said, "the policy of the government was to keep the public lands open at all times to sale and pre-emption, and thus encourage the settlement of the country, and, at the same time, to advance such settlement by liberal donations to aid in the construction of railways. The Acts of Congress, in effect, said: 'We give to the State certain lands to aid in the construction of railways, lying along their respective routes, provided they are not already disposed of, or the rights of settlers under the laws of the United States have not already attached to them or they may not be disposed of or such rights may not have attached when the routes are finally determined. If at that time it be found that of the lands designated any have been disposed of, or rights of settlers have attached to them, other equivalent lands may be selected in their place, within certain prescribed limits.' The encouragement to settlement by aid for the construction of railways was not intended to interfere with the policy of encouraging such settlement by sales of the land, or the grant of pre-emption rights." The court accordingly held that the indemnity clause covered losses from the grant by reason of sales and the attachment of pre-emption rights previous to the date of the Act, as well as by reason of sales and the attachment of pre-emption rights between that date and the final determination of the route of the road.

After the decision of the court in the Leavenworth Case the Land Department changed its practice and refused to allow the deficiencies, arising from sales or other disposition made or from the attachment of pre-emption or homestead rights before the date of the Act, to be made up from selections within the indemnity limits. But that decision did not warrant the change. The question in that case was not, for what deficiencies indemnity could be had, but what lands could be taken for deficiencies which existed. If what was then said indicated that deficiencies which could be supplied were limited to such as might arise after the passage of the Act, it was a mere dictum not essential to the decision, and therefore not authoritative and binding. The refusal of the Land Department, therefore, to allow the deficiencies arising in the sections within the place limits in this case to be supplied by selections from the indemnity lands, and to issue patents of the United States for them, was erroneous.

The question now arises as to how far this refusal affected the legal or equitable title of the Company to the lands taxed in 1883, for which it only obtained a patent in 1884. The lands taxed amounted to eleven parcels of forty acres each lying within the original sections named in the grant, that is, within the ten-miles limit from the line of the road, and the remainder were within the indemnity limits. Neither were allowed, because, by excluding the deficiencies arising before the date of the grant from indemnity, the whole amount of the lands granted had already been patented. So far as the eleven parcels of forty acres each are concerned, the right of the plaintiff to them and to a patent for them had as early as 1877 become complete under the terms of the Granting Act. The line of the railroad had been definitely fixed on the 7th of October, 1869; and the three twenty-mile sections, numbers five, six and seven, were all completed in June, 1877, and supplied with the buildings and appurtenances specified in the Act to entitle the Company to a patent for them from the United States. The title conferred by the grant was necessarily an imperfect one, because, until the lands were identified by the definite location of the road, it could not be known what specific lands would be embraced in the sections named. The grant was therefore, until such location, a float. But when the route of the road was definitely fixed, the sections granted became susceptible of identification, and the title attached to them and took effect as of the date of the grant, so as to cut off all intervening claims. Schulenberg v. Harriman, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 44, 60 [22: 551, 554]; Leavenworth, Lawrence & Galveston R. Co. v. United States, 92 U. S. 733, 741 [23: 684, 687]; Missouri, Kansas & Texas R. Co. v. Kansas Pacific R. Co. 97 U. S. 491, 496 [24: 1095, 1096]; St. Joseph & Denver City R. Co. v. Baldwin, 103 U. S. 426, 429 [26: 578, 579]. The road having been built as early as June, 1877, and supplied, as required, with the appurtenances specified, the Company was entitled to have the restrictions upon the use of the land released. It had then, to the eleven forty-acre parcels which were capable of identification, an indefeasible right or title; it matters not which term be used. The subsequent issue of the patents by the United States was not essential to the right of the Company to those parcels, although in many respects they would have been of great service to it. They would have served to identify the lands as co-terminous with the road completed; they would have been evidence that the grantee had complied with the conditions of the grant, and to that extent that the grant was relieved of possibility of forfeiture for breach of them; they would have obviated the necessity of any other evidence of the grantee's right to the lands; and they would have been evidence that the lands were subject to the disposal of the Railroad Company with the consent of the government. They would have been in these respects deeds of further assurance of the patentee's title, and therefore a source of quiet and peace to it in its possessions.

There are many instances in the Reports where such effect as is here stated has been given to patents authorized or directed to be issued to parties, notwithstanding they had previously received a legislative grant of the premises, or their title had been already confirmed. In Langdeau v. Hanes, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 521, 529 [22: 606, 608], we have one of that kind. There this court said: "In the legislation of Congress a patent has a double operation. It is a conveyance by the government, when the government has any interest to convey; but where it is issued upon the confirmation of a claim of a previously-existing title, it is documentary evidence, having the dignity of a record, of the existence of that title, or of such equities respecting the claim as justify its recognition and confirmation. The instrument is not the less efficacious as evidence of previously-existing rights because it also embodies words of release or transfer from the government." We are of opinion, therefore, that these eleven forty-acre parcels were in 1883 subject to taxation by the State of Wisconsin. The lands had become the property of the Railroad Company, and there was nothing to hinder their use and enjoyment. For that purpose it is immaterial whether it be held that the Company then had a legal and indefeasible title to the lands, or merely an equitable title to them to be subsequently perfected by patents from the government.

But as to the remainder of the lands taxed, which fell within the indemnity limits, the case is different. For such lands no title could pass to the Company, not only until the selections were made by the agents of the State appointed by the governor, but until such selections were approved by the Secretary of the Interior. The agent of the State made the selections, and they had been properly authenticated and forwarded to the Secretary of the Interior. But that officer never approved of them. Nor can such approval be inferred from his not formally rejecting them. He refused, as already stated, to issue to the Company any patents for any more lands, insisting that it had already received over 40,000 acres too much, and he directed the commissioner of the General Land Office to require the Company to restore this excess to the government. The approval of the Secretary was essential to the efficacy of the selections, and to give to the Company any title to the lands selected. His action in that matter was not ministerial but judicial. He was required to determine, in the first place, whether there were any deficiencies in the land granted to the Company which were to be supplied from indemnity lands; and, in the second place, whether the particular indemnity lands selected could be properly taken for those deficiencies. In order to reach a proper conclusion on these two questions he had also to inquire and determine whether any lands in the place limits had been previously disposed of by the government, or whether any pre-emption or homestead rights had attached before the line of the road was definitely fixed. There could be no indemnity unless a loss was established. And in determining whether a particular selection could be taken as indemnity for the losses sustained, he was obliged to inquire into the condition of those indemnity lands, and determine whether or not any portion of them had been appropriated for any other purpose, and, if so, what portion had been thus appropriated, and what portion still remained. This action of the Secretary was required, not merely as supervisory of the action of the agent of the State, but for the protection of the United States against an improper appropriation of their lands. Until the selections were approved there were no selections in fact, only preliminary proceedings taken for that purpose; and the indemnity lands remained unaffected in their title. Until then, the lands which might be taken as indemnity were incapable of identification; the proposed selections remained the property of the United States. The government was, indeed, under a promise to give the Company indemnity lands in lieu of what might be lost by the causes mentioned. But such promise passed no title, and, until it was executed, created no legal interest which could be enforced in the courts. The doctrine, that until selection made no title vests in any indemnity lands, has been recognized in several decisions of this court. Thus in Ryan v. Pacific R. Co. 99 U. S. 382, 386 [25: 305, 306], in considering a grant of land by Congress, in aid of the construction of a railroad, similar in its general features to the one in this case, the court said: "Under this Statute, when the road was located and the maps were made, the right of the company to the odd sections first named became ipso facto fixed and absolute. With respect to the 'lieu lands,' as they are called, the right was only a float, and attached to no specific tracts until the selection was actually made in the manner prescribed." And again, speaking of a deficiency in the land granted, it said: "It was within the secondary or indemnity territory where that deficiency was to be supplied. The railroad company had not and could not have any claim to it until specially selected, as it was, for that purpose." The selection had been approved by the Secretary.

In St. Paul & S. C. R. Co. v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. 112 U. S. 720, 731 [28: 872, 876], the court, speaking of a previous decision, said: "The reason of this is that, as no vested right can attach to the lands in place—the odd-numbered sections within six miles of each side of the road—until these sections are ascertained and identified by a legal location of the line of the road, so in regard to the lands to be selected within a still larger limit, their identification cannot be known until the selection is made. It may be a long time after the line of the road is located before it is ascertained how many sections, or parts of sections, within the primary limits have been lost by sale or pre-emption. It may be still longer before a selection is made to supply this loss."

In Sioux City & St. P. R. Co. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 117 U. S. 408, 408 [29: 928, 929], where the railroad grant as to indemnity lands was substantially similar to the one in this case, and one of the questions was as to the title to the indemnity lands, the court said: "No title to indemnity lands was vested until a selection was made by which they were pointed out and ascertained, and the selection made approved by the Secretary of the Interior."

In Barney v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. 117 U. S. 223, 232 [29: 852, 860], the court said: "In the construction of Land-Grant Acts, in aid of railroads, there is a well-established distinction observed between 'granted lands' and 'indemnity lands.' The former are those falling within the limits specially designated, and the title to which attaches when the lands are located by an approved and accepted survey of the line of the road filed in the Land Department, as of the date of the Act of Congress. The latter are those lands selected in lieu of parcels lost by previous disposition or reservation for other purposes, and the title to which accrues only from the time of their selection."

The same view has been held by different Attorney-Generals of the United States, in their official communications to heads of the departments, where selections of the public lands have been granted, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior (Cape Mendocino Lighthouse Site, 14 Ops. Atty-Gen. 50; Portage Land Grant, Id. 645), and such has been the consistent practice of the Land Department. The uniform language is, that no title to indemnity lands becomes vested in any company or in the State until the selections are made; and they are not considered as made until they have been approved, as provided by statute, by the Secretary of the Interior.

It follows from these views that the indemnity lands described in the complaint were not subject to taxation as the property of the Railroad Company in 1883. The judgment of the Supreme Court of Wisconsin must therefore be reversed, and the cause remanded with directions to enter a decree perpetually enjoining the collection of the taxes levied in the year 1883 upon the indemnity lands, and dismissing the complaint as to the eleven parcels of forty acres each; and it is so ordered.

Fraudulent conveyances—decisions of state court—Virginia law—assignment, construction of—void in part—bidding on property—previous acts of assignors—shareholder of national bank—confusion of property—right of party—doctrine of election—rights of bank under assignment—notice to trustees.

1. In controversies arising under the Statute of Elizabeth against fraudulent conveyances, involving, as they do, the rights of creditors locally, and a rule of property, this court accepts the conclusions of the highest judicial tribunal of the State as controlling.

2. In Virginia, provisions in a deed of trust are not sufficient to justify the inference of a fraudulent intent, except where the inference is so absolutely irresistible as to preclude indulgence in any other.
3. An assignment which includes all the property of the grantors as partners and individually, for the benefit of partnership and individual creditors, should be construed distributively, and the partnership assets be applied to the payment of partnership debts and the individual assets to individual liabilities.
4. As respects fraud in law, where that which is valid in an assignment can be separated from that which is invalid, without defeating the general intent, the maxim, "void in part, void in toto," does not necessarily apply, and the instrument may be sustained notwithstanding the invalidity of a particular division.
5. Fraudulent intent is not a necessary deduction from the permission to the creditors in the second class to avail themselves of their claims in bidding on property sold at auction.

NOTE.—Confusion of goods.

The rule that he who produces a confusion of goods shall lose his own is carried no further than necessity requires. When the articles can be easily distinguished and separated, no change of property takes place, but the burden is on the guilty party to distinguish his property or lose it. Queen v. Wernwag, 97 N. C. 383.

One who willfully places the property of another in the situation where it cannot be recovered or its true amount or value ascertained, by mixing it with his own, or in any other manner, will be compelled to surrender the whole if his share cannot be distinguished, or respond in damages for the property. Little Pittsburgh Con. Min. Co. v. Little Chief Con. Min. Co. 11 Colo. 223.

Where the owner of goods wrongfully mixes them with another's, so that they cannot be identified and separated, he thereby relinquishes them to the other, and is entitled to no part of the intermixture. For he can derive no advantage from his own wrong, and the party without fault is under no duty to surrender any of his goods to prevent loss to the tort-feasor. The Idaho, 93 U. S. 575, 585 (23: 978, 981); Ryder v. Hathaway, 21 Pick. 298; Hart v. Ten Eyck, 2 Johns. Ch. 62; Stearns v. Herrick, 132 Mass. 114; Adams v. Wildes, 107 Mass. 123; Beach v. Schmultz, 20 Ill. 185; Brackenridge v. Holland, 2 Blackf. 377; Lehman v. Kelly, 68 Ala. 192; Seavy v. Dearborn, 19 N. H. 351; Robinson v. Holt, 29 N. H. 557; Brakeley v. Tuttle, 3 W. Va. 86; Ward v. Eires, 1 Rolle, 133; Weil v. Silverstone, 6 Bush, 696; Sims v. Glazener, 14 Ala. 695.

But where the goods are distinguishable or the intermingling occurred without the owner's fraud or fault, he will be protected in such way as the circumstances permit. Thus, if the logs of two owners become innocently intermingled past identification, each may have his proportion of the lumber they produce. Goff v. Brainerd, 2 New Eng. 6. The violation by the assignors of their fiduciary relations to the bank, of which they were officers, or their treatment of the depositors in the banking firm of which they were members, does not render the assignment of all their property for the benefit of their creditors therefore fraudulent.
7. A shareholder of a national bank cannot transfer his shares when the corporation is failing, or manipulate a release therefrom so as to escape his individual liability for its debts; but the existence of this liability does not prevent assignors from a lawful disposition of their property for the benefit of their creditors.
8. Confusion of property does not destroy the equity to follow misapplied property, but converts it into a charge upon the entire mass, giving to the party injured by the unlawful diversion a priority of right over the other creditors of the possessor.
9. Purchases made and paid for out of the general mass cannot be claimed by the bank, unless it is shown that its own moneys then in the fund were appropriated for that purpose.
10. The doctrine of election means that where two inconsistent rights are presented to the choice of a party, by a person who manifests the clear intention that he should not enjoy both, he must accept or reject one or the other; and so one cannot take a benefit under an instrument and then repudiate it.
11. Creditors have no equity which can estop the bank from receiving what may come to it under the assignment, and in doing so it will not occupy inconsistent positions. That it sought to have the deed set aside does not deprive it of its rights under it, upon the failure of its attack.
12. While, in Virginia, the trustees and beneficiaries in a deed of trust to secure bona fide debts occupy the position of purchasers for a valuable consideration, yet they cannot hold with notice of the fraudulent intent of their grantor, or of the fraud rendering his title void; and notice to the trustees is notice to the beneficiaries. The trustees are chargeable with a knowledge of all the facts that inquiry would have disclosed.

Argued Nov. 7, 8, 1889. Decided March 3, 1890.

APPEALS from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Virginia refusing to set aside a deed of assignment as fraudulent and void and decreeing that the receiver of the bank is entitled to the property in the hands of the assignee paid for with moneys of the bank. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

These are appeals from a final decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Virginia, entered on the fifteenth day of June, 1886, upon a bill in equity brought by William H. Peters, receiver of the Exchange National Bank of Norfolk, against Robert T. K. Bain, George M. Bain, Jr., and James G. Bain, late partners under the name and style of Bain & Brother, survivors of themselves and Thomas A. Bain, deceased; and John T. Griffin, William W. Old and John B. Jenkins, trustees under a deed of assignment from Bain & Brother; and upon a cross bill filed by said trustees. The cause, after being brought to issue, was referred to a special master, who took evidence and reported thereon, and was heard by Mr. Chief Justice Waite and the circuit judge.

The opinion of the court was delivered by the chief justice, and is as follows:

"This is a suit in equity begun by the receiver of the Exchange National Bank of Norfolk, an insolvent national bank, for a two-fold purpose, that is to say: (1) to set aside an assignment made by the partnership firm of Bain & Bro. and the several members thereof for the benefit of their creditors, and to subject the assigned property to the payment of debts due the bank; and (2) to charge property in the hands of the assignees with the trust in favor of the bank because it was bought with moneys of the bank, which certain members of the firm, who were officers of the bank, had wrongfully used for that purpose.

"The material facts are these: The Exchange National Bank was organized May 18, 1865, with a capital of $100,000, which was increased November 13, 1866, to $150,000. Its place of business was Norfolk, Va.

"The firm of Bain & Bro., composed originally of R. T. K. and James G. Bain, began business in Portsmouth, Va., as brokers and private bankers in September, 1865, with an assumed capital of $5,000, placed to the credit of the two partners on the books. George M. Bain, Jr., was admitted as a partner soon after the business was started and Thomas A. Bain in 1868 or 1869, but he died in 1877. The capital was never increased, but, on the contrary, the drafts of the partners soon exhausted the original credits and much more besides. At the time of the failure the balances against the partners respectively were as follows:

"James G. Bain.....	$54,796 73
"R. T. K. Bain.....	47,369 23
"George M. Bain, Jr.....	7,146 39
"Thomas A. Bain's estate.....	20,028 41

"In all..... $129,340 76

"Portsmouth is separated from Norfolk by the Elizabeth River, one place being on one side of the river and the other immediately opposite on the other. On the 7th of July, 1870, the firm became shareholders in the bank, and the next day George M. Bain, Jr., was elected cashier. This office he held until April 2d, 1885. R. T. K. Bain was elected a director January 2, 1872, and he served in that capacity all the time thereafter during the existence of the bank. James G. Bain was elected assistant cashier August 11, 1873, and he held that office until January 11, 1881, when he was made vice-president, in which capacity he acted until the end. Thomas A. Bain was elected a director January 11, 1876, and this office he held until his death.

"On the 9th of September, 1873, the capital stock of the bank was increased from $150,000 to $200,000. The names of the subscribers are not given and no money was paid on that day, but the whole amount of $50,000 was carried in the receiving teller's cash as a cash item until October 14, 1873, when the following parties gave their checks on the bank for the following amounts:

"Bain & Bro.....	$25,000
"John B. Whitehead.....	15,000
"James H. Toomer.....	5,000
"George M. Bain, Jr.....	5,000

"In all..... $50,000

"Certificates of stock were issued to these parties, respectively, for the shares represented by their several checks. On the 10th of May, 1874, the stock was increased to $300,000, R. H. McDonald, of California, taking and paying for the whole of the additional amount.

"At the time of the failure of the bank the following persons held shares as follows:

"Bain & Bro.....	582 shares-
"George M. Bain, Jr.....	232 do.
"James G. Bain.....	91 do.
"R. T. K. Bain.....	91 do.
"Thomas A. Bain's estate.....	91 do.
"George M. Bain, Jr., and John B. White-head.....	100 do.

"In all.....1,187 do.

"Very soon after Bain & Bro. became connected with the bank they began to absorb its funds. As they wanted money they got it with or without security, as was most convenient for them. They had no direct connection in their own private banking business with the bankers' clearing-house at Norfolk, but they were represented in that association by the Exchange Bank, which paid all balances against them, and these at some times amounted to very large sums. The commercial and business paper which they took at their banking-house in Portsmouth was largely rediscounted for them at the bank, and on the 31st of March, 1885, their indebtedness to the bank has been stated approximately as follows:

"Bain & Bro's notes, etc., undorsored and unsecured.....	$300,000 00
"Notes of others indorsed by them.....	593,251 99
"Cash tickets.....	211 00
"Bain & Bro's notes indorsed by bank and discounted in New York.....	50,000 00

"In all.....$1,443,462 99

"In addition to this George M. Bain, Jr., and James G. Bain each owed the bank very considerable sums. Such being the condition of affairs, the comptroller of the currency required the bank to reduce at once the unsecured debt of Bain & Bro. and to make good the deficiency in its reserve fund. In consequence of this the firm on the 31st of March sold to the bank the following stocks and bonds:

"Seaboard Compress Company stocks.....	$300,000
"Meherrin Valley Railroad bonds.....	200,000
"Southern Telegraph bonds, of the par value of $140,000, at.....	70,000

"In all.....$570,000

—and guaranteed that the same should yield the amount for which they were taken whenever put on the market and sold. This guarantee was secured by a transfer of the interest of the firm in the Richmond Cedar Works, and also in $80,000 of Southern Telegraph bonds held as collateral security. This being done, and the firm also agreeing not to assign their other property for the benefit of creditors with preferences against the bank, notes of the firm and other indebtedness to the amount agreed on as the value of the stocks and bonds were surrendered and the unsecured debt thereby nominally reduced. While some of the stocks and bonds thus transferred had been before that time in the possession of the bank or some of its officers, the evidence does not establish the fact that they had been in any way pledged, or that they could be legally held by the bank as security. They were all, so far as appears, the property of the firm, free of any specific claim of the bank. The value of the stocks and bonds thus transferred falls between two and three hundred thousand dollars short of the amount for which they were taken, and the Richmond Cedar Works stock and Southern Telegraph bonds, held as collateral to the guaranty against this deficiency, are of but little value.

"What was thus done did not satisfy the comptroller, and on the 2d of April, 1885, he took possession of the bank for the purpose of winding up its affairs. The banking-house in Portsmouth closed its doors at the same time. This produced great excitement both in Portsmouth and Norfolk, and resulted in the assignment which is now attacked. Mr. Old, one of the assignees, is an attorney-at-law, and was retained as counsel for the firm. He advised them in all their matters and drafted the assignment. He was informed of the agreement which had been made not to assign with preferences against the bank, and knew generally of the large indebtedness of the firm and of its members to the bank. He also knew of the transaction between the bank and the firm on the 31st of March, and, hearing that it was the intention of the creditors of the bank to enjoin the assignment, he made haste to have it executed and recorded before anything of that kind was done.

"The actual value of the property which passed by the assignment does not exceed five hundred thousand dollars. The property consists very largely of real estate in Portsmouth and Norfolk County, the title to most of which was in R. T. K. Bain. The books of the firm are entirely unreliable. In fact, no general ledger was ever kept, and transactions to enormous amounts can only be traced by memoranda on slips of paper with the help of the explanations of R. T. K. Bain, who was the principal manager. No accounts at all were kept with the bank, and everything, so far as Bain & Bro. were concerned, was found in the greatest confusion.

"After the death of Thomas A. Bain the business of the firm was conducted in all respects as it had been before. The indebtedness of the firm to depositors and otherwise at the time of the failure has not been accurately determined, but claims of depositors have already been proved against the trust to more than $750,000, and it is not unlikely that the entire indebtedness, other than that to the bank, may approach a million of dollars.

"The money received by the firm from the bank was generally mingled with that which was got from other sources, and it has been impossible to trace it directly into property now in the hands of the assignees, except in the following cases:

"Real Estate.

"1. Inventory No. 22, bought May, 1876.....	$650 00

"1. As to the trust resulting to the bank by reason of the wrongful and unlawful use of its funds by its officers in the purchase of property for the firm or the several members thereof, this branch of the case divides itself into two parts, the first relating to property which was purchased with moneys that can be identified as belonging to the bank; and, second, to that which was bought and paid for by the firm out of the general mass of moneys in their possession, and which may or may not have been made up in part of what had been wrongfully taken from the bank.

"As to the first of these classes of property we entertain no doubt that the trust exists, and that it may be enforced by the receiver unless the assignees of Bain & Bro. occupy the position of bona fide purchasers for a valuable consideration without notice. The evidence shows beyond doubt that the affairs of the bank were managed almost exclusively by the members of the firm. The funds of the bank were under the immediate control of its officers and agents, and consequently as its trustees. These funds were converted by them, regardless of their duty as trustees, into this particular property, which still exists in specie. No money was used in these purchases other than such as was taken directly from the bank for that purpose. Under these circumstances the property stands in the place of the money used, and it might have been reclaimed by the bank at its election any time before the rights of innocent third parties intervened. This is elementary. The receiver succeeded to the rights of the bank in this particular.

"The property in the second class, however, occupies a different position. There the purchases were made with moneys that cannot be identified as belonging to the bank. The payments were all, so far as now appears, from the general fund then in the possession and under the control of the firm. Some of the money of the bank may have gone into this fund, but it was not distinguishable from the rest. The mixture of the money of the bank with the money of the firm did not make the bank the owner of the whole. All the bank could in any event claim would be the right to draw out of the general mass of money, so long as it remained money, an amount equal to that which had been wrongfully taken from its own possession and put there. Purchases made and paid for out of the general mass cannot be claimed by the bank, unless it is shown that its own moneys then in the fund were appropriated for that purpose. Nothing of the kind has been attempted here, and it has not even been shown that when the property in this class was purchased the firm had in its possession any of the moneys of the bank that could be reclaimed in specie. To give a cestui que trust the benefit of purchases by his trustees, it must be satisfactorily shown that they were actually made with the trust funds.

"In Virginia an assignee for the benefit of creditors is deemed a purchaser for a valuable consideration. This, it is conceded, has been established by a long line of judicial decisions, and is now a rule of property in that State. As such it is binding on us as authority, but we think in this case the assignees are chargeable with notice of the equities of the bank. They may not have had actual knowledge of the wrongful conversion of the moneys of the bank into the property which has now been identified as such, but it is clear that Mr. Old, who alone of the assignees was present during the negotiations which preceded the assignment, had full notice of the confusion which existed in the affairs of the bank, as well as those of the firm, and of the intimate relations which for a long time existed between the two institutions. The assignment was hastened to prevent further complications, and we have no hesitation in holding that the assignees took title subject to any equities that might be found to exist in favor of the bank. They were put on inquiry, which they avoided to save what they could. Under these circumstances we hold that the receiver is entitled to a surrender by the assignees of such of the property which it is found had actually been purchased with the moneys of the bank as he elects to take, but of no other.

"2. As to the assignment. By a Statute of Virginia a creditor may file a bill to set aside a conveyance by his debtor on the ground of fraud without having first obtained a judgment. This suit was therefore properly brought. We find no evidence whatever of any actual fraudulent intent on the part of the firm, or either of the partners, to hinder and delay their creditors. They devoted all their property, partnership and individual, of every kind, to the payment of their debts. Nothing whatever was kept back. It is true some creditors were preferred over others, but this is allowable in Virginia. From the case of Skipwith v. Cunningham, 8 Leigh, 271, decided in 1837, until now such has been the recognized law of the State, and this was conceded in the argument.

"It is a matter of no importance in this connection that the debt to the bank was created by fraud or that the assignors were shareholders in the bank and liable as such to assessments by the comptroller of the currency to meet its debts. Fraud in the creation of an unpreferred debt is not ground for setting aside an assignment for the benefit of creditors which is otherwise valid, and the shareholder of an insolvent bank is no more prohibited from preferring creditors as against his liability in that capacity than he is as against anyone else that he owes. The assignment does not in any respect change the liability of the shareholders; that was fixed on the failure of the bank before the transfer was made. As has already been shown, so much of the property assigned as is charged with a trust in favor of the bank can be reached in the hands of the assignees. The promise not to assign with preferences against the bank does not of itself avoid such an assignment for fraud.

"It is claimed, however, that the deed is fraudulent and void on its face—(1) because it appropriates partnership assets to the payment of individual debts in preference to the debts of the partnership; and (2) because of the peculiar provision which is made for bidding by the creditors of the second class at any public sale that may be made of the assigned property.

"As to the first of these objections it is sufficient to say that as early as 1837 the Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia decided, in the case of McCullough v. Sommerville, 8 Leigh, 418, that a provision like that contained in this deed did not vitiate the assignment, but that a court of equity would, if required, so control the administration of the trust as to apply the partnership property to the payment of the partnership debts in preference to those of the individual partners, and the individual property to individual debts. This ruling was followed in Gordon v. Cannon, 18 Gratt. 887, decided in 1868, and its authority was recognized by all the judges, though there was some difference of opinion as to its applicability to the particular facts of the latter case. We see no reason to depart from what seems now to be the recognized rule of decision in the State, and we have no hesitation in saying that if there ever can be a case where such an assignment ought to be sustained it should be in this.

"The evidence discloses such a mingling of partnership and individual assets, and of partnership and individual debts, as to make it difficult in some cases to separate the one from the other. After a long and careful investigation of the whole matter, a separation may now have been made which approximates correctness, but when the assignment was made it is not probable that this could easily have been done. All the property, including that of the firm and that belonging to the several partners individually, has been put into the trust, and in the administration may, if necessary, be so marshalled as to prevent the creditors of the individual partners from getting an illegal advantage over those of the partnership, and vice versa; at any rate, we find nothing which, under the circumstances of this case, viewed in the light of the decisions of the highest court of Virginia, will render the whole assignment fraudulent and void as to the bank, and subject the property to the payment of its debt in preference to all others, as it is claimed should be done.

"It will be time enough to consider in what way the trust ought to be administered when a case is made for that purpose.

"This brings us to the consideration of the bidding clause of which complaint is made, and as to this it may be said there is no provision which can in any manner result to the advantage of the assignors in opposition to the creditors, for until the creditors are all paid in full the assignors can get nothing. If payment is made, it matters not to the creditors how it is done. In no event can any but the first and second class creditors be affected injuriously, and they are not here complaining. Although the bank is named as a creditor in each of the classes, the object of the present suit is not to control the administration of this branch of the trust, but to set aside the assignment altogether.

"The only question we have now to consider, therefore, is whether this particular provision is fatal to the whole assignment. There is nothing whatever in the instrument to show that if it had been supposed this direction to the assignees could not legally be followed, the assignment would not have been made in its present form with this provision left out. On the contrary, everything looks the other way, for the assignees are authorized to sell at either public or private sale, according to their discretion, and it is only when the sale is public that the bidding clause becomes operative. The evident purpose was to stimulate bidding, not to give one creditor an unconscionable preference over another, nor to secure any special advantage to the assignors. It is not such an essential part of the scheme of the trust as to make it vital.

"At most it is a mere appendage which may be lopped off without injury to the main purpose of the instrument. Its only effect, so far as the deferred creditors are concerned, must be for their advantage, because the more the property sells for the greater will be the chances of paying those preferred in full and leaving something for those who are unpreferred.

"No creditor can have an assignment for the benefit of creditors set aside at his suit, except it be on the ground that he has been defrauded. If this particular provision operates as a fraud upon those who are affected by it, relief can undoubtedly be had in some appropriate proceeding for that purpose, but that is not, as has been seen, the purpose of the present suit.

"Our conclusion is that the assignment is valid, but that the receiver is entitled to the surrender to him by the assignees of such of the property in their hands bought and paid for with the moneys of the bank as he elects to take."

A decree in accordance with the opinion was thereupon entered, and from it the receiver and the trustees respectively appealed.

The receiver assigns errors as follows: That the court erred (1) in refusing to set aside the deed of assignment of Bain & Bro. as fraudulent in fact; (2) in failing to declare the assignment void because executed in fraud of sections 5151 and 5234 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; (3) in holding that the receiver was entitled "to a surrender by the assignees of such of the property which it is found had actually been purchased with the moneys of the bank, but of no other;" (4) in holding that the assignment "was made and executed without any actual fraudulent intent on the part of the said grantors or either of them to hinder and delay their creditors;" (5) in holding "that the said deed of assignment is not fraudulent and void on its face."

The trustees assign as error that the court erred (1) in finding that the trustees were to be considered as affected by constructive notice, as to certain of the property held by them, that it had been purchased with the money of the bank, and that the receiver was entitled to receive so much thereof as he elected to take, and was not, by making such election and receiving such property, estopped from receiving the benefit of the said deed of trust in favor of the Exchange National Bank; (2) in the amount of property decreed to have been traced; (3) in decreeing that as to property purchased with the money of the Exchange National Bank, and traced into such property, there was a resulting trust in favor of the bank, of which the trustees were to be considered as having had constructive notice; (4) in decreeing that the costs of the suit be paid out of the trust funds in the hands of the trustees.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

The opinion of the late chief justice clearly delineates the grounds upon which the circuit court proceeded and minimizes our labors in the disposition of this case.

The deed of assignment was attacked as fraudulent in law and in fact.

The Statute of Elizabeth, chap. 5, against fraudulent conveyances, has been universally adopted in American law as the basis of our jurisprudence on that subject (Story, Eq. Jur. § 353), and re-enacted in terms, or nearly so, or with some change of language, by the Legislatures of the several States.

In Virginia the Statute reads as follows: "Every gift, conveyance, assignment or transfer of, or charge upon, any estate, real or personal, every suit commenced, or decree, judgment or execution suffered or obtained, and every bond or other writing given with intent to delay, hinder or defraud creditors, purchasers or other persons of or from what they are or may be lawfully entitled to, shall, as to such creditors, purchasers or other persons, their representatives or assigns, be void. This section shall not affect the title of a purchaser for valuable consideration, unless it appear that he had notice of the fraudulent intent of his immediate grantor or of the fraud rendering void the title of such grantor." Virginia Code 1873, chap. 114, § 1, p. 896.

In controversies arising under this Statute, involving, as they do, the rights of creditors locally, and a rule of property, we accept the conclusions of the highest judicial tribunal of the State as controlling. Jaffray v. McGehee, 107 U. S. 361, 364 [27: 495, 496]; Lloyd v. Fulton, 91 U. S. 479, 485 [23: 363, 365]; Allen v. Massey, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 351 [21: 542].

We understand counsel to contend that the deed contains certain provisions which must so hinder, delay and defraud creditors that fraud in its execution is to be conclusively presumed without regard to the intention of the parties.

The doctrine in Virginia, settled by a long and uninterrupted line of decisions, is that while there may be provisions in a deed of trust of such a character as of themselves to furnish evidence sufficient to justify the inference of a fraudulent intent, yet this cannot be so except where the inference is so absolutely irresistible as to preclude indulgence in any other. Hence provisions postponing the time of the sale and reserving the use of the property to the grantor meanwhile, though perishable and consumable in the use; permitting sales on credit, for the payment of surplus after satisfaction of creditors secured; the omission of a schedule or inventory,—and the like,—have been regarded as insufficient to justify the court in invalidating the deed for fraud in point of law. The fraudulent intent is held not to be presumed even under such circumstances, and in its absence the fact that creditors may be delayed or hindered is not of itself sufficient to vacate the instrument, while the right to prefer one creditor over another is thoroughly established. Dance v. Seaman, 11 Gratt. 778; Brockenbrough v. Brockenbrough, 31 Gratt. 590; Young v. Willis, 82 Va. 293.

When, then, it is claimed in this case that the deed is fraudulent in law, "because it appropriates partnership assets to pay individual debts in preference to the debts of the partnership," we should naturally expect to find that the supreme court of appeals had held that where, as here, the conveyance included all the property of the grantors, as partners and individually, for the benefit of partnership and individual creditors, it should be construed distributively, and the partnership assets be applied to the payment of partnership debts and the individual assets to individual liabilities. And such is the fact. McCullough v. Somerville, 8 Leigh, 415; Gordon v. Cannon, 18 Gratt. 888. And, as pointed out by Mr. Chief Justice Waite, the difficulty, at the time the assignment was made, attendant upon any attempt to separate the partnership and individual assets, and the partnership and individual debts, would be considered, under the view of the state courts, in passing upon the question of intent to defraud in failing to specifically distinguish between them.

The only other ground of objection on this branch of the case relates to the following clause in the deed:

"And the said trustees, for the purpose of executing this trust, shall at once take charge of all the property and effects hereby conveyed, and make an inventory thereof, and proceed to collect the choses in action and all evidences of indebtedness, and to convert the real and personal property into cash as soon as possible; and they may make sale of the real and other personal estate hereby conveyed, at public auction or private sale, at such time or times and place or places and after such notice as to them shall seem best; and they may make such sale upon such terms and conditions as to them shall seem best, except that at any sale of said property, real or personal, at public auction, any creditor secured by this deed in the second class above enumerated shall have the right to purchase any part or parcel of said property so sold and pay the said trustees therefor at its full face value the amount found due such purchaser secured by this deed, or so much thereof as may be necessary to enable such creditor to complete the payment of his purchase money; and, to enable as many creditors as possible to become bidders on these terms, the said trustees may have the real estate hereby conveyed, or any part thereof, laid off into lots or parcels, as they may think best. And upon the conversion of the said property hereby conveyed into money the said trustees shall distribute the same to the creditors hereby secured in the order hereinbefore named with all diligence, and in the distribution between those creditors who may have purchased property and paid for the same under the provisions of this deed with a part of the money found due them respectively, and those who made no purchase, the trustees shall observe such rule of equality as will be just and proper."

But can it be properly concluded that this provision is irreconcilable with any other inference than that of fraud? And even if so much of it as allows the creditors in the second class to bid and use their claims as purchase money were invalid, ought the whole instrument to be therefore declared of no effect? We agree with the circuit court that, as respects fraud in law as contradistinguished from fraud in fact, where that which is valid can be separated from that which is invalid, without defeating the general intent, the maxim, "void in part, void in toto," does not necessarily apply, and that the instrument may be sustained notwithstanding the invalidity of a particular provision. Denny v. Bennett, 128 U. S. 489, 496 [32: 491, 494]; Cunningham v. Norton, 125 U. S. 77 [31: 624]; Muller v. Norton, 132 U. S. 501 [33: 897]; Darling v. Rogers, 22 Wend. 483; Howell v. Edgar, 4 Ill. 417, 419.

Nor are we able, in view of the current of decisions in Virginia and all the terms of the deed taken together, to concur with the receiver's counsel that fraudulent intent is a necessary deduction from the permission to the creditors in the second class to avail themselves of their claims in bidding in the manner prescribed. The deed expressly stated that it was given to secure the costs and expenses, and then the payment of the indebtedness enumerated in the first class; "and after the payment of the hereinbefore mentioned sums and claims, to secure, secondly, the following creditors to be paid equally and ratably if the property hereby conveyed shall be insufficient to pay them all, but with the privilege as to bidding on such property as may be sold at auction as hereinafter provided." This contemplates the payment of the creditors in the first class before the bidding clause could take effect, and precludes the operation of that clause to the prejudice of those creditors. The record discloses that the total amount secured in the first class was less than fifty thousand dollars, of which the bank held more than four fifths, and that the cash assets were much more than enough to cover the costs and expenses and this amount, without any sales; so that the facts correspond with the intention deducible from the language of the deed. The first-class creditors are to be paid before the second-class creditors can exercise the right to bid if sales by public auction ever take place. The bank is a creditor in the first and second classes and the sole creditor in the third class, but it has no ground of complaint as a third-class creditor, as the operation of the clause can only be for its benefit as such.

The second-class creditors are all treated alike, and, as the counsel for the trustees say, are placed in exactly the same legal relation to the subject matter. If it could be said that the clause might operate to create a preference as between them, the grantors had a right to prefer; but inasmuch as each can bid, and the trustees have power to divide the property into parcels to enable as many creditors as possible to become bidders, and are charged with the duty to observe such rule of equality, between those who purchase and those who do not, as will be just, it is not easy to see how a preference could be obtained. The question is not whether the trustees might prove unfaithful—a contingency of which there is no intimation here—but whether the provisions of the deed, if carried out according to their apparent intent, would be fraudulent in their operation. It seems to us, as it did to the circuit court, that such is not the reasonable inference, and that the manifest object was to stimulate bidding, prevent a sacrifice of the property, and benefit the creditors, and this without any advantage to the assignors other than that involved in having their assets go as far as possible in payment of their debts. It is not they who reap a pecuniary benefit, but their creditors.

Without further elaboration, we are of opinion

ion that the deed is not void in law because of the insertion of the provision in question.

It should also be observed that the trustees are rendering their reports under the direction of the court, and ask in their cross-bill "the aid and direction of this honorable court in the ascertainment of all and every the copartnership property and the individual property standing in the names of the individual members of the said copartnerships, or any of said members, and in the application of the trust funds to the payment of the debts secured, and in the administration of this their trust; and they are advised that it is their right and privilege to file this their bill, and to apply to this honorable court as a court of equity for the purpose aforesaid." So that the receiver, having invoked the interposition of a court of equity, can find there, either on his own application or that of his adversary, a remedy for any injurious results he may apprehend in the administration of the trust. The court will see to it that, as far as practicable, partnership assets are applied to partnership liabilities and individual assets to individual liabilities, and that the bidding clause shall not be put into operation unless in consonance with equity and good conscience.

It is earnestly argued, however, that the deed should be set aside because fraudulent in fact. We have patiently, but without success, examined this record in the effort to discover what specific acts are made out by the proofs, establishing, in connection with the deed itself, actual fraud in its execution. The inquiry is not whether the grantors had been previously guilty of fraud or embezzlement, but whether this particular conveyance was made with a fraudulent intent known to the trustees or beneficiaries. Evans v. Greenhow, 15 Gratt. 153; Emerson v. Senter, 118 U. S. 3 [30: 49]. It appears that the Bains were indebted to the bank and also to their depositors in several hundred thousand dollars. It is said that they indulged in wild speculations in real and personal estate, stocks, bonds, mines, railroads, etc.; but that applies as well to the squandering of the seven hundred thousand dollars and upwards of deposits with them as a banking firm, as it does to the money that they absorbed from the bank; and in any view, the violation of their fiduciary relations to the bank of which they were officers, or their treatment of the depositors in the banking firm of which they were members, does not render the assignment of all their property for the benefit of their creditors therefore fraudulent.

The bank and the banking house suspended on the second day of April, 1885, and the assignment was made on the sixth day of April. On the 31st day of March preceding, Bain & Bro. transferred to the bank certain securities of the estimated value of $570,000 in reduction of their indebtedness, and some other assets, as collateral to their guaranty of any deficiency which might result when the securities were realized on. When they transferred all their property, partnership and individual, of every kind, by the deed in controversy, they provided for the payment in the first instance of some $49,881.61, of which the bank held $42,288.49, and then for the payment in full, or ratably, of their own depositors, and certain notes aggregating $102,000, held by the bank; and they put the remaining indebtedness to the bank in a third class. They had a right to make preferences, and it is evident that their effort in the assignment was to equalize as between what they owed their own depositors and what they owed the bank, taking into consideration what the bank had already obtained. There was no fraud in this, of which the bank could complain, as between it and the other creditors.

Counsel contends that the deed was in contravention of sections 5151 and 5284 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which provide that the shareholders of every national banking association shall be held individually responsible for its debts to the extent of the amount of their stock, and additional thereto, and that the comptroller may enforce that individual liability. It is insisted that the capital stock is a trust fund of which the directors are the trustees, and that the creditors have a lien upon it in equity; that this applies to the liability upon the stock of a national bank; and that no general assignment of his property for the payment of his debts can lawfully be made by a shareholder, certainly not when he is a director. Undoubtedly unpaid subscriptions to stock are assets, and have frequently been treated by courts of equity as if impressed with a trust sub modo, in the sense that neither the stockholders nor the corporation can misappropriate such subscriptions so far as creditors are concerned. Richardson v. Green, 138 U. S. 80, 44 [38: 516, 522]. Creditors have the same right to look to them as to anything else, and the same right to insist upon their payment as upon the payment of any other debt due to the corporation. The shareholder cannot transfer his shares when the corporation is failing, or manipulate a release therefrom, for the purpose of escaping his liability. And the principle is the same where the shares are paid up, but the shareholder is responsible in respect thereof to an equal additional amount. There was, however, no attempt here to avoid this liability, and the fact of its existence did not operate to fetter these assignors in the otherwise lawful disposition of their property for the benefit of their creditors.

Some other transactions are referred to in the bill as indicating fraud in fact, but they are not insisted upon in argument and require no special consideration. One of them relates to a deed of Wallace & Son to Bain & Bro., executed April 6, 1886, and referred to by counsel in another connection.

We think the circuit court was right in finding "no evidence whatever of any actual fraudulent intent on the part of the firm, or either of the partners, to hinder and delay their creditors."

The argument is pressed that the trustees were neither bona fide purchasers for value nor purchasers without notice, because they must have had knowledge, for the reasons given, of the previous conduct of Bain & Bro. But, as we have already seen, that previous conduct did not render the assignment in itself fraudulent, although it is quite true that all the circumstances should be taken into consideration in passing on that question. It is urged that the trustees knew that Bain & Bro. had no right to make the deed, because on the 31st of March, when they transferred to the bank certain stocks and bonds of the face value of $640,000 and an estimated value of $570,000, a member of the concern verbally promised that they would not make an assignment giving preferences against the bank. The transfer of these securities rendered the bank just so much better off, and counsel for the receiver concedes that the advice of the bank's former counsel in regard to it, "in the condition of the affairs of the bank at that date, . . . was wise and proper, and did secure to the bank whatever can be realized from the sale of the securities delivered under the agreement of March 31, 1885." The verbal promise not to make preferences constituted no lien upon Bain & Bro.'s property, and its disregard did not affect the validity of the deed. Nor is any issue in regard to it made upon the pleadings. It is noticeable that Bain & Bro. declined to incorporate that pledge in the written agreement transferring the securities, and we are not called upon to examine into the circumstances under which the promise so given failed to be carried out. The receiver assigns for error that the circuit court held that he was entitled to a surrender of such of the property which it was found had "actually been purchased with the moneys of the bank as he elects to take, but of no other." In other words, it is insisted that the receiver is entitled to a charge upon the entire mass of the estate, with priority over the other creditors of Bain & Bro.

It was said by Mr. Justice Bradley in Frelinghuysen v. Nugent, 36 Fed. Rep. 229, 239: "Formerly the equitable right of following misapplied money or other property into the hands of the parties receiving it depended upon the ability of identifying it, the equity attaching only to the very property misapplied. This right was first extended to the proceeds of the property, namely, to that which was procured in place of it by exchange, purchase or sale. But if it became confused with other property of the same kind, so as not to be distinguishable, without any fault on the part of the possessor, the equity was lost. Finally, however, it has been held as the better doctrine that confusion does not destroy the equity entirely, but converts it into a charge upon the entire mass, giving to the party injured by the unlawful diversion a priority of right over the other creditors of the possessor. This is as far as the rule has been carried. The difficulty of sustaining the claim in the present case is, that it does not appear that the goods claimed—that is to say, the stock on hand, finished and unfinished—were either in whole or in part the proceeds of any money unlawfully abstracted from the bank." The same difficulty presents itself here, and while the rule laid down by Mr. Justice Bradley has been recognized and applied by this court (Baltimore Cent. National Bank v. Conn. Mut. L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 54, 67 [26: 698, 699], and cases cited), yet, as stated by the chief justice, "purchases made and paid for out of the general mass cannot be claimed by the bank, unless it is shown that its own moneys then in the fund were appropriated for that purpose." And this the evidence fails to establish as to any other property than that designated in the decree, although it is claimed, on behalf of the receiver, that the sum of $105,000 due to the bank upon certain notes of Wallace & Son, which had been discounted by Bain & Bro., and which were re-discounted for the latter by the bank, should have been traced into certain property conveyed by Wallace & Son to Bain & Bro. The circumstances, so far as necessary to elucidate this claim, are as follows; Bain & Bro. owed the Richmond Cedar Works $31,885.71. The Exchange National Bank held the interest of Bain & Bro. in these works under the transfer of Bain & Bro. to the bank, of March 31, 1885. The Richmond Cedar Works owed the Exchange National Bank $140,000, upon which Wallace & Son were indorsers. Wallace & Son owed Bain & Bro. over $300,000. By a deed dated April 3, 1885, Wallace & Son conveyed certain property to the Richmond Cedar Works for $55,000, receiving in payment the Cedar Works' check on Bain & Bro. for $31,885.71, due from them to it, and the notes of the Cedar Works for the balance, which were turned over to Bain & Bro. By this transaction the indebtedness of Bain & Bro. to the Cedar Works was extinguished, and Wallace & Son's indebtedness to Bain & Bro. reduced by the sum of $55,000. This left Wallace & Son still debtors of Bain & Bro. to the extent of over $245,000, and on the 6th day of April, 1885, they executed a deed of their remaining property to Bain & Bro., for the expressed consideration of $151,800, which property has passed under the assignment in this case. None of this property, so far as appears, was purchased with the money of the bank, but counsel for the receiver contends that because Bain & Bro. had rediscounted the notes of Wallace & Son to the amount of $105,000 at the bank, and because the deed of Wallace & Son to Bain & Bro. was in payment of their indebtedness to the latter, in whole or in part, therefore it ought to be held that the bank's money purchased Wallace & Son's property for the benefit of Bain & Bro. We do not understand that the bank was entitled to the assets of Bain & Bro.'s debtors, and can perceive no ground for holding that Bain & Bro., in receiving the deed from Wallace & Son, were purchasing property with the money of the bank.

This disposes of the errors assigned on behalf of the receiver, and leaves for consideration those assigned on behalf of the trustees upon their cross-appeal. The principal contention is that it was error to decree that the receiver could take "such of the property hereinafter set out and found to have been actually purchased with the moneys of the said bank as he elects to take; and by making said election and receiving such property the said receiver is not to be estopped from receiving the full benefit of the said deed of trust, or the provisions thereof, in favor of the Exchange National Bank." We do not concur in that view.

The doctrine of election rests upon the principle that he who seeks equity must do it, and means, as the term is ordinarily used, that where two inconsistent or alternative rights or claims are presented to the choice of a party, by a person who manifests the clear intention that he should not enjoy both, then he must accept or reject one or the other; and so, in 188 U. S.

other words, that one cannot take a benefit under an instrument and then repudiate it.

It cannot be assumed that there was an intention on the part of Bain & Bro. to dispose of that which was not theirs, or, even if they lawfully could, to cut the bank off from participating in the property assigned, in the order mentioned, by imposing the condition that the bank should purchase its share by parting with its own property; nor does any equitable implication to that effect arise. The other creditors cannot claim compensation for being deprived of what did not belong to Bain & Bro., or of anything transferred in lieu thereof. There existed no equity on their part which can be held to estop the bank from receiving what may come to it under the assignment, and in doing so it will not occupy inconsistent positions. That it sought to have the deed set aside does not deprive it of its rights under it, upon the failure of its attack.

It was entirely competent for the court to adjust this matter upon equitable principles, and this it has done in its decree. Under the assignment the bank gets a preference of something over $42,000, and then ranks with other creditors to the extent of $102,000, while the balance of a very large indebtedness due to it is relegated to the third class; and it appears to be entirely just that it should have in addition the benefit of that which belongs to it, and to which the other creditors have no claim. And this, though amounting on its face to $149,372.21, we are informed by counsel for the trustees, has only an actual value of $20,177.18, to three items of which, amounting to $6,840, the objection is made of failure of proof of their having been purchased with the bank's money.

We have examined the record with care, and are satisfied with the conclusion arrived at by the special master and the court as to these items, and shall not disturb the decree in that regard.

The trustees also demur to being held affected with notice as to the traced property, principally because the affairs of the debtors were in such a state as to render the task of disentanglement exceedingly onerous. As inquiry would have conducted the trustees to the same conclusion as that now reached, the fact that the conduct of the Bains rendered it difficult to accurately distinguish between one class of property and another should not absolve them from the operation of the rule as to notice, if otherwise applicable.

While it is well settled in Virginia that the trustees and beneficiaries in a deed of trust to secure bona fide debts occupy the position of purchasers for a valuable consideration (Wickham v. Lewis, 18 Gratt. 427; Evans v. Greenhow, 15 Gratt. 156; Keener v. Trigg, 98 U. S. 50, 58 [25: 88]), yet they cannot hold with notice of the fraudulent intent of their grantor, or of the fraud rendering his title void. And it is equally well settled in the States of West Virginia and Virginia that notice to the trustees is notice to the beneficiaries. Fidelity Ins. T. & S. D. Co. v. Shenandoah Valley R. Co. 32 W. Va. 244; Beverly v. Brooke, 2 Leigh, 448; French v. Loyal Co. 5 Leigh, 641.

The knowledge of the situation possessed by Mr. Old, one of the trustees, who was the Bains' attorney at the time of the assignment, and by whom it was drawn, was quite comprehensive, and was obtained in such a manner and under such circumstances that he must be presumed to have communicated it. It was knowledge obtained in the particular transaction. The Distilled Spirits, 78 U. S. 11 Wall. 356, 366 [20: 167]. There can be no doubt, also, respecting the duty of the trustees to inquire as to the rights of the bank, and that they are chargeable with a knowledge of all the facts that inquiry would have disclosed.

The decree directs that the costs of the suit be paid out of the trust funds in the hands of the defendant trustees, and, as we agree with the results arrived at by the circuit court, we are of opinion that this direction was correct. The decree will be in all things affirmed.

Mr. Justice Brewer was not a member of the court when this case was argued, and took no part in its decision.

As to strict foreclosure of mortgage, see note to Clark v. Reyburn, Bk. 19, p. 354.

As to order of sale of mortgaged premises, see note to Orvis v. Powell, Bk. 25, p. 238.

The following are late decisions on the subject of receivers, their appointment, powers and duties, receiver's certificates and discharge of receivers:

A receiver pendente lite of mortgaged premises may be appointed without notice where the mortgagor has refused to deliver the crops and other personal property, and there are prior liens, and the mortgagor is insolvent, and the crops are in danger of being lost or destroyed. Ashurst v. Lehman, 86 Ala. 370.

The appointment of a receiver is authorized when the party seeking the appointment shows prima facie a title or a lien upon the subject matter, and that it is in danger of loss from waste, misconduct or insolvency. Ibid.; Elwood v. Greenleaf First Nat. Bk. 41 Kan. 475; Durant v. Crowell, 97 N. C. 367.

Where the whole scheme of a bill is to set aside trust deeds executed by a corporation, which are found to be valid, and to distribute the proceeds of duly filed, appellant may be allowed on the hearing to file a bond nunc pro tunc.

2. A party is not bound by a prior decree which is so uncertain in describing property as to be inoperative and void; the sale under such a decree is a nullity, and therefore no cloud on the title. Such a decree is no bar to a second suit.
3. Wherever property subject to a lien has been brought within the domain of a court of equity, and a receiver of it is appointed, the rents and profits in the hands of the receiver will be applied, along with the corpus of the fund, to satisfy the lien, after paying charges, such as taxes and insurance.
4. A court of equity, on the application of a junior incumbrancer, will provide for the sale of the entire incumbered property, if the circumstances of the case show that the interests of the mortgagor and of the incumbrancers require the sale.
5. This authority is properly exercised in the case of deeds of trust, where all the incumbrances are due, and where the plaintiff has a first lien on some of the property sought to be sold and a second lien on the other property, and where all the incumbrancers are parties to the suit.
6. Property omitted by accident from one of the trust deeds, when both parties supposed the deed covered it, may be reached and sold in such a suit.
7. A decree for a deficiency is a necessary incident of a foreclosure suit in equity.
8. Section 806 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the District of Columbia, authorizes a decree in personam against the debtor for the balance remaining due after the proceeds of the sale of lands covered by a mortgage or a deed of trust in the nature thereof has been applied to the satisfaction of the debt.
9. The court properly appointed a receiver to take possession of the rents, in order to preserve them for that party to the suit who should ultimately be found to be equitably entitled to them, under the facts of this case, the property itself being inadequate security and the debtor being insolvent.

the property among the creditors pro rata, and the property will not pay the several creditors under the trust, a receiver will not be appointed. Pyles v. Riverside Furniture Co. 30 W. Va. 123.

After a decree to sell real estate to satisfy liens, and an appeal from that decree, the court below may appoint a receiver to rent out the real estate. Adkins v. Edwards, 83 Va. 316.

In an injunction suit, where the right to subject land to sale for the purchase money is in litigation, the court may appoint a receiver to rent the land. Ibid.

Creditors are not estopped, by their acts done under an assignment which is afterwards declared void, from petitioning for a receiver of the debtor's property. Re Walker, 37 Minn. 243.

A receiver should not be granted where a bond, properly secured, to account for and pay over the proceeds as the court might thereafter direct, would furnish sufficient security. Stith v. Jones, 101 N. C. 360.

In an action for the dissolution of a partnership, the court has no power to appoint a receiver, pendente lite, of alleged assets of the firm, of which the ownership by the firm is in issue and denied by the answer. Brush v. Jay, 113 N. Y. 482.

The right of a mortgagor to the rents and profits pendente lite is a substantial one under the laws of Michigan and the courts cannot appoint a receiver to take the rents and profits to apply on the mortgage prior to the completion of foreclosure by sale and confirmation, although the security is inadequate.

10. Under the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia, parties may contract in writing for the payment of interest at the rate of 10 per cent per annum.
11. The court properly fixed the amount due according to the terms of the contract, as to interest on the payment of which, before the day fixed, the decree would not go into effect, but the case would be dismissed.
12. Where one of the trustees appointed by the decree of the special term to make the sale has died, the court below has power to appoint a new one in his place.

Argued Nov. 26, 27, Dec. 2, 1889. Decided March 3, 1890.

APPEAL from a decree of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in a suit for foreclosure, decreeing that the property be sold and applied to the payment of certain liens thereon in the order named therein and for payment of a deficiency. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Opinion below, 4 Mackey, 269.

Messrs. Wm. F. Mattingly, Enoch Totten and Henry Wise Garnett, for appellants:

Mrs. Gray was not a necessary party to the first suit, and the decree is not for that reason any less effective.

The fact that Mrs. Gray is a party to this suit does not affect the question of the estoppel of the former suit as between Shepherd and his trustees and Pepper.

Thompson v. Roberts, 65 U. S. 24 How. 241 (16: 650).

The record shows that complainant has made his election to take under his deeds of trust according to their description with full knowledge of the alleged mistake.

Rights and demands cannot be split up and tried piecemeal.

Rodgers v. Higgins, 57 Ill. 244; Stockton v. Ford, 59 U. S. 18 How. 420 (15: 395).

That the property would sell to better advantage as a whole is no legal reason which would give the court the right and power so to decree against the objections of those interested in lot A.

McLaughlin v. Barnum, 81 Md. 444, 445.

The complainant does not give the court jurisdiction of the entire case, and therefore should not be heard.

Eastman v. Amoskeag Mfg. Co. 47 N. H. 71, 80; Prothero v. Phelps, 35 Eng. L. & Eq. 518.

The court below erred in passing a personal decree against Shepherd for deficiency. Pepper is not a mortgagee seeking foreclosure. There is no averment in the bill of any such liability and no prayer asking any such relief. Complainant had the right to interpose the Statute of Limitations.

Holden v. Freedmans S. & T. Co. 100 U. S. 72, 74 (25: 567, 568).

Mr. Justice Blatchford delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 1st of June, 1874, Alexander R. Shepherd and his wife made a deed of trust to Andrew C. Bradley and William H. Philip, conveying to them real estate situated in the City of Washington, in the District of Columbia, described in the deed as follows: "Part of lot numbered two (2) in square numbered one hundred and sixty-four (164), and bounded and described as follows, viz.: Beginning, at a point on North K Street forty-three feet and nine inches (43 $\frac{3}{4}$ ft.) east of the southwestern corner of said square, and running thence west on K Street forty-three feet and nine inches (43 $\frac{3}{4}$ ft.), to said southwestern corner of said square; thence northwesterly along the line of Connecticut Avenue about eighty feet and ten inches (80 $\frac{1}{2}$ ft.), to the south line of original lot numbered three (3) in said square; thence northeasterly and at right angles with said avenue and along the line of said lot three (3), about eighty-five (85) feet, to intersect a line drawn due north from the point of beginning, and thence due south to the point of beginning." The deed recited that Shepherd was indebted to George S. Pepper in the sum of \$35,000, evidenced by a promissory note executed to Pepper, dated June 1, 1874, and payable in 5 years after date, with interest, payable semi-annually at the rate of 9 per cent per annum, until paid, accompanied by 10 coupon notes for \$1,575 each, representing the interest; and it conveyed the land in trust to secure the payment of the notes. It gave power to the trustees to sell the premises at public auction, on a default in the payment of the notes or any installment of interest, and to convey the property in fee simple to the purchaser. Shepherd covenanted in the deed to keep the buildings on the land insured during the continuance of the trust in the sum of \$25,000, and to have the policies assigned to the trustees; and that, on his failure to do so, Pepper might do it and the premium he should pay should be considered secured by the trust deed.

On the 22d of March, 1875, Shepherd and his wife executed to William F. Mattingly and the said Andrew C. Bradley another deed of trust, covering the same premises by the same description as in the first deed, to secure the payment to the said Pepper of a promissory note dated March 22, 1875, for $10,000, payable 5 years after date, with interest payable semi-annually, at the rate of 9 per cent per annum, until paid, accompanied by 10 coupon notes of $450 each, representing the interest. The other provisions of this trust deed were in terms like those of the first one, except that the insurance against fire was to be $10,000.

On the 15th of May, 1876, Shepherd and his wife executed a deed of trust to James E. Fitch and Lewis J. Davis, covering premises described as follows: "All that certain piece or parcel of ground situated and lying in the City of Washington, District of Columbia, and known and described upon the ground plat or plan of said city as lot No. three (3), in A. R. Shepherd's subdivision of square number one hundred and sixty-four (164), said lot number three (3) fronting forty-three feet and nine inches (43 ft. 9 in.) on K Street N. W., and one hundred and nine feet and one-half inch (109 ft. $\frac{1}{2}$ in.) on Connecticut Avenue." The deed was made to secure the payment of a promissory note for \$35,000, made by Shepherd, dated May 15, 1876, given to Mercy Maria Carter, payable 3 years after date, with interest at the rate of 9 per cent per annum, payable quarterly. This deed covered the same premises embraced in the first two deeds of trust, and an additional piece of land in the rear of those premises, having a frontage on Connecticut Avenue of 28 feet 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ inches, and running eastward across the rear part of the premises covered by the first two deeds of trust.

On the 15th of November, 1876, Shepherd and his wife executed an assignment, for the benefit of the creditors of Shepherd, to George Taylor, Henry A. Willard and Samuel Cross, which assignment covered "lot 3 in square 164." Willard refused to accept the trust, and Peter F. Bacon was duly appointed assignee in his place.

On the 11th of April, 1878, Pepper filed a bill in equity, in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, making as defendants Shepherd and his wife, Bradley, Philip, Mattingly, Taylor, Cross and Bacon. The bill set forth the making and contents of the two deeds of trust in favor of Pepper and of the assignment by Shepherd; that Pepper was still the holder of the note for $35,000 and the note for $10,000, and the coupon notes belonging thereto; that there were large arrears of interest due thereon; that the property was largely incumbered with taxes, and had been sold for the taxes for the year ending June 30, 1877; that Shepherd had failed to keep the property insured, and Pepper had advanced the amount of the premiums of insurance; that Pepper had, in writing, requested the trustees, under the deeds of trust, to advertise the property for sale, but the defendant Bradley, a trustee under each of the deeds, had refused to do so, by a letter to Pepper, in which he also stated "that the trust does not cover the entire area of the house, cutting off about twenty feet of the rear."

There was and is a dwelling-house on the land, which covers the entire width on K Street, and at least a part of it extends the entire depth of the land embraced in the first two deeds of trust; and a part of the rear part of it is built upon the land covered by the deed of trust in favor of Mercy Maria Carter which is not embraced in the two deeds of trust in favor of Pepper.

The bill averred that at the time the two loans were negotiated by Pepper he was informed and believed that the two deeds of trust covered the whole of the house and lots; that he had nothing to do with the preparation of those deeds, but they were prepared by Shepherd or his attorney; that Pepper never saw them until after the negotiations were concluded and the money paid; that Shepherd alone was responsible for any mistake or omission; that at the dates of the deeds of trust the house was completed and occupied by Shepherd as a dwelling; that sub-plot A in square 164, being the premises not covered by the two deeds of trust in favor of Pepper, was at that time owned by Shepherd; that it was understood that the two deeds of trust in favor of Pepper would and did cover the whole area occupied by the house and grounds; that the part of the house not included in those two deeds of trust was what is known as the "picture gallery;" that the rear end of it could be detached without marring or lessening the value of the property; that the plaintiff was entitled to enforce the collection of the moneys due to him, irrespective of any injury which the sale might do to Shepherd or anyone holding under him; and that, in any event, the plaintiff had the right to enforce the sale of so much of the property as was covered by the two deeds of trust in his favor.

The prayer of the bill was that a trustee might be appointed by the court in place of the trustees under the two deeds of trust, with directions and authority forthwith to execute the trusts of the two deeds.

Answers to this bill were put in by Mattingly, Bradley and Shepherd, the answer of Shepherd setting up that the loans to him by Pepper were usurious and void under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, which governed the contracts. Issue was joined, proofs were taken and the case was heard at special term, which, on the 12th of May, 1879, entered a decree overruling the defense of usury, and further decreeing as follows: "That James M. Johnston be, and is hereby, appointed trustee in the place and stead of Andrew C. Bradley, in the deed of trust, & recorded in Liber —, folio —, of the land records for the District of Columbia, and referred to in the record in this cause. This decree is without prejudice to all other rights of defendant." Shepherd, on the 14th of May, 1879, appealed from this decree to the general term; but, after the sale to Pepper hereinafter mentioned, he dismissed his appeal.

Johnston and Philip, claiming and purporting to act under the deed of trust of June 1, 1874, and regarding Johnston as having been appointed trustee in the place of Bradley, under that deed, by virtue of the decree of May 12, 1879, advertised for sale at public auction the premises described in that deed, by the description contained in it. The sale took place on the 23d of October, 1879, and the property was sold to Pepper, at such auction, for $50,000; and Philip and Johnston, as trustees, executed and delivered to Pepper a deed of the property.

On the 14th of November, 1879, Shepherd filed a bill in equity in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, against Philip, Johnston and Pepper, setting forth the sale and the deed to Pepper, and alleging that Johnston and Philip acted without authority in selling the property, inasmuch as Johnston was not a trustee under the deed of trust, and the decree of May 12, 1879, did not confer upon him any power under that deed, nor substitute him in the place of Bradley under it, nor remove Bradley from his office of trustee under it; that it was announced at the sale by the auctioneer that the sale was made subject to taxes estimated at $2,700, and that the lot sold did not include the rear part of the building; that the property was knocked down to Pepper for $50,000 and the said taxes; that the price was grossly inadequate; that Shepherd, at the time of the sale, was the owner of a valuable equitable interest in the property; and that the sale was void.

The prayer of the bill was that the sale be set aside and the deed to Pepper canceled; that the defendants be restrained from interfering with the property, or attempting to enforce at law any legal right claimed as a consequence of the sale or the deed; and for general relief.

Philip and Johnston answered the bill, as also did Pepper. Pepper also filed a cross-bill against Shepherd, Philip and Johnston, setting forth the contents of the original bill and of the answers to it, and praying that the sale to Pepper be decreed to be legal and valid, and the deed to him effectual to convey to him an unincumbered fee-simple title to the real estate; for a writ of assistance to put him in possession of the premises; for a receiver to collect the accruing rents; for an injunction to restrain Shepherd and all persons claiming under him from interfering with the plaintiff in respect of the premises; and for general relief.

A replication was filed to the answers to the original bill, and Shepherd, and also Philip and Johnston, answered the cross-bill. Issue was joined on such answers and proofs were taken. The case was heard at special term, and a decree was made, on the 30th of October, 1880, dismissing the bill, with costs, the decree being made by Mr. Justice James. It stated that Shepherd appealed to the general term from the decree.

On the 24th of December, 1880, Mr. Justice James filed an opinion in the suit, in which he stated that the decree of May 12, 1879, in the suit of Pepper against Shepherd, was inoperative and void for uncertainty. He added: "It purports to substitute a trustee in one of two deeds mentioned in the pleadings, without designating which of them. It is true that it can be inferred, from the comparative effects of the substitution in the one or the other case, that the court was not likely to intend to substitute Mr. Johnston for Mr. Bradley in the deed which conveyed only an equitable title, but I do not think that I am at liberty to explain and give certainty to the decree by reference to such considerations. It has been suggested that a decree may be explained by reference to the pleadings on which it is based, and this undoubtedly may be done in a proper case, but I do not find that the uncertainty of the decree in this case can be cleared up in that way. It follows that, if the decree is uncertain on its face, the alleged title of Pepper, through Mr. Johnston as substituted trustee, is not a cloud upon the title of the complainant, and consequently this court cannot take jurisdiction to grant the relief prayed. Therefore, the decree must be that the bill be dismissed."

On the 14th of January, 1881, the defendants in the suit of Shepherd against Pepper entered an appeal from the decree of October 30, 1880. On the 11th of February, 1881, Shepherd dismissed his appeal from that decree. A motion by Shepherd to dismiss the appeal from that decree taken by the defendants therein appears to have been granted by default; and they, on the 25th of February, 1881, filed petitions praying the court in general term to reinstate their appeal. The ground of these petitions was, that the opinion of Mr. Justice James found as a fact that the trustees, Philip and Johnston, had no power to make a sale, which finding did not appear in the decree of October 30, 1880. The court acted upon the petitions for reinstating, by making an order, on the 17th of June, 1881, striking from the files of the court the opinion of Mr. Justice James. This left the decree of the special term, made October 30, 1880, to stand as a decree merely dismissing the bill of Shepherd.

On the 20th of July, 1881, Pepper began the present suit by filing in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia a bill in equity against Shepherd and his wife; Mercy Maria Carter, who had been married and become Mercy Maria Carter Gray; Fitch and Davis, the trustees in the deed of trust for the benefit of Mrs. Gray; Bradley, Mattingly and Johnston, trustees (Philip having died); David R. Bartlett, Bacon and Cross, assignees under the deed of assignment of November 15, 1876 (Bartlett having been appointed assignee in the place of Taylor); and John Alexander and George M.

Barker, two of the creditors secured by that assignment, as representatives of that class of creditors.

The bill sets forth the two deeds of trust in favor of Pepper and the deed of trust in favor of Mrs. Gray. It avers that Pepper owns and holds the promissory note for $35,000 and the one for $10,000; that they are both overdue; that a large amount of interest is due upon them; that Pepper has advanced moneys on account of taxes and insurance on the premises covered by the three deeds of trust, which moneys are secured by the two deeds of trust in his favor; that Mrs. Gray still holds her promissory note for $35,000, which is overdue, with interest from May 15, 1877; and that the parties who claim to be secured by the assignment of November 15, 1876, a copy of which is annexed to the bill, are very numerous and cannot without inconvenience and delay be brought before the court. It then sets forth the filing of the former bill by Pepper; the contents of the decree of May 12, 1879; the appeal by Shepherd from that decree; the sale of the property to Pepper by Philip and Johnston, trustees; the filing of the bill by Shepherd, the proceedings thereunder, and the entry of the decree of October 30, 1880; the filing of the opinion of Mr. Justice James; and the order striking that opinion from the files.

The bill further alleges that it is competent to show at any time the grounds upon which the decree of October 30, 1880, was placed by the opinion of the court; that, as that opinion states that the decree of May 12, 1879, did not give to Johnston any power to sell, the decree of October 30, 1880, was in effect an adjudication upon, and favorable to, the averments in the bill filed by Shepherd, that the sale to Pepper was made without authority, and that the deed of Philip and Johnston to Pepper was null and void; that, as Shepherd had always insisted that the decree of May 12, 1879, was void and the sale to Pepper a nullity, and to the end that said lot 8 may be sold as a whole, Pepper files his bill in order that an undisputed title to the whole property may be obtained by means of foreclosure proceedings under the decree of the court; that the lot numbered 3 in Shepherd's subdivision of square 164, fronting 43 feet 9 inches on K Street and 109 feet $\frac{1}{4}$ inch on Connecticut Avenue, being the property described in the deed of trust in favor of Mrs. Gray, is improved by an expensive dwelling-house, erected thereon by Shepherd; that the portion of that lot 3 contained in the descriptive clauses of the two deeds of trust given by Shepherd to secure the moneys loaned to him by Pepper, does not embrace all the ground covered by and appurtenant to the dwelling-house, the portion omitted from those two deeds of trust being a lot designated as sub-lot A, fronting about 28 feet $2\frac{1}{4}$ inches on Connecticut Avenue, and running back with that width; that the omission of that strip from those two deeds of trust was either by accident or fraud on the part of Shepherd or his agents; that in either case Pepper is entitled to have the description of the ground in those deeds corrected, so as to include that strip; that by the agreement of Pepper with Shepherd it was provided that Shepherd should grant to trustees, to secure Pepper, all of the real estate covered by his residence on the corner of K Street and Connecticut Avenue, and all the property to be used as appurtenant and connected therewith, and which is designated on the plat books of the city as lot 3 of Shepherd's subdivision of square 164; that, relying upon the fact that the first deed of trust embraced all the property now described as lot 3 in square 164, Pepper agreed to make a second loan on the same property, and therefore the second deed of trust was executed as now found; that, relying upon the belief that both of the deeds of trust embraced all of the real estate used or to be used by Shepherd for his residence and appurtenant thereto, Pepper advanced the \$45,000, and relied upon the deeds as his security for the loan, believing that they conformed to his contracts with Shepherd and embraced all the real estate owned at that point by Shepherd and all the land covered by the house and appurtenant thereto; that he would not have loaned any money to Shepherd if he had known that the deeds of trust did not embrace all of such real estate and the improvements made or to be made at that point by Shepherd, with the yard now belonging thereto; that, after the execution of the deeds and the advance of the \$45,000, Pepper discovered that sub-lot A, constituting the rear 28 feet 2½ inches of lot 3 in square 164, was omitted entirely from the deeds, thereby cutting off a portion of the improvements and seriously impairing the security; that the omissions were made by the fraud of Shepherd or his agents, and without any suspicion of the omission on the part of Pepper; that Shepherd states that he fully intended to embrace in the two deeds all the said real estate, and executed the deeds with the belief that all of said property was so included, but that the omission to include all of it was due to accident or mistake on the part of himself or of his agents who prepared the deeds, and without fraud on his or their part; that it was well understood by Mrs. Gray, when and before she loaned the \$35,000 to Shepherd, that the two prior deeds of trust in favor of Pepper constituted prior liens on all the real estate embraced in the deed of trust to secure her, that is, lot 3 in square 164; that she made her loan with the belief on her part that both of the prior deeds of trust actually embraced all of the said real estate, and with the belief that Pepper and Shepherd understood that all of said real estate was so embraced; that she had actual notice that Pepper and Shepherd fully intended to embrace in the first and second deeds of trust all the real estate embraced in the third one; that the lien of Pepper under his two deeds of trust is paramount to that of Mrs. Gray, as to all of the real estate referred to in her deed of trust, and ought to be enforced, either by reforming the first two deeds by including therein all of the real estate embraced in the deed in favor of Mrs. Gray, or by enforcing the lien of Pepper on lot 3 as an equitable mortgage prior to any rights of Mrs. Gray therein; that, after Pepper had so advanced to Shepherd the \$45,000, he learned for the first time that Shepherd, when he executed the first two deeds, had only a tax title to sub-lot A, in square 164; that Shepherd had, since said loans were made to him, perfected his title to sub-lot A, by buying in all adverse claims, and had paid the money therefor from his own means; that such sub-lot A was conveyed either to Shepherd or to some friend as trustee for him; and that in either case the perfected title will inure to the benefit of Pepper and of Mrs. Gray.

The bill further alleges that the said principal sums, with large arrears of interest, are due to Pepper and to Mrs. Gray, respectively, and sums are also due to Pepper for premiums of insurance and taxes paid by him; that Shepherd had been receiving $6,000 per annum as rent for the premises and the furniture in the house; that the incumbrances on the real estate in favor of Pepper and Mrs. Gray, with the arrears of taxes, amount to about $120,000, and are increasing at the rate of about $9,000 a year; that the real estate is an inadequate security for the sums charged upon it, and cannot be sold for a sum sufficient to meet even the existing liens on it, and will not yield from rents an adequate income on the sum charged upon it; that Shepherd is insolvent, and there are unsatisfied judgments of record against him in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, besides unsecured debts estimated by Shepherd to amount to $310,000; that Shepherd is unwilling and unable to make good the deficiency due to Pepper, after properly applying the net proceeds of the sale of the property; and that Bradley refused to sell the property vested in him as trustee under the first deed of trust, and has endeavored to delay and prevent its sale.

The prayer of the bill is for the appointment of a receiver to receive the rents due and to become due for lot 3 and the improvements upon it; for the appointment of a trustee or trustees to sell the whole of such lot and improvements; that the rents and the proceeds of the sale of lot 3 be applied first to pay said indebtedness to Pepper, with all interest, costs, charges and expenses due to him by reason of the premises; that Shepherd may discover the name of the holder of the legal title to said sub-lot A, and be restrained from receiving or disposing of any part of the rent paid or to become due for lot 3 and the improvements thereon; and for general relief.

A restraining order against Shepherd, as prayed for, was issued on the filing of the bill.

Bradley answered the bill, and took the ground that in the first bill filed by Pepper the latter had insisted upon his right to the sale of the property as described in the two deeds of trust made in his favor, and did not ask to have the defective description corrected, and had procured the property to be sold, and had purchased it and received a deed for it, and claimed title to it, by the description contained in those two deeds of trust. Bradley's answer also set up that Pepper had brought a suit at law, on the 20th of April, 1880, against Shepherd, to recover on the several promissory notes mentioned in the first two deeds of trust.

The bill was taken as confessed by Fitch, Mattingly, Alexander and Barker.

Mrs. Gray answered the bill, alleging that at the time the deed of trust in her favor was made she was informed and believed that the two prior deeds of trust covered only the property described in them, and that the deed of trust given to secure her was a second lien on the part of lot 3 described in those deeds of trust, and the first lien on the remaining part of that lot; that, relying on that information, which was true, she loaned to Shepherd the $85,000 on the security of that lot; that she had no knowledge or information that Pepper claimed that there was any accident, mistake or fraud in connection with the first two deeds of trust, or that they should have covered any property beyond what they actually covered; and that Pepper has no right to have the first two deeds of trust amended, extended or changed, as against her, or any right to any lien on any part of lot 3, as against her, except that part described in the first two deeds of trust. She objects to a sale of lot 3.

Cross and Bacon put in an answer to the bill; and the court, on the 1st of December, 1881, on a hearing, granted an injunction as prayed, against all of the defendants except Alexander and Barker, and appointed a receiver of the rents accrued and to become due. The order states that each of the defendants enjoined appealed from it. Johnston afterwards withdrew his appeal; and on the motion of Pepper the appeal of the other defendants was dismissed by the general term.

Shepherd put in an answer to the bill, on the 1st of June, 1882, denying that the bill filed by him was dismissed for want of jurisdiction; denying that the omission of sub-lot A from the first two deeds of trust was an accident or a fraud on his part or on that of his agents; and denying that Pepper has the right to have the deeds corrected so as to include sub-lot A; but admitting that he (Shepherd) executed the first two deeds of trust in the belief that the whole property covered by the house was embraced in them. The answer sets up that Pepper has no right to the rents of the house or to the rent of the furniture contained in it, and no interest in the premises except to have them sold and his claims paid out of the proceeds of sale; that the subject matter of the bill is embraced in the prior suit brought by Pepper, which is still pending; and that, if Pepper has any right to relief, he must seek it in that suit, by bill of review or otherwise.

On the 21st of July, 1882, Pepper amended his bill by averring that lot 3 was wholly insufficient security for the debt admitted by Shepherd to be due to Pepper and charged thereon, and could not be sold for a sum sufficient to meet the debt so admitted, and would not yield in rents an adequate income on the value of the same, even assuming such value to be equal to the amount of the debt admitted to be due to Pepper and charged on the lot. The amendment also stated that Philip died intestate, leaving surviving him a widow and four children, infants, whose names were given, and added the names of such children as defendants. It also stated that Pepper was willing to surrender, and did thereby surrender, for the purpose of a resale of the said real estate, any title in fee simple which he might have thereto by reason of the deed to him from Philip and Johnston, trustees; and that, for the purpose of reselling such real estate, he waived any interest, claim or title vested in him by that deed, and offered to make any conveyance which the court might deem proper or necessary to accomplish the purpose indicated.

The bill and amendments were answered by Davis, Fitch and Barker, and the amendments were answered by Cross, Bacon, Bradley and Mrs. Gray. The answer of Mrs. Gray alleged that it was not in the power of Pepper to make or carry out the offer contained in the amendments; that, if any title passed to him by the sale and the deed to him by Philip and Johnston, he had no right to bring this suit; and that if, on the contrary, no title passed to him by the sale, the offer contained in the amendments was a vain and useless form.

Shepherd also answered the amendments, alleging that the proposed offer by Pepper was no actual surrender of any interest or waiver of any right.

The order pro confesso as to Mattingly having been vacated, he put in a plea, setting up the sale and the deed to Pepper, the filing of the bill by Shepherd and of the cross-bill by Pepper, and the decree of October 30, 1880, and averring that Pepper, ever since the deed to him, had claimed to be the owner of the property in fee simple, and still so claimed.

The bill was taken as confessed against the wife of Shepherd; a guardian ad litem was appointed for the infant children of Philip, who put in an answer to the bill; Johnston and Bartlett also answered it and the amendments; issue was joined as to all the defendants who had answered; and the plea of Mattingly was ordered to stand as his answer.

Proofs were taken on both sides, the cause was heard by the court in special term, and afterwards, on the 24th of March, 1885, Shepherd presented to the court two petitions, wherein he set forth the bringing of a suit at law against him by Pepper, on the 20th of May, 1882, upon the promissory notes; that at the hearing he learned for the first time that Pepper claimed a personal decree against him, under the prayer in the bill for general relief; that, when the claim to such personal decree was made at the hearing, his personal liability upon the notes was barred by the Statute of Limitations, because the notes were all of them then more than three years overdue; and that he ought to be allowed to interpose that objection to a personal decree. He therefore prayed for a hearing on the subject of the right of Pepper to a personal decree against him, and to be allowed to take proof as to the fact of the pendency of the action at law; that the plaintiff might be required to elect between the pending action at law and his claim for a personal decree for a deficiency; that, if he elected to claim such personal decree, he might be required by amendment to make his bill a bill for that purpose, and Shepherd be allowed to answer or plead to it; that Shepherd be allowed a rehearing on the questions as to the disposition of the funds in the hands of the receiver, and as to interest upon the coupon notes; and that he be allowed to interpose by plea or answer the defense of the Statute of Limitations to a claim for a personal decree. These petitions were dismissed by the court.

On the 26th of March, 1885, the court in special term made a decree that, unless Shepherd should pay to Pepper, on or before the 1st of July, 1885, $35,000, with interest thereon at the rate of 9 per cent per annum from the 1st day of June, 1879, until paid and the further sum of $9,450, being the amount of six coupon notes, all dated June 1, 1874, signed by Shepherd, and representing six semi-annual installments of interest due by him on the principal sum of $35,000, with interest upon them at the rate of 6 per cent per annum until paid, namely, upon six sums of $1,575 each, one from December 1, 1876, one from June 1, 1877, one from December 1, 1877, one from June 1, 1878, one from December 1, 1878, and one from June 1, 1879, and also the sum of $10,000 due to Pepper, with interest thereon at the rate of 9 per cent per annum from March 22, 1880, until paid, and the further sum of $3,150, being the amount of seven coupon notes, all dated March 22, 1875, signed by Shepherd and representing seven semi-annual installments of interest due by him on the principal sum of $10,000, with interest on them at the rate of 6 per cent per annum until paid, namely, upon seven sums of $450 each, one from March 22, 1877, one from September 22, 1877, one from March 22, 1878, one from September 22, 1878, one from March 22, 1879, one from September 22, 1879, and one from March 22, 1880, and also the taxed costs of the suit, lot 3 in Shepherd's subdivision of square 164, with the buildings and improvements thereon, be sold at public auction, by Henry W. Garnett and John F. Hanna, as trustees. The decree prescribed what notice of sale was to be given and the terms of sale, and directed the proceeds to be brought into court. It also provided that the trustees, before July 1, 1885, should examine witnesses before the auditor of the court, to ascertain the relative values of the real estate covered by the first two deeds of trust, with the buildings and improvements thereon, and of the part described as sub-lot A in square 164, being the rear 28 feet 2½ inches of lot 3, with the buildings and improvements upon such sub-lot A; that, notwithstanding such inquiry, the sale should proceed; that the net proceeds of the sale which should appear to represent the value of that part of the real estate described in the first two deeds of trust, with the buildings and improvements thereon, after deducting therefrom the aliquot parts of the costs, commissions, expenses and charges of the suit chargeable against such part, should be applied toward the payment of the claims of Pepper, and the residue of such net proceeds should be applied toward the claims of Mrs. Gray; that, if the net proceeds of the property described in the first two deeds of trust should exceed the amount of the claims of Pepper, the excess should be applied towards paying the claims of Mrs. Gray, if the same should remain unsatisfied after applying the net proceeds of sub-lot A; that the net amount of rents in the hands of the receiver, after deducting costs, commissions, expenses and repairs, should be applied to the payment of the taxes theretofore paid by Pepper and the insurance premiums properly paid by him, and to the payment of taxes due and unpaid, and the residue of the receipts from rents should await the further order of the court; and that, if the net proceeds of the sale applicable to the claims of Pepper should prove insufficient to discharge them, he should recover from Shepherd whatever amount might remain due of the claims so decreed to be due by Shepherd to Pepper, after the application thereto of the net proceeds of sale, and should have execution therefor as at law.

Shepherd, Bartlett, Bacon and Cross appealed to the general term from this decree; Mrs. Gray appealed from so much of it as directed the sale of sub-lot A; and Pepper also appealed from it.

The court in general term, on the 29th of October, 1885, affirmed the decree of the special term of March 26, 1885, with these modifications: It directed that the inquiry as to the relative values of the two parcels of property should take place after the sale had been made; that, if the debt due to Mrs. Gray should be satisfied otherwise than by applying thereto her proper share of the proceeds of the sale, the entire proceeds of the sale of lot 3 should be applied to the payment of Pepper's debt and interest, or if the proportion of such proceeds set apart by the decree to satisfy Mrs. Gray's debt should more than suffice to satisfy it, then any surplus of such proceeds should be paid over to Pepper on account of his debt and interest; and that the balance of rents remaining in the receiver's hands, after deducting the payments to be made out of such rents as specified in the decree, and after paying interest to Pepper on the sums advanced by him for taxes and insurance premiums, should be paid by the receiver to Pepper on account of any balance of principal and interest, as decreed, that should remain due after applying the proceeds of lot 3, as directed by the decree to be apportioned and applied. It also affirmed the orders dismissing the two petitions filed by Shepherd on the 24th of March, 1885, and charged Shepherd with the costs of the appeal.

Shepherd, Cross, Bacon, Bartlett and Mrs. Gray appealed in open court to this court from the decree of October 29, 1885, the appeal was allowed, and the amount of the supersedeas bond on behalf of the defendants other than Mrs. Gray was fixed at $1,000, and that on her behalf at $100. The appeal of Pepper was abandoned. The defendants other than Mrs. Gray gave the bond required of them. Mrs. Gray did not give the necessary bond; and, although the record was filed in this court on the 9th of October, 1886, she took no action to perfect her appeal to this court until the case came on for hearing, on the 26th of November, 1889, when she offered to the court to be filed a proper bond in the sum of $100. No citation was necessary on her appeal, as she had taken it in open court, the record had been duly filed in this court, on October 9, 1886, and, under the circumstances, we will permit the bond on behalf of Mrs. Gray to be filed nunc pro tunc as of the 26th of November, 1889, and her appeal to stand as perfected.

At the time the loans were made by Pepper to Shepherd, Shepherd claimed to own, and agreed to give as security therefor, the land and improvements situated at the northeast corner of Connecticut Avenue and K Street, fronting 48 feet 9 inches on K Street and 109 feet ¾ inch on Connecticut Avenue, containing 8,466.23 square feet, known as lot No. 3 in Shepherd's subdivision of lots in square No. 164. The improvements covered nearly the whole of that lot, the portion not so covered being enclosed and used in connection with the house. It was the intention of both Pepper and Shepherd that the whole of this property should be included in the deeds of trust; and if Pepper had any knowledge, information or suspicion to the contrary, he would not have loaned any of the money. Shepherd testifies that when he executed the deeds of trust he supposed that they embraced the whole property. On the piece of land known as sub lot A, being that part of lot 8 which fronts 28 feet 2½ inches on Connecticut Avenue, and has such a depth that it contains 3,656 square feet, there had been actually constructed at the time a portion of the dwelling-house, which includes the coal-vaults, the laundry, the servants' apartments and a portion of the picture gallery.

It is not denied by Shepherd that the debts due by him to Pepper are bona fide debts, and are overdue; and their existence and amounts are satisfactorily proved. The sole defense of Shepherd amounts to this, that by the uncertainty and delay of the law, and by mistakes in the legal proceedings, Pepper has lost all right to the execution of the trusts created for his benefit; and it is urged that, by reason of the proceedings in the prior suit brought by Pepper, he is estopped from maintaining the present bill.

The opinion of the court in general term, delivered by Mr. Justice Merrick, is reported in 4 Mackey, 269. It states that when the decree of May 12, 1879, in the suit brought by Pepper, came to be made, there was by inadvertence an error in the description of the property in the decree, by leaving a blank in the designation of the trust deed, the result of which was that the decree was uncertain in itself and practically void on account of the uncertainty in its description of the property. As Bradley was trustee in each of the first two deeds of trust, and as the decree appointed Johnston to be trustee in the place and stead of Bradley in but one deed of trust, which was so described that it could not be identified, the whole transaction became uncertain and void. It resulted from this, as the opinion states, that there was no effective appointment of a trustee, and no effective sale; and the bill in the suit brought by Shepherd was dismissed on the ground that there was no cloud upon the title, because the sale itself was a nullity. The opinion further states that, while Shepherd averred in his answer that the sale to Pepper was a nullity and passed no title, and Mrs. Gray by her answer averred the same thing, they were now taking the ground that Pepper had no right to have a second sale of the property, because, having bought under the first sale, he must abide thereby; in other words, that, although he acquired no title under the first sale, he is estopped by that sale from having it sold again. The opinion adds that this is a defense which a court of equity cannot entertain. It also considers the point taken by Mrs. Gray, that inasmuch as she is the first incumbrancer on sub-lot A, Pepper cannot have the whole property sold without first discharging her entire claim, and says that the two pieces of property had been held in a general ownership; that the testimony showed that to sever them would be destructive of the value of both; that, although Pepper had not brought home to the knowledge of Mrs. Gray the equitable mortgage as between him and Shepherd, yet the fact of the building being upon the two lots, and the further fact that, if there is to be a sale, the whole property ought to be sold together, because the value of both would be decreased if they were sold separately, constituted a case where a court of equity ought to order all the property to be sold together; that it would be inequitable to compel Pepper to redeem the whole of the debt to Mrs. Gray as a condition of the sale of sub-lot A, because Mrs. Gray is entitled to only an inconsiderable portion of the incumbered premises, except in subordination to the claims under the first two trust deeds; and that the decree of the special term, in giving to Mrs. Gray such portion of the proceeds of sale as should be determined to be the value of her interest in sub-lot A, upon testimony as to the relative values of the two properties, gave to her all that she was entitled to in equity. As to the rents and profits, the opinion said that wherever property subject to a lien has been brought within the domain of a court of equity, and a receiver of it is appointed, the rents and profits in the hands of the receiver will be applied, along with the corpus of the fund, to satisfy the lien, after paying charges, such as taxes and insurance; that the special term properly directed the application of the rents to pay off premiums of insurance and taxes which had accrued; but that the decree ought to be modified by directing that the residue of the rents should go to make up any deficiency in the proceeds of the sale of the two properties to satisfy the corpus of the debts, recognizing the right of Mrs. Gray to her share of the proceeds of sale according to the apportionment before indicated, but dedicating the rents primarily to the satisfaction of the debts due to Pepper, together with the proceeds of the sale of the primary property upon which the house is built. We concur in these views of the general term.

The bill in the first suit brought by Pepper was a bill merely to substitute a trustee in the place of the trustees in the first two deeds of trust. The prayer of the bill was that such trustee be appointed, with directions and authority forthwith to execute all the trusts reposed by the first two deeds of trust in the trustees mentioned therein. It does not pray that an officer of the court shall make the sale, or that the trustee to be appointed by the court shall make the sale under any power to be given to him by the court; but it prays that he may execute the trusts under the deeds of trust. Moreover, the decree of May 12, 1879, declares that it is made "without prejudice to all other rights of defendant." This reserved the right of Shepherd to be heard on the question of the right of Pepper to foreclose under the deeds of trust. The present suit is a suit for foreclosure, and in it all defenses to the claims of Pepper were open to be made by Shepherd. In respect of parties, in respect of subject matter, and in respect of the relief prayed for, the two bills brought by Pepper are different; and none of the questions involved in the pleadings in the present suit were involved in or adjudicated in the first suit brought by Pepper. Still further, the uncertainty and inoperative character of the decree of May 12, 1879, make the whole suit fruitless and of no more effect than if it had never been commenced.

For the same reason, Pepper cannot be regarded as having made any election, in the first suit brought by him, to enforce a sale of the property described in the first two deeds of trust aside from a sale with it of sub-lot A, so as to be estopped from now asserting a lien upon sub-lot A. When the first bill was filed by Pepper, he knew that Shepherd had merely a tax title to sub-lot A; and Shepherd, in his answer to that bill, averred that the title to sub-lot A never belonged to him, and that he theretofore purchased what is called a tax title to sub-lot A, but it turned out to be void and of no effect. Therefore, Pepper could not at that time have attempted to reform the first two deeds of trust so as to include sub-lot A, because Shepherd then had no title to that sub-lot. But the fact that both Pepper and Shepherd agree that it was intended by them that the first two deeds of trust should include sub-lot A, gave Pepper a right to assert an equitable mortgage against that sub-lot; so that afterwards, when Shepherd bought in the proprietary title to it, as the evidence shows he did, Pepper was for the first time in a position to assert a lien against it.

It is, we think, very plain that Pepper acquired no title by the deed to him under the sale by the trustees, and that the decree dismissing the bill filed by Shepherd had no effect to establish any legal title in Pepper to the real estate in question. Even if resort may not be had to the opinion of Mr. Justice James, still it is manifest that the propositions stated in that opinion are sound, namely, that if the decree of May 12, 1879, was uncertain on its face, in the respects and to the extent before mentioned, the alleged title of Pepper, through the deed from the trustees to him, was not a cloud upon the title of Shepherd, and therefore the court could not grant Shepherd the relief he prayed for in the bill filed by him, and that bill was properly dismissed.

This view of the case is taken by Pepper, in his bill in the present suit, because he says therein, in regard to the decree of May 12, 1879, and the opinion of Mr. Justice James, "that, as it appears by the said opinion of the court that the said decree did not give to the said Johnston any power to sell, said decree was in effect an adjudication upon and favorable to the averments in said Shepherd's bill of complaint in said court that said sale was made without authority and the deed of said Philip and Johnston was null and void, and, as the said Shepherd has always averred and insisted that said decree was void and said sale a nullity, and to the end that said lot 3 of said Shepherd's subdivision may be sold as a whole, the complainant files this bill in order that an undisputed title to the whole property may be obtained by means of foreclosure proceedings under the order and decree of this court." Then the bill prays accordingly, "that a trustee or trustees may be appointed by this court to sell the whole of lot 3, in A. R. Shepherd's subdivision of square numbered 164, with the improvements thereon." Therefore, it is not true that Pepper is still asserting a legal title in himself.

We think that Pepper is entitled to have the whole of lot 3 sold. It was omitted at least by accident from the first two trust deeds, when both parties supposed they covered it. Lot 3 embraces not only sub-lot A, but the property covered by the first two deeds of trust. Shepherd, in his answer to the first bill filed by Pepper, said "that, in his opinion, it would be impossible to make a sale and division of the said property under the said deed of trust without irreparable injury to, if not total destruction of, a large portion of the dwelling-house which is erected upon the said lot; . . . that the said dwelling-house would be entirely incomplete without the addition of that portion called the 'picture-gallery,' that the servants' apartments and the laundry and drying room, etc., etc., are underneath the said portion of said dwelling-house, as well as the heating apparatus for a large portion of the house; and that, if the said lot A, which is not included in the deed of trust of the said complainant, shall be separated from that portion which is included in the said deed of trust to the complainant, a dividing line would not only take off the said 'picture-gallery,' but would take off and destroy a portion of the back part of the main dwelling-house."

In regard to Mrs. Gray, the letter to her, written by Mr. Brown, of the firm of Fitch, Fox & Brown, who were negotiating for her the loan to Shepherd, the letter being dated April 18, 1876, speaks of the loan as one "to be secured by a second mortgage, the prior mortgage being for $45,000." Besides this, the first two deeds of trust were recorded respectively June 8, 1874, and March 24, 1875, and they conveyed, to secure Pepper, the premises described in them, "together with all the improvements, ways, easements, rights, privileges and appurtenances to the same belonging or in anywise appertaining, and all the estate, right, title, interest and claim whatsoever, whether at law or in equity, of the said parties of the first part, of, in, to or out of the said piece or parcel of land and premises." The improvements and easements in question were visibly necessary for the dwelling-house as then constructed, and were visibly upon, or required the use of, sub-lot A, as stated by Shepherd as before recited.

Mrs. Gray is only a mortgagee, and not the owner in fee, of sub-lot A; and her interest in the property is subject to the prior and subsequent interests of other parties, as those interests are usually ascertained and administered by a court of equity for the benefit of all concerned. It is not equitable that she should be allowed to use her mortgage on sub-lot A to prevent a sale of the entire lot 3. Her only right can be to have the proceeds of sub-lot A applied first to the payment of her debt; and that right is secured by the decree appealed from.

The present bill is one to obtain a decree for the sale of incumbered premises and the application of the proceeds of sale to discharge the incumbrances according to priority. The debts to Pepper and to Mrs. Gray are overdue; and under such circumstances a court of equity, on the application of a junior incumbrancer, will provide for the sale of the entire incumbered property, if the circumstances of the case show that the interests of the mortgagor and of the incumbrancers require the sale.

Finley v. Bank of the United States, 24 U. S.

11 Wheat. 304, 306 [6: 490]; Hagan v. Walker, 55 U. S. 14 How. 29, 87, 88 [14: 312, 316]; Jerome v. McCarter, 94 U. S. 784, 785, 786, 740 [24: 136, 137, 138]; Hill v. Farmers & M. National Bank, 97 U. S. 450, 453, 454 [24: 1051, 1053]; Woodworth v. Blair, 112 U. S. 8 [28: 615]; Hefner v. Northwestern Life Ins. Co., 123 U. S. 747, 754 [31: 309, 312]; Vanderkemp v. Shelton, 11 Paige, 28. This authority is properly exercised in the case of deeds of trust, where all the incumbrances are due, and where the plaintiff has a first lien on some of the property sought to be sold, and where all the incumbrancers are parties to the suit. Here Pepper has a first lien on the bulk of the property sought to be sold, and a second lien, as decreed, on the small remaining portion; and the debts secured by the first two deeds of trust were all overdue when the bill in this case was filed, as well as the debt due to Mrs. Gray. Under such circumstances, the mere non-assent of Mrs. Gray ought not to prevent the court from doing what is equitable in regard to the claims of Pepper, as well as those of herself.

There was no error in the dismissal of the two petitions of Shepherd, filed in March, 1885, nor in entering a personal decree against him for any deficiency which should remain after exhausting the property covered by the deeds of trust.

The fact of the bringing of the suit at law upon the notes, by Pepper against Shepherd, in April, 1880, was set up in the answer of Bradley to the bill in the present suit, and was therefore in issue; but it was not shown in defense that Shepherd had ever been served with process in any such suit at law, or had appeared in it, voluntarily or otherwise. Moreover, the principal notes given to Pepper were not barred by limitation when the bill in this case was filed. As to the interest notes or coupons, although some of the unpaid ones for each of such two principal notes had been overdue more than three years, when the bill was filed, yet it makes a claim to recover all the interest, and Shepherd does not, in his answer, set up the Statute of Limitations as a bar to any part of the principal or interest claimed.

The bill in this suit prays for general relief, and a decree for a deficiency is a necessary incident of a foreclosure suit in equity. It is provided as follows by section 808 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia: "The proceeding to enforce any lien shall be by bill or petition in equity, and the decree, besides subjecting the thing upon which the lien has attached to the satisfaction of the plaintiff's demand against the defendant, shall adjudge that the plaintiff recover his demand against the defendant, and that he may have execution thereof as at law." This provision was interpreted by this court in the case of Dodge v. Freedman's Savings and Trust Co. 106 U. S. 445 [27: 206], where it was held that it authorized a decree in personam against the debtor for the balance remaining due after the proceeds of the sale of lands covered by a mortgage or a deed of trust in the nature thereof had been applied to the satisfaction of the debt. The present cause is of the same character of foreclosure proceeding as that involved in the case cited. It was proper for the court, under the bill as it stands and the Statute on the subject, to make a personal decree against Shepherd for a deficiency; and the matter of granting the prayers of his petitions filed in March, 1885, was a question of discretion in the court below, and not reviewable.

As to the question of the disposition of the rents in the hands of the receiver, we think the action of the court below was proper. The pecuniary condition of Shepherd, his failure to pay taxes, premiums of insurance or interest, the inadequacy of the property to pay the claims of Pepper and Mrs. Gray, and the diversion of the income from rents, from making such payments, to the use of Shepherd, up to the time of the appointment of the receiver, were adequate grounds for the appointment of the receiver. Kountze v. Omaha Hotel Co. 107 U. S. 378, 395 [27: 609, 616]; Grant v. Phoenix Life Insurance Co. 121 U. S. 105 [30: 905]. The court, through its receiver, took possession of the rents in order to preserve them for that party to the suit who should ultimately be found to be equitably entitled to them. Hitz v. Jenks, 123 U. S. 297, 306 [31: 156, 159]. The various reports of the receiver contained in the record, as to his payment of taxes, premiums of insurance, and the expenses of repairs on the building, show the necessity of his appointment. It would be grossly unjust, on the facts developed in this case, to appropriate the rents in the hands of the receiver to the use of Shepherd.

It is contended on behalf of Shepherd that the decree appealed from is erroneous, because it allows interest at the rate of 9 per centum per annum on the principal of the notes, from June 1, 1879, and March 22, 1880, respectively, until paid; and it is urged that the interest should have been fixed at the rate of 6 per cent from the date of the decree, March 26, 1885, on the ground that that was the rate of interest fixed by the Statute on judgments and decrees.

Section 713 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia provides as follows: "The rate of interest upon judgments or decrees, and upon the loan or forbearance of any money, goods or things in actions, shall continue to be six dollars upon one hundred dollars for one year, and after that rate for a greater or less sum, or for a longer or shorter term, except as provided in this chapter." Section 829 of said Revised Statutes provides as follows: "Upon all judgments rendered on the common-law side of the court in actions founded on contracts, interest at the rate of six per centum per annum shall be awarded on the principal sum due until the judgment shall be satisfied, and the amount which is to bear interest and the time from which it is to be paid shall be ascertained by the verdict of the jury sworn in the cause." Section 714 authorizes parties to contract in writing for the payment of interest at the rate of 10 per cent per annum.

It is urged that the decree is a decree which fixes the amount of each of the debts due by Shepherd, and says that those sums are "hereby decreed to be due and payable" by Shepherd to Pepper, with interest, etc.; that this is the language of a judgment; and that almost the same language is employed in reference to the accrued interest. The decree provides that, if the net proceeds of the sale shall prove insufficient to discharge the claims of Pepper, he shall have and recover of Shepherd whatever amount may remain due of the claims decreed to be due by Shepherd to him, after the application thereto of the net proceeds of sale, and shall have execution therefor as at law. It is contended, therefore, that as the decree ascertained the amount of the debt still due, and fixed the rate of interest on it, it thereafter drew interest by virtue of the decree, and not by virtue of the terms of the contract, because the contract was merged in the decree.

We think, however, that on the face of the decree the court did not intend to, and did not, merge the contract in the decree; but merely fixed the amount due according to the terms of the contract, on the payment of which, before the day fixed, the decree would not go into effect, but the case would be dismissed. The Statute has no application, except as to the rate of interest charged on the deficiency which shall be found to exist after applying the net proceeds of sale to the debt; and the decree does not provide for interest in excess of six per cent per annum on such deficiency.

In regard to allowing interest on the principal of the notes at the rate of 9 per cent per annum until paid, it is to be said that such was the contract in each note.

It was stated at the bar that Hanna, one of the trustees appointed by the decree of the special term to make the sale, had died. If so, the court below will have power to appoint a new one in his place.

The decree in general term is therefore affirmed.

Mr. Justice Miller :

I dissent from so much of the judgment of the court in this case as requires the entire property to be sold together and makes provision afterwards for dividing the proceeds according to the valuation that may be made to ascertain how much of the money should go to appellant, Maria Gray.

I am of opinion that she has a right to have the piece of ground, on which her mortgage is declared to be the first lien, sold separately, so that she can bid whatever sum she may see proper in satisfaction of her mortgage. If this sum should be more than would satisfy the mortgage, of course the excess would go to the satisfaction of Pepper's debt. If it should sell for less, then Pepper has no interest in it, and I see no reason why she should be compelled to compete with Pepper or anybody else in purchasing the entire property, which is worth four or five times as much as her single piece is worth, in order to make that piece bring its full value on the sale.

MONTRESSOR T. ALLEN, Adm'r. of STEPHEN DOW, Deceased.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. Mills v. Dow's Administrator, 423-433.)

Lex loci—recital in deed—consideration, when may be contradicted—proof of separate contract—demand and notice—agreement to assume payment, when an agreement to pay—absolute agreement.

1. The law of the State where the subject of the contract is situated, and where defendant, the contracting party, resides, and where the contract was made and the suit to enforce it is brought, governs in expounding and enforcing the contract and as to the rule of damages for a breach of it.
2. In Massachusetts, a recital in a deed, acknowledging payment of the consideration stated, is only prima facie proof, and is subject to be controlled or rebutted by other evidence.
3. An acknowledgment in an instrument of $15,000 as the consideration, "which said sum of fifteen thousand dollars the said Dow and Pratt have this day advanced and paid to said Mills," is ambiguous, and does not show actual prior or simultaneous payment.
4. Evidence of a promise by defendants, as a part of such consideration of the instrument, to pay the debts which the plaintiff owed to the persons named in it, is admissible; and the refusal of the defendants to pay those debts on demand was a breach of their contract.
5. The issue being whether the consideration had been paid and whether the obligation of the defendants was broken, it was competent for the plaintiff to show by parol that, after such persons had become entitled to payment, they demanded payment from him; that he notified the defendants and made demand on them; and that they neglected to pay.
6. The agreement of the defendants to assume the contract between the plaintiff and the company, and that they would save him harmless from any and all liability by reason of his contracts with the persons named, was broken by a failure to pay such parties, to whom the plaintiff was liable, and it was not necessary to a breach that the plaintiff should show that he had first paid those parties.
7. The agreement is not merely one to indemnify the plaintiff from damage arising out of his liability, but is also one to assume his contracts and to discharge him from his liability, and is an absolute personal agreement.

Submitted Dec. 9, 1899. Decided March 3, 1890.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Massachusetts to review a judgment for defendant, in an action to recover moneys on a contract of guaranty and assignment, etc. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Geo. S. Hale and A. G. Stanchfield, for plaintiff in error:

The subject matter of the assignment was in Massachusetts, the defendant a resident in that State, the contract made there, the suit pending there, and the law of Massachusetts is to govern in enforcing and expounding it and to be the rule of damages for breach.

The plaintiff is not precluded from showing the facts as to the consideration.

A grantor is not absolutely bound by the consideration or the acknowledgment of its payment expressed in his deed. These are recitals merely, which afford only prima facie proof, which is subject to be controlled or rebutted by other evidence.

An action will lie against the grantee for a part of the consideration which he has failed in fact to secure or pay, although payment of the whole may be acknowledged by the terms of the deed.

Mr. Justice Blatchford delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 23d of October, 1878, the following instrument in writing was executed by Stephen C. Mills on the one part, and Stephen Dow and Nathan P. Pratt on the other:

123 U. S.

"Whereas Stephen C. Mills, of Stark, in the State of Maine, is the contractor for the building of the Boston and Mystic Valley Railroad Company's railroad bed, bridges, etc., etc.; and whereas the said railroad company has agreed to purchase and cause to be canceled the said contract, but said company has found it inconvenient or impossible to pay me the agreed price for such purchase; and whereas Stephen Dow, of Woburn, and Nathan P. Pratt, of Reading, have agreed to purchase of me the said contract in the interest of said railroad company and for the said company's benefit and profit, and to receive of me an assignment of said contract in trust for said company—that is to say, as collateral security for payment to them by said company of the sum of fifteen thousand dollars, the purchasing price, and interest thereon at the rate of six per centum per annum, for such time as the same shall remain unpaid, which said sum of fifteen thousand dollars the said Dow and Pratt have this day advanced and paid to said Mills for said contract and all sums that may hereafter become due thereunder; and whereas the said Mills has sublet some of the work, as per contracts marked 'B,' 'C,' 'D,' 'E,' and hereto annexed, with Hall and Burgess, J. M. Ellisland Savage and McCabe; and whereas the said Dow and Pratt assume said contract in their capacities aforesaid; and whereas by the terms of said contract 'A' ten per cent of the monthly estimate is retained in the hands of the company; the said Dow and Pratt as aforesaid accept the assignment of said contract, with the understanding and agreement that they will and shall well and truly save harmless the said Mills from any and all liability by reason of said contracts, the ten per cent reserved, and any claim by reason of said Ellis, Hall and Burgess and Savage and McCabe agreements before mentioned: Now, know all men that I, Stephen C. Mills, of Stark, in the State of Maine, the person named in the contract hereto annexed, marked 'A,' in consideration of fifteen thousand dollars to me paid by Stephen Dow, of Woburn, in the County of Middlesex and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and Nathan P. Pratt, of Reading, in said County of Middlesex, in their capacity aforesaid, have assigned and do hereby assign, sell, convey and set over to the said Dow and Pratt as aforesaid, and their assigns, all my interest in the within and before-mentioned contract marked 'A,' and every clause, article or thing therein contained, and I do hereby constitute and appoint them, the said Dow and Pratt, trustees as aforesaid, my attorney or attorneys, in my name, but to their own use as aforesaid, to take all legal means which may be proper for the complete recovery and enjoyment of the assigned premises, with power of substitution. In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this twenty-third (23) day of October, A. D. 1878.

"P. Webster Loche. Nathan P. Pratt."

The contract of Mills with the Boston and Mystic Valley Railroad Company, to build and equip the road of that company from Somerville to Wilmington, was made on the 4th of May, 1878. On the 6th of May, 1878, the plaintiff, under the name of S. C. Mills & Co., made a sub-contract with H. C. Hall and J. H. Burgess, being the Hall and Burgess named in the instrument of October 23, 1878, to grade the road-bed of the railroad from Wilmington to Somerville. The road had not been completed on the 23d of October, 1878. Dow and Pratt were stockholders and directors in the company. Of the $15,000 mentioned in the instrument of October 23, 1878, they paid to Mills only $10,000. They did not pay any part of $11,048.08, which was due to Hall and Burgess for work done under their contract, partly before and partly after the instrument of October 23, 1878, was executed. Mills brought this suit against Dow and Pratt, in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Massachusetts, to recover those sums. Issue was joined by Dow. Pratt did not appear and was defaulted. At the trial before a jury the court directed a verdict for the defendant Dow, and a judgment accordingly was entered, to review which the plaintiff has brought a writ of error. Since the writ was brought, Dow has died, and his administrator has been substituted as defendant in error in his stead.

Dow was president of the railroad company, and as such executed the contract between the company and Mills for the construction and equipment of the road. The sub-contractors named in the instrument of October 23, 1878, continued work on the road under their contracts up to the middle of December, 1878, and furnished the labor and materials set forth in the declaration and in the accounts annexed thereto, so that there was a balance exceeding $6,000 due from Mills to Hall and Burgess, partly for work done prior to October 23, 1878, and partly for work done subsequently to that date. Dow was informed of the amount so due to the sub-contractors, and that the same had never been paid.

The bill of exceptions, after stating the foregoing facts, sets forth that the plaintiff offered to show by Hall, for the purpose of proving an independent oral contract based on an alleged liability of Dow as stockholder, that Dow repeatedly promised Hall, in 1879 and subsequently, that he would pay the amount claimed to be due to Hall and Burgess, but the court refused to admit the evidence at that stage of the case, on the ground that there was no evidence of a consideration for the promise, and that the liability, and the fact that Dow was a stockholder, must first be shown; that the plaintiff offered to show, by his own evidence, that the consideration of the instrument of October 23, 1878, was the payment of $15,000; that the defendants promised to pay him that sum as such consideration and had paid only $10,000 of it, the plaintiff claiming that, by the terms of the instrument, the defendants were bound to pay the whole of such consideration, and that, on proof that the consideration was $15,000, and was partially unpaid, he would be entitled to recover; that the court ruled that the inquiry was irrelevant, on the pleadings and proofs as they then stood; that the plaintiff offered further to show that, as a part of the consideration of the instrument, the defendants promised to pay the debts the plaintiff owed to Hall and others named in the instrument; and that the court refused to admit the evidence.

The bill of exceptions states, also, that there was evidence tending to show that the defendants were stockholders and directors of the company, and Dow was its president, from May 1, 1878, to June 1, 1879; that Hall had authority from the plaintiff to collect from the defendants the amounts due to the sub-contractors; that Dow, at the request of the plaintiff, paid to one or more of the sub-contractors, subsequently to October 23, 1878, the amount due them for work done on the road, and had also paid to the plaintiff the amount of a judgment recovered against the latter by Savage and McCabe, in a suit brought by them subsequently to October 23, 1878, for work done by them under their sub-contract, which amount the plaintiff never paid to Savage and McCabe, and no claim is made for it in this suit; that, before this suit was brought, the sub-contractors demanded their pay from the plaintiff, showing him a statement of their account, and also made a demand on the defendants, and the plaintiff made a like demand on them; that, as between the plaintiff and the sub-contractors, there was no dispute as to the amount due; that the company voted to stop the work of construction on the road about the middle of December, 1878, and never resumed the work of construction after that date; that Hall and Burgess did not complete their contract within the time stipulated in it, for the reason, among others, that the company did not meet its payments and never secured the right of way for the portion not constructed by it; and that no evidence was introduced by the plaintiff that he had paid any portion of the sums due the sub-contractors named in the instrument of October 23, 1878. The plaintiff having closed his case, the defendant Dow contended that the plaintiff could not recover without first showing some actual payment or injury other than his liability to Hall and Burgess, so due and made known to the defendants; and that the same had not been paid. The court ruled that there was no competent evidence to sustain the plaintiff's case, and directed a verdict for the defendant Dow.

The bill of exceptions further states that the plaintiff duly excepted at the trial to such rulings, refusals to rule, and direction of the court.

The plaintiff alleges as error (1) the refusal of the court to admit the evidence offered as to the consideration of $15,000, as to the promise to pay the balance of it, and as to the promise to pay the debts due to Hall and Burgess; (2) the ruling that the plaintiff could not recover without showing some actual payment or injury, other than his liability to Hall and Burgess so due and made known to the defendants; (3) the ruling that there was no competent evidence to sustain the plaintiff's case; and (4) the withdrawal of the case from the jury and the direction of a verdict for the defendant Dow.

As the subject matter of the instrument of October 23, 1878, was in Massachusetts, and the defendant Dow was a resident there, and the contract was made there, and the suit was brought there, the law of that State is to govern in expounding and enforcing the contract and in determining the rule of damages for a breach of it.

It is contended by the defendant that the instrument contains an admission of the receipt of the entire $15,000; and the question on this branch of the case is whether the plaintiff is precluded from showing the true state of facts. It is well settled in Massachusetts that a recital in a deed, acknowledging payment of the consideration stated, is only prima facie proof and is subject to be controlled or rebutted by other evidence. Paige v. Sherman, 6 Gray, 511, 513; Wilkinson v. Scott, 17 Mass. 249; Carr v. Doolley, 119 Mass. 294, 296.

Independently of this, the expression in the instrument which is claimed to be an acknowledgment of the receipt of the $15,000, namely, "which said sum of fifteen thousand dollars the said Dow and Pratt have this day advanced and paid to said Mills," is ambiguous, and does not show actual prior or simultaneous payment. Goldshede v. Swan, 1 Exch. 154.

So, too, the evidence of a promise by the defendants, as a part of the consideration of the instrument, to pay the debts which the plaintiff owed to Hall and others named in it, was admissible; and the refusal of the defendants to pay those debts on demand was a breach of their contract. Clark v. Deahon, 12 Cush. 589, 591.

The issue being whether the consideration had been paid and whether the obligation of the defendants was broken, it was competent for the plaintiff to show by parol that, after Hall and Burgess had finished their work under their sub-contract, they stated their account to the plaintiff and demanded payment from him; that he notified the defendants and made demand on them; and that they neglected to pay. Such demand, and a neglect on their part to pay, tended to support the case of the plaintiff.

The balance due by the plaintiff to Hall and Burgess was $11,048.08, with interest from January 1, 1879; and that was the amount of the liability of the plaintiff to them under his contract with them. The agreement of the defendants, in the instrument of October 23, 1878, is that they assume the contract between the plaintiff and the company, and that they will well and truly save the plaintiff harmless from any and all liability by reason of his contracts with Hall and Burgess, Ellis, and Savage and McCabe, "the ten per cent reserved," and any claim by reason of such contracts.

The agreement to assume the contract, in connection with the further agreement to save the plaintiff harmless from liability, was broken by a failure to pay the parties to whom the plaintiff was liable, and it was not necessary to a breach that the plaintiff should show that he had first paid those parties. Braman v. Douse, 12 Cush. 227; Locke v. Homer, 131

Mass. 98; Drury v. Tremont Improvement Co. 13 Allen, 168, 171; Stewart v. Clark, 11 Met. 884; Preble v. Baldwin, 6 Cush. 549; Smith v. Pond, 11 Gray, 284; Paper Stock Disinfecting Co. v. Boston Disinfecting Co. 147 Mass. 318, 6 New Eng. Rep. 606.

By the instrument in question, the defendants took the place of the plaintiff, and became, after the instrument was executed, principals in the work of constructing the railroad; and their acceptance of the assignment and the conditions preceding it included the sub-contracts and what was due and to become due upon them. The contract is not merely one to indemnify the plaintiff from damage arising out of his liability, but is an agreement to assume his contracts and to discharge him from his liability. Gilbert v. Wiman, 1 N. Y. 550; Noble v. Arnold, 23 Ohio St. 264, 271; Carr v. Roberts, 5 Barn. & Ad. 78; Chace v. Hinman, 8 Wend. 452; Rockefeller v. Donnelly, 8 Cow. 623; Randall v. Roper, 27 L. J. N. S. Q. B. 266; Warwick v. Richardson, 10 Mees. & W. 284; Port v. Jackson, 17 Johns. 289; Wicker v. Hoppock, 73 U. S. 6 Wall. 94 [18: 752]; Lathrop v. Atwood, 21 Conn. 117, 125.

The case is not open to the objection that the plaintiff endeavored to extend and enlarge by parol the provisions of a written instrument, under the guise of proving its consideration; and the cases on that subject do not apply.

Although the instrument in question states that the defendants have agreed to receive from the plaintiff an assignment of the plaintiff's contract with the railroad company "in trust for said company;" that the defendants "assume said contract in their capacities aforesaid;" that they have paid the $15,000 "in their capacity aforesaid," and the assignment is made to them "as aforesaid;" and that the plaintiff appoints them, "trustees as aforesaid," his attorneys; and although they "as aforesaid accept the assignment," their agreement to save the plaintiff harmless from any and all liability by reason of the contracts named is an absolute personal agreement on their part.

The judgment is reversed, and the case is remanded to the Circuit Court with a direction to award a new trial.

DEWITT C. BLAIR, Trustee.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 534-541.)

Judgments, when liens—property of railroad company, not subject to trust—rights of creditor—transfer, when not illegal—notice to bondholders—bonds of railroad negotiable—trust property—mortgage and sale.

1. Judgments become liens only from the time they are rendered, or notice thereof is filed in the register's office of the county where the property is situated. They are subordinate to any prior mortgage upon the property.

NOTE.—As to negotiability of railroad bonds, see note to White v. Vermont & Mass. R. Co. 16: 221. As to lien of a mortgage on after-acquired property, see note to Pennock v. Coe, 16: 436.

133 U. S.

2. The property of a railroad company is not held under any such trust to apply it to the payment of its debts as to restrict its use for any other lawful purpose, it matters not how meritorious the demand of the creditor may be.
3. The creditor must obtain a lien upon the property of the company, or security in some other form, or he will have to take his chances with all other creditors to obtain payment in the ordinary course of legal proceedings for the collection of debts.
4. The objection that the transfer by the old company of its entire property to the new company was illegal and ultra vires, and therefore to be disregarded, cannot be availed of by the appellant, for he has proceeded against the new company and obtained, upon the assumed validity of such transfer, a decree that it pay his judgment, which is founded upon a demand that company agreed to assume as part of the consideration of the transfer.
5. If the parties who took the bonds issued by the St. Louis, Hannibal and Keokuk Railroad Company had notice, actual or constructive, of the demand of the complainant, it would not have affected their rights as that demand was not then in judgment, and created no lien upon the property of the company, nor any restriction upon the company's right to use it for any lawful purpose.
6. The bonds given to raise the necessary funds to complete the road of the company, and secured by the mortgage, were negotiable instruments, and in the hands of the purchasers cannot be impeached for any neglect of the company issuing them to pay the demands of other creditors.
7. The doctrine that the property of a railroad company is a trust fund for the payment of its debts only means that the property must first be appropriated to the payment of the debts of the company before any portion of it can be distributed to the stockholders.
8. The doctrine that the property is so affected by the indebtedness of the company that it cannot be sold, transferred or mortgaged to bona fide purchasers for a valuable consideration, except subject to the liability of being appropriated to pay that indebtedness, has no existence.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Missouri dismissing a cross-bill, filed to obtain priority for a judgment over a mortgage, in a suit for the foreclosure of the mortgage. Affirmed.

Reported below, 25 Fed. Rep. 684, 27 Fed. Rep. 176.

Statement by Mr. Justice Field:

On the 16th of February, 1867, the St. Louis and Keokuk Railroad Company was incorporated by the Legislature of Missouri to construct and operate a railroad from some suitable point on the North Missouri Railroad, not exceeding thirty miles west of St. Charles, in St. Charles County, to some point near the mouth of the Des Moines River, on the northern boundary of the State. Under its charter the company located its road between the points designated and constructed a portion of it and graded other portions, and in this work expended several hundred thousand dollars.

The appellant, Josiah Fogg, held a demand against this company for work and advances on its account, and on the 22d of September, 1870, an adjustment and settlement of the amount was had between them, and it was found that the company was indebted to him in the sum of $9,547.75.

Afterwards, on the 18th of June, 1872, a corporation known as the St. Paul, Hannibal and Keokuk Railroad Company was formed under the General Law of Missouri, to construct and operate a railroad, with one or more tracks, from the City of St. Louis to a point near the northeast corner of the State opposite to Keokuk in Iowa, with a branch, in Lincoln County, to its coal fields, from a point near Troy, and a branch up the valley of Mill Creek, from a point where the line crosses the creek.

To this new corporation the old corporation, upon the request and direction of the holders and owners of a majority of its stock, on the 4th of March, 1873, sold and transferred its entire road and all the branches, buildings, machinery and appurtenances belonging to or connected with it.

In consideration of the transfer, the new corporation, that is, the St. Louis, Hannibal and Keokuk Railroad Company, among other things, agreed to assume, pay and satisfy all the debts and liabilities incurred by the first company or legally imposed upon it, for right of way, station grounds, ties and bridging, and also to perform various contracts of that company which are specially mentioned. The new corporation was composed principally of the same persons and the same officers as the old corporation, and among the contracts assumed was one with the Missouri and Iowa Construction Company for building the road, and it stipulated that in payment of this work bonds of the company should be issued secured by a first mortgage on its property.

Pursuant to this contract, the new company, on the first of October, 1872, executed to Dewitt C. Blair, of New Jersey, and Clarence C. Mitchell, of New York, a mortgage or deed of trust of its railroad, then constructed or that might thereafter be constructed, with its right of way, buildings and appurtenances then existing or which might afterwards be acquired, its rolling stock and machinery of every kind, and all its franchises and property, to secure bonds of the company issued on that day, in sums of $1,000 each, to the amount of $4,200,000.

Afterwards this mortgage was taken up and canceled, and on the first of August, 1877, a new mortgage or deed of trust was executed by the company to Dewitt C. Blair, of all its property situated between the Cities of St. Louis and Hannibal in Missouri, and its franchises, to secure the payment of its bonds issued of that date, amounting to $1,680,000. The interest was not paid upon these bonds, and the trustee, on the 6th of February, 1884, commenced a suit in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Missouri, to foreclose the mortgage and sell the property. The bill not only made the mortgagor a party defendant, but also certain persons named, of whom Josiah Fogg was one, representing that they claimed to have liens, as judgment creditors, incumbrancers or otherwise, upon the mortgaged premises, but alleging that their interest, if any, accrued subsequently to the lien of the mortgage and was subordinate thereto.

As mentioned above, on the 22d of September, 1870, Josiah Fogg had a settlement with the St. Louis and Keokuk Railroad Company, by which the amount due him by the company on that date was agreed to be $9,547.75. For this amount and interest he brought suit in the circuit court of the United States in April, 1881, and on the 3d day of October, 1882, he recovered judgment for $16,489.68. Execution issued thereon having been returned unsatisfied, in May, 1883, he brought suit, on the equity side of the court, against the St. Louis, Hannibal and Keokuk Railroad Company to have that judgment declared a lien upon its property, and to compel that company to pay the judgment, and to enjoin it from selling or incumbering its property until such payment was made. The suit was brought against both the old and new company, and resulted in a decree entered on the 5th of May, 1884, adjudging that the two companies were liable jointly and severally for the judgment and interest, which amounted then to $18,365.11, the payment of which was decreed against them. The judgment was not declared to be a lien upon the property of the company, nor was the use or disposition of its property enjoined.

To the suit for the foreclosure of the mortgage brought by Dewitt C. Blair, trustee, Josiah Fogg appeared and answered the bill, and also filed a cross-bill. By his cross-bill he seeks to obtain priority for his judgment over the demands of the trustee, acting for and representing the bondholders. He sets forth the origin of his demand, the recovery of judgment for the amount against both the first and second corporations, and founds his claim to priority over the mortgage on the theory that the old corporation could not transfer its property to the new corporation without the new corporation becoming trustee for all the creditors of the old company; that its property was thus affected with a trust, and could not be subjected to a mortgage so as to give priority to the bonds secured over the demands of creditors existing at the time of such transfer; and that the trustee, Dewitt C. Blair, took the bonds of the company for John I. Blair and the executors of Moses Taylor, deceased; and charges, upon information and belief, that he took them with full notice of the claim of the complainant against the old corporation; and that the suit to foreclose the mortgage was a scheme designed to cut him off from enforcing his demand, and to have the railroad and its appurtenances sold under a decree of foreclosure and bought in by said John I. Blair and the executors of Moses Taylor, at a price greatly under their actual value. To this cross-bill the trustee, Dewitt C. Blair, as defendant, answered, denying its allegations, some of them positively and others upon information and belief—positively the allegations that the transfer of the property of the first corporation was made in fraud of the rights of the complainant, and that the second corporation took the property with knowledge and notice of the debt owing to him by the first corporation. A replication was filed to the answer and proofs were taken. Upon the hearing the court dismissed the cross-bill, holding that the claim of the complainant was not entitled to priority over the bonds secured by the mortgage. (25 Fed. Rep. 684, and 27 Fed. Rep. 176.) From this decree the case is brought by appeal to this court.

Messrs. James Carr, Geo. D. Reynolds and E. A. Sumner, for appellant:

The assets of a corporation are a trust fund for the payment of its debts.

Wood v. Dummer, 8 Mason, 308; Curran v. Arkansas, 56 U. S. 15 How. 907 (14: 706); Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Howard, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 392 (19: 117); Union Nat. Bank v. Douglass, 1 McCrary, 86; Jones v. Arkansas Mechanical & Agricultural Co. 38 Ark. 17.

The transfer made by the St. Louis and Keokuk Railroad Company of its franchises, completed railroad and all other property to the St. Louis, Hannibal and Keokuk Railroad Company, on the 4th day of March, 1873, was ultra vires, and consequently null and void.

Abbott v. American Hard Rubber Co. 38 Barb. 578; Thomas v. West Jersey R. Co. 101 U. S. 71 (25: 950); Hurt v. Salisbury, 55 Mo. 310.

The new company took said franchises and property with notice of the appellant's claim against the old company, because the directors of both companies were the same.

The officers and directors of the old company were incapacitated from transferring the franchises and property of that company to the new company on account of their being the officers and directors of the new company. They could not deal with themselves.

Wardell v. Union P. R. Co. 103 U. S. 651 (26: 509).

The new company was not a bona fide purchaser for value of the franchises and property of the old company; it took the franchises and property of the old company clothed with a trust in favor of the creditors of the old company.

Perry, Trusts, §§ 38, 217, 828; Jones v. Arkansas Mechanical & Agricultural Co. 38 Ark. 17.

Said franchises and property being a trust fund, and the St. Louis and Keokuk Railroad Company being insolvent, the appellant, as a creditor of said company, can pursue its assets into the hands of all other persons, except bona fide creditors or purchasers.

Mr. Walter C. Larned, for appellee:

No other or further defenses will be allowed in a foreclosure suit brought by bona fide purchasers of bonds to foreclose a mortgage securing them than would be allowed if an action were brought in a court of law upon the bonds. The bondholders stand in the same position as bona fide assignees for value before maturity of negotiable promissory notes.

Mr. Justice Field delivered the opinion of the court:

The claim of the appellant, that his demand, which passed into judgment May 5, 1884, against both the St. Louis and Keokuk Railroad Company and the St. Louis, Hannibal and Keokuk Railroad Company, is entitled to payment prior to the bonds secured by the mortgage or trust deed, would seem to be answered by the dates of the judgment and mortgage, respectively. The judgment was not rendered against the original company until October 3, 1882, and not against both companies until May 5, 1884. The mortgage was executed on the 1st day of August, 1877, five years before the first judgment and nearly seven years before the second.

It does not appear in the record precisely what the services were which were rendered by the complainant, or for what purposes advances by him were made. This is not material, however, as no claim is made, because of the nature of those services and advances, to a lien on the property of the original company, under the Statute of the State. It does not appear that any proceedings were taken to establish such a lien. Independently of that Statute, there was no lien upon any property of the railroad company for the demand of the complainant. It stood like any ordinary debt against a corporation, which could only be enforced by legal proceedings establishing its validity and amount by judicial determination, and then by process upon the judgment obtained, in subordination to any previously existing liens upon the property.

In some States—and this is the case in Missouri—statutes make judgments of their courts liens upon the real property of the judgment debtor, and the same rule applies in such States to judgments in the courts of the United States. But in all cases the judgments become liens only from the time they are rendered, or notice thereof is filed in the register's office of the county where the property is situated. They are subordinate to any prior mortgage upon the property. This doctrine is so familiar that it is surprising that any other can be supposed to exist. The property of a railroad company is not held under any such trust to apply it to the payment of its debts as to restrict its use for any other lawful purpose, it matters not how meritorious the demand of the creditor may be. He must obtain a lien upon the property of the company, or security in some other form, or he will have to take his chances with all other creditors to obtain payment in the ordinary course of legal proceedings for the collection of debts.

In Thompson v. White Water Valley R. Co., decided at the present term (132 U. S. 68 [83: 256]), it was held that the claim of bondholders of the company secured by a mortgage upon its railroad, and all property then appertaining thereto, or which the company might afterwards acquire, had priority over a claim of contractors to a lien upon the rents and profits of a portion of the road constructed by them subsequently to the mortgage. It was earnestly contended that they had an equitable lien upon the earnings of that portion of the road because with their moneys it was constructed. But the court replied that the work was not done at the request of the mortgagees, but upon a contract with the lessee of the road, by which the latter stipulated, as one of the considerations of the lease, to construct that part of the line, and that with those contractors the bondholders secured by the mortgage had no relations, and therefore incurred to them no obligation. In the opinion of the court reference was made to the case of Galveston, H. & H. R. Co. v. Coudrey, 78 U. S. 11 Wall. 459, 481 [20: 199, 206]. In that case there were several creditors, and it was contended that priority should be given to the last creditor, for he had aided in preserving the property. But the court answered that this rule had never been introduced into our laws, except in maritime cases, which stood on a particular reason; that by the common law whatever is affixed to the freehold becomes a part of the realty, except certain fixtures erected by tenants, which did not affect the question; that rails put down upon the company's road become a part of the road, and that the rule also applies to those permanent fixtures which are essential to the successful operation of the road; they become the property of the company, as much so as if they existed when the mortgage was executed. The case of Thompson v. White Water Valley R. Co. was much stronger than the one now before us; for there a special contract existed between the lessee company and the contractors that such lien should exist; while here there was no contract that the complainant's claim should be a lien upon any property.

In Dunham v. Cincinnati, P. & C. R. Co. 68 U. S. 1 Wall. 254, 267 [17: 584, 588], it was held that a mortgage by a railroad company of its road "built and to be built" took precedence, even as regards the unbuilt portion, over the claim of a contractor who had himself finished it under an agreement with the company that he should retain its possession and apply its earnings to the liquidation of the debt to him, and who had in accordance with such agreement taken possession of the road and retained it. The mortgage was executed and recorded before the contract for the completion of the road was made; and the court said: "All of the bonds, except those subsequently delivered to the contractor, had, long before that time, been issued, and were in the hands of innocent holders. The contractor under the circumstances could acquire no greater interest in the road than was held by the company. He did not exact any formal conveyance, but if he had, and one had been executed and delivered, the rule would be the same. Registry of the mortgage was notice to all the world of the lien of the complainant, and in that point of view the case does not even show a hardship upon the contractor, as he must have known, when he accepted the agreement, that he took the road subject to the rights of the bondholders."

We do not attach any weight to the objection that the transfer by the old company of its entire property to the new company was illegal and ultra vires, and therefore to be disregarded. However such a transfer might be considered in a suit to set it aside, the objection does not lie in the mouth of the appellant, for he has proceeded against the new company and obtained, upon the assumed validity of such transfer, a decree that it pay his judgment, which is founded upon a demand that company agreed to assume as part of the consideration of the transfer.

There is no evidence in the record before us that the parties who took the bonds issued by the St. Louis, Hannibal and Keokuk Railroad Company had any notice, actual or constructive, of the demand of the complainant. But if they had, it would not have affected their rights. That demand was not then reduced to judgment, and created no lien upon the property of the company, nor any restriction upon the company's right to use it for any lawful purpose. The bonds were given to raise the necessary funds to complete the road of the company, and the mortgage was executed to secure their payment. They were negotiable instruments, and in the hands of the purchasers cannot be impeached for any neglect of the company issuing them to pay the demands of other creditors. We are unable to perceive any ground upon which their priority over the claim of the appellant can be in any way impaired.

We do not question the general doctrine invoked by the appellant, that the property of a railroad company is a trust fund for the payment of its debts, but do not perceive any place for its application here. That doctrine only means that the property must first be appropriated to the payment of the debts of the company before any portion of it can be distributed to the stockholders; it does not mean that the property is so affected by the indebtedness of the company that it cannot be sold, transferred or mortgaged to bona fide purchasers for a valuable consideration, except subject to the liability of being appropriated to pay that indebtedness. Such a doctrine has no existence. The cases of Curran v. Arkansas, 50 U. S. 15 How. 304, 307 [14: 705, 706], and Wood v. Dummer, 3 Mason, 808, give no countenance to anything of the kind.

ELLIS V. KAUFMAN.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 471-473.)

Tax deeds, as clouds upon title—no taxes due—tax deed, how shown to be invalid—bill in equity.

1. In a suit to set aside tax deeds as clouds on the title of lands, the allegation that the plaintiff is seised in fee simple is a sufficient allegation that he has possession as well as the title. The allegation that he has no adequate remedy at law is dispensed with by Equity Rule 21.
2. If no taxes were due upon which the lands could be sold, the plaintiff was not bound to pay any taxes as a condition of relief.
3. By the law of Illinois, the tax deed is no more than prima facie evidence in favor of the purchaser, and may be shown to be invalid, by proof either that there was no advertisement of sale, no judgment or precept, no taxes unpaid, or no notice to redeem given or recorded.
4. Where tax deeds appear upon their face to be clouds upon the plaintiff's title, a bill in equity is the proper form of obtaining relief.

APPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois to review a decree for the plaintiff in a suit in equity to remove a cloud upon a title to lands. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Augustus N. Gage, for appellant:

It must appear that the complainant is either in possession of the property, or that the property is vacant and unoccupied.

Mr. Justice Gray delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a bill in equity by a citizen of Illinois against a citizen of New Jersey to remove a cloud upon the title of lands in Chicago of the value of $10,000.

The bill alleged that the plaintiff was seised in fee simple of the lands; that the defendant claimed title to them under two pretended tax deeds to him from the county clerk, recorded in the office of the county recorder (copies of the records of which were set forth in the bill, showing deeds in the form prescribed by § 221 of chap. 120 of the Revised Statutes of Illinois of 1874); and further alleged that there was no advertisement of any public sale for nonpayment of taxes on the day mentioned in either deed; that there was no judgment or precept on which the lands could have been sold; that there were no taxes unpaid on which the sale could have been made; that no notice to redeem the lands from such pretended sale was given by the holder of any certificate of such sale, as required by the Constitution and statutes of Illinois; and that no such notice or evidence thereof was filed or recorded by the county clerk.

The defendant demurred to the bill, because it did not show who was in possession of the lands, or that the defendant was not in possession, or that the plaintiff had not an adequate remedy at law; because the plaintiff did not offer to do equity and to repay the taxes paid by the defendant; because the grounds alleged in the bill for setting aside the defendant's title were insufficient to overcome the prima facie evidence of the tax deeds set forth in the bill; and for want of equity.

The court overruled the demurrer, and, the defendant electing to stand by it, entered a decree for the plaintiff. The defendant appealed to this court.

The grounds of demurrer are untenable. The allegation that the plaintiff is seised in fee simple is a sufficient allegation that he has the possession as well as the title. 1 Dan. Ch. Pr. chap. 6, § 5. The allegation that he has no adequate remedy at law is dispensed with by Equity Rule 21. If, as the bill alleges, no taxes were due upon which the lands could be sold, he was not bound to pay any taxes as a condition of relief. By the law of Illinois, the deed is no more than prima facie evidence in favor of the purchaser, and may be shown to be invalid by proof of either of the facts alleged in the bill and admitted by the demurrer, namely, that there was no advertisement of sale, no judgment or precept, no taxes unpaid, or no notice to redeem given or recorded. Illinois Rev. Stat. of 1874, chap. 120, §§ 177, 182, 191, 194, 216, 217, 224; Senichka v. Lowe, 74 Ill. 274; Bell v. Johnson, 111 Ill. 374; Gage v. Rohrbach, 56 Ill. 262; Williams v. Underhill, 58 Ill. 187; Dalton v. Lucas, 63 Ill. 337.

Upon general principles, and by the Illinois decisions, as the tax deeds appear upon their face to be clouds upon the plaintiff's title, a bill in equity is the proper form of obtaining relief upon the various grounds alleged.

the county clerk, and that the plaintiffs were bona fide holders,—the defenses that the consent roll did not in fact contain the requisite number of taxpayers, and that the verifying affidavit was false, and that the commissioners did not borrow money on the bonds, but disposed of them without consideration, are unavailing against such bona fide holders.

2. Where the Act gave the commissioners power, under certain conditions, to issue the bonds, and the recitals therein show that they were issued "in pursuance" of the Act; and the bonds were all duly registered as required, plaintiff is only bound to show, to entitle him prima facie to judgment, the due appointment of the commissioners and the execution by them in fact of the bonds.
3. It is not necessary that he should, in the first instance, prove either that he paid value, or that the conditions preliminary to the exercise by the commissioners of the authority conferred by statute were in fact performed before the bonds were issued.
4. The one was presumed from the possession of the bonds, and the other was established by the Statute authorizing an issue of bonds, and by proof of the due appointment of the commissioners, and their execution of the bonds, with recitals of compliance with the Statute.
5. Officers appointed, such as commissioners appointed by the circuit court, represent the municipality as fully as officers elected. When the Legislature has declared how an officer is to be selected, and the officer is selected in accordance with that declaration, his acts, within the scope of the powers given him by the Legislature, bind the municipality.
6. Although the Act does not in terms say that these commissioners are to decide that all preliminary conditions have been complied with, yet it is enough that full control in the matter is given to the officers named, and the town is estopped by their certificate in the bonds from asserting, as against a bona fide holder, that the conditions were not complied with.

Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action on township bonds. Judgment was rendered against the Township, and it alleges error. By section three these commissioners were authorized to dispose of the bonds, and invest the money in railroad stock in the name of the township, to subscribe for and purchase stock in the railroad company, and to act at stockholders' meetings.

Section fourteen provides "that all bonds issued in accordance with the provisions of this Act shall be registered in the office of the county clerk of the county in which the township is situated issuing the same, and the words 'registered in the county clerk's office' shall be printed or written across the face of each bond, attested by the signature of the county clerk when so registered, and no bond shall be valid unless so registered."

It is conceded that the commissioners were duly appointed; that the issue of bonds was not in excess of the amount authorized by the Statute; that a paper purporting to contain the consent of the requisite number of taxpayers, duly verified by the affidavit of the township assessor, was filed in the office of the clerk of the county; and that the plaintiffs were bona fide holders. But the contention is that the consent roll did not in fact contain the requisite number of taxpayers, and that the affidavit of the assessor was not true; also that the commissioners did not borrow any money on the bonds, but disposed of them without lawful consideration. The circuit court held that these defenses were unavailing against bona fide holders of the bonds; and with that ruling we concur. Indeed, all the questions which were earnestly presented and argued by counsel for plaintiffs in error have been often considered and decided by this court. The Act gave the commissioners power, under certain conditions, to issue the bonds. The recitals therein show that they were issued "in pursuance" of the Act; and the bonds were all duly registered as required. The case of Montclair Twp. v. Ramsdell, 107 U. S. 147, 158 [27: 431, 434], was a suit on bonds in form like the ones in suit, and issued under a statute practically identical. The validity of those bonds was sustained; and in the course of his opinion, speaking for the court, Mr. Justice Harlan says: "Legislative authority for an issue of bonds being established by reference to the statute, and the bonds reciting that they were issued in pursuance of the statute, the utmost which plaintiff was bound to show, to entitle him prima facie to judgment, was the due appointment of the commissioners and the execution by them in fact of the bonds. It was not necessary that he should, in the first instance, prove either that he paid value, or that the conditions preliminary to the exercise by the commissioners of the authority conferred by statute were in fact performed before the bonds were issued. The one was presumed from the possession of the bonds, and the other was established by the statute authorizing an issue of bonds, and by proof of the due appointment of the commissioners, and their execution of the bonds, with recitals of compliance with the statute." See, also, the cases of Bernards Twp. v. Stebbins, 109 U. S. 341 [27: 956], and New Providence v. Halsay, 117 U. S. 336 [29: 904], in which bonds issued either under the Act before us, or that referred to in 107 U. S. supra, were considered by the court. Reference also may be made to two New Jersey cases, Cotton v. New Providence, 47 N. J. L. 401, and Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co. v. Elizabeth, 42 N. J. L. 235.

It were useless to refer to the long list of cases in which recitals like these have been held sufficient to sustain bonds in the hands of bona fide holders. It is urged that these commissioners were not elected by the people; that they were not the general officers of the Township, but were special officers appointed by the circuit court—special agents, as it were, for the specific purpose; that the Statute does not in terms give them authority to determine whether the preliminary conditions have been complied with; and that this case is, therefore, to be distinguished in these respects from those cases where similar recitals have been held conclusive. But though not the ordinary officers of the Township, they were the ones to whom by legislative direction was given full authority in the matter of issuing bonds. The organization of townships, the number, character and duties of their various officers, are matters of legislative control; and it is not doubtful that officers appointed represent the municipality as fully as officers elected. When the Legislature has declared how an officer is to be selected, and the officer is selected in accordance with that declaration, his acts, within the scope of the powers given him by the Legislature, bind the municipality. But these special commissioners were not the only officers of the Township whose acts gave currency to these bonds. If inquiry had been directed to the county and township records, the affidavit of the township assessor to the consent required would have been found; and on the face of the bonds it appears that the county clerk of the county has added his official certificate to their validity; so that the acts of general as well as of special officers and agents of the Township are the foundation upon which rests the validity of these bonds.

While it is true that the Act does not in terms say that these commissioners are to decide that all preliminary conditions have been complied with, yet such express direction and authority is seldom found in Acts providing for the issuing of bonds. It is enough that full control in the matter is given to the officers named. In the case of Oregon v. Jennings, 119 U. S. 74, 92 [30: 323, 329], the rule is thus stated by Mr. Justice Blatchford: "Within the numerous decisions by this court on the subject, the supervisor and the town clerk, they being named in the statute as the officers to sign the bonds, and the 'corporate authorities' to act for the town in issuing them to the company, were the persons intrusted with the duty of deciding, before issuing the bonds, whether the conditions determined at the election existed. If they have certified to that effect in the bonds, the town is estopped from asserting, as against a bona fide holder, that the conditions prescribed by the popular vote were not complied with."

Whatever may be the hardships of this particular case, to sustain the defenses pressed would go far towards destroying the market value of municipal securities. We see no error in the ruling of the Circuit Court, and its judgment is therefore affirmed.

Mr. Justice Field took no part in the decision of this case.

THE CALIFORNIA INSURANCE COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

THE UNION COMPRESS COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 387-423.)

Insurable interest—insurance of goods held in trust—for whose benefit—right of bailor to insurance effected by bailee—clause in policy—insurable interest, how acquired—negligence of employes, carriers can insure against—possession of bailee—phrase "direct loss or damage by fire"—expression of opinion by court in its charge—parol evidence as to person insured—notice—estoppel—double insurance—contingent liability.

1. Where a Company received cotton to press and issued receipts therefor, which were exchanged with a railroad company for its bills of lading for the transportation of the cotton, agreeing to deliver it at an address specified in the bill of lading, the railroad company has an insurable interest in the cotton, which may be covered by a policy issued to the Compress Company.
2. A person may insure in his own name goods held in trust by him and he can recover for their entire value, holding the excess over his own interest in them for the benefit of those who have intrusted the goods to him.
3. The words "held by them in trust," in this policy, cannot properly be limited to a holding in trust merely for an absolute owner, when it clearly appears that the railroad companies had an insurable interest in the cotton, and the plaintiff held the property in trust exclusively for those companies.
4. A bailor who has an insurable interest in the property can, to the extent of his insurable interest, claim the benefit of insurance effected in his favor by his bailee.
5. The case is not varied or affected by the clause in the receipts given by the plaintiff, "not responsible for any loss by fire," because the relation of the plaintiff to the property intrusted to it, and its duty to the bailor, determine the legal propriety of the insurance for the benefit of the latter.
6. Nor is it material whether the cotton was originally deposited by the railroad companies, or whether their interest accrued through the subsequent transfer to the railroad companies of receipts given by the plaintiff on a deposit of cotton made by other parties.
7. The exception of loss by fire, contained in the receipts given by the plaintiff, and in the bills of lading given by the railroad companies, did not free them from responsibility for damages occasioned by their own negligence or that of their employes.
8. Common carriers can insure themselves against loss proceeding from the negligence of their own servants.
9. The railroad companies, by acquiring the receipts of the plaintiff and issuing bills of lading for the cotton, took only constructive possession of it; and the actual and physical possession of plaintiff gave it the right to effect insurance for its own benefit, and, as bailee or agent, for the protection of the railroad companies.
10. The words of the policy, "direct loss or damage by fire," mean loss or damage occurring directly from fire as the destroying agency, in contradistinction to the remoteness of fire as such agency.
11. The judge, in submitting a case to a jury, may comment upon the evidence and express his opinion upon the facts; and the expression of such an opinion, when no rule of law is incorrectly stated, and all matters of fact are ultimately submitted to the determination of the jury, cannot be reviewed on writ of error.

12. Where a policy is issued on property "held in trust," parol evidence is admissible to show who are the owners or who were intended to be insured thereby.
13. Having issued the policy with notice that it was intended to cover the interest of the railroad companies, the defendant is estopped from asserting that the policy was intended to protect only the legal owners of the cotton.
14. Marine policies issued to the respective owners of the cotton were no bar to and did not have any effect upon the fire policy; the marine policies, in order to have any effect, must amount to double insurance. Double insurance exists only in the case of risks upon the same interest in property and in favor of the same person.
15. The plaintiff's right of action against the Insurance Company on the policy is not contingent upon the payment by the railroad companies of the value of the cotton burned, but it is contingent only upon the destruction of the cotton by fire under circumstances which impose a liability upon the railroad companies.

Submitted Oct. 30, 1889. Decided March 3, 1890.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Arkansas to review a judgment for plaintiff in an action on a policy of insurance against fire. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. E. W. McGraw and E. W. Kimball, for plaintiff in error:

The beneficiaries under the policy are the owners of the cotton; the possible interest of no common carrier is covered thereby.

Noonan v. Bradley, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 407 (19:760).

Mr. Justice Blatchford delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action at law, brought in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Arkansas, by the Union Compress Company, an Arkansas corporation, against the California Insurance Company, of San Francisco, a California corporation, to recover on a policy of insurance against fire, issued by the latter Company to the former Company on the 2d of November, 1887.

By the policy the California Company insures the Compress Company, for the term of thirty days from November 2, 1887, at noon, to December 2, 1887, at noon, "against all direct loss or damage by fire except as hereinafter provided, to an amount not exceeding ten thousand dollars, to the following-described property while located and contained as described herein, and not elsewhere, to wit: Form of cotton policy. $10,000 on cotton, in bales, their own or held by them in trust or on commission, while contained in the frame shed 112 to 122, inclusive, & in b'ck shed & yard 115 to 123, inclusive, North Main Street, & on platforms adjoining & in street immediately between the sheds, Sanborn's map of Little Rock, Ark's; & it is agreed and understood to be a condition of this insurance that this policy shall not apply to or cover any cotton which may at the time of loss be covered in whole or part by a marine policy; & it is further agreed to be a condition of this policy that only actual payment by bank check or otherwise for cotton purchased shall constitute a delivery of cotton from the seller to the buyer; and it is further agreed that this Company shall be liable for only such proportion of the whole loss as the sum hereby insured bears to the cash value of the whole property hereby insured at the time of fire; and it is further agreed that tickets, checks or receipts delivered to bearer shall not be considered as evidence of ownership. Other insurance permitted without notice until required. . . . In case of loss or damage to the property insured, it shall be optional with the Company, in lieu of paying such loss or damage, to replace the articles lost or damaged with others of the same kind and quality. . . . This entire policy, unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed hereon or added hereto, shall be void . . . if any change . . . take place in the . . . possession of the subject of insurance. . . . In case of any other insurance upon the property hereby insured, whether to the same party or upon the same interests therein or otherwise, whether valid or not, and whether prior or subsequent to the date of this policy, the insured shall be entitled to recover from this Company no greater proportion of the loss sustained than the sum hereby insured bears to the whole amount insured thereon, whether such other insurance be by specific or by general or floating policies, or by policies covering only in excess of specified loss; and it is hereby declared and agreed that in case of the assured holding any other policy in this or any other company on the property insured, or any part thereof, subject to the conditions of average, this policy shall be subject to average in like manner . . .

If this Company shall claim that the fire was caused by the act or neglect of any person or corporation, private or municipal, this Company shall, on payment of the loss, be subrogated to the extent of such payment to all right of recovery by the insured for the loss resulting therefrom, and such right shall be assigned to this Company by the insured on receiving such payment. . . . In case of loss on property held in trust or on commission, or if the interest of the assured be other than the entire and sole ownership, the names of the respective owners shall be set forth" [in the proofs of loss] "to-gather with their respective interests therein."

The complaint alleges that on the 14th of November, 1887, the plaintiff was engaged in the business of compressing cotton, which it received or held on its own account or on commission or in trust for others, as its warehouses and compress buildings and adjoining sheds and platforms situated at the foot of Main Street in the City of Little Rock, Arkansas; that it had on hand, at that date, about 2,800 bales of cotton, delivered to it to be compressed and belonging to divers parties, the value of which equalled the sum total of the insurance thereon; and that such cotton, whether owned by the plaintiff or held by it on commission or in trust for others, was insured against loss or damage by fire in 28 insurance companies, which are named, in the several amounts stated opposite their respective names, amounting in the aggregate to $142,500, which included the defendant for the sum of $10,000. It then sets forth the issuing of the policy by the defendant to the plaintiff, a copy of which is annexed to the complaint, and that on the 14th of November, 1887, all the cotton in bales, contained on said premises and so insured, was destroyed by fire, "together with a large quantity of other cotton in possession of plaintiff at said place, which was not insured by plaintiff."

The complaint then proceeds as follows: "[That at the time that said cotton came to the possession of the plaintiff it was engaged in the business of compressing cotton at its compress in the Town of Argenta, opposite Little Rock, and on the north side of the Arkansas River, and that said cotton was deposited with the plaintiff for compression by various owners thereof, who delivered the same at the sheds and yards and adjacent grounds in the said City of Little Rock, as described in said policy, with directions that the same should be transported to said compress by the plaintiff or some carrier employed for that purpose by it, and that on the receipt of any bales of said cotton by said plaintiff it gave a receipt for the same to the owner thereof, and that, according to a custom known to said depositors, to the plaintiff, and to the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Co. and the Missouri Pacific Railway Co., of which it was a part, and the Little Rock & Memphis Railroad Company, which were common carriers having and operating railroads of which both Argenta and Little Rock were stations, said owners transferred said receipts to either one or the other of said carriers and received from said carriers bills of lading for the transportation by said carriers of said cotton to various places to which said cotton was then and there shipped by said owners, with an agreement with said railway companies that said cotton should not be shipped until it had been compressed by the plaintiff. There was a standing and continuing agreement between said plaintiff and said railway companies that the plaintiff should proceed to compress said cotton and all cotton thus received and should insure the same, after notice of the execution of said bills of lading by said railway companies, against loss by fire during the time that said cotton should be in the hands of the plaintiff, for the purpose aforesaid, for a price averaging from sixty to sixty-five cents per bale, to be paid by said railway companies, respectively, when said cotton should be compressed and delivered to said railway companies on their cars at Argenta for transportation under said bills of lading, at which time said carriers should surrender to plaintiff the said receipts issued as aforesaid at the time that said cotton was deposited with the plaintiff for compression by the owners, as above stated; that all of said cotton was in the custody of plaintiff, at the time of said loss, under and by virtue of said custom and agreement, and that it was lost by the negligence of the servants, agents and employes of said railway companies, and that since said loss said St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Company has been sued in this court by two of said consignees for the value of part of said cotton above named, to wit, the York Manufacturing Company and Hazard & Chapin, and said railway company defended said actions on the ground that said loss was not occasioned by the negligence of said railway company or its servants and employes, and on a trial of said first-named cause it was adjudged by this court that said York Manufacturing Company and said Hazard & Chapin recover from said railway company the value of said cotton sued for as aforesaid, and that since said adjudication said railway company has paid said judgment and the value of a large part of the cotton for which it had issued bills of lading as aforesaid, and that several suits are now pending in this court against said Little Rock & Memphis Railroad Company, brought by the consignees of portions of said cotton, for the recovery of damages for the loss of said cotton by reason of the negligence of said railroad company, which said suits are now pending and undetermined. On said 14th day of November, 1887, the plaintiff had in its possession at its sheds and premises above mentioned, for purposes of compression, a large amount of cotton, to wit, over 3,000 bales; that of this number 2,700 bales of cotton were held by this plaintiff for the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Company and the Little Rock & Memphis Railroad Company. By said contract and agreement between plaintiff and said railroads this plaintiff took out the policies of insurance above set out for the purpose of indemnifying this plaintiff against loss and liability, and the said railroad companies against loss and liability, by reason of the destruction of said cotton while it was being held by plaintiffs for purposes of compression. The St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway has been adjudged as aforesaid to pay a large sum of money, to wit, $—, and in addition has paid a still larger amount because of its liability for such loss, amounting in all up to this date to $72,209.58, and has made demand therefor against the plaintiff for reimbursement of said losses.]” It also avers that the loss by fire on the cotton equalled the insurance on it, and that the plaintiff has performed all the conditions of the policy; and prays judgment for $10,000, with interest.

The defendant moved to strike from the complaint the words “together with a large quantity of other cotton in possession of plaintiff, at said place, which was not insured by plaintiff,” and also the foregoing part included in brackets. It also demurred to the complaint on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; and also demurred separately to that part of it which is so included in brackets, on the ground that the facts therein stated did not tend to constitute a cause of action. The court overruled the said motion and also the demurrer, and the defendant excepted to both of those rulings.

The defendant then filed its answer, admitting the issuing of the policy, and that at the fire 112 bales of cotton, belonging to one Hanger and held by the plaintiff in trust for Hanger, were burned, for the loss of which the insurance companies named in the complaint had paid the plaintiff $4,826.59, in full satisfaction thereof, and of which sum the defendant paid its full portion of the loss. The answer denies the material allegations of the complaint, and avers that the greater portion of the cotton alleged to have been lost at the fire was received by the plaintiff from the owners thereof after the issuing of the policy; that the cotton burned was first delivered by its owners to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff gave to the owners receipts for it, which provided that the plaintiff should not be liable for the loss of it by fire; that afterwards, and after the policy was issued, the cotton was sold to various persons who became its owners, and the Missouri Pacific Railway Company, the Little Rock & Memphis Railroad Company and the Little Rock, Mississippi River & Texas Railway Company, common carriers of cotton for hire, issued their bills of lading for the same to the purchasers, which provided that the carriers should not be liable for the loss thereof by fire, and at the same time such railroad companies took up the receipts issued by the plaintiff to the original owners and surrendered them to the plaintiff, whereby the possession of the cotton was changed, contrary to the provisions of the policy, without any consent of, notice to, or knowledge by the defendant; (7) that it is provided in the policy that it shall not apply to or cover cotton which was at the time of loss covered in whole or in part by marine policies, and at that time 2,172 bales of the cotton alleged to have been burned, and of the value of $101,973.73, were covered by marine policies theretofore issued to the respective owners of the cotton; (8) that after the railroads had issued their bills of lading for the cotton, and before and at the time of the fire, it was kept in a grossly negligent manner, in a dangerous public place, without being covered or sprinkled, and but a few feet from a railroad track, where locomotives of the Missouri Pacific and the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railroads, emitting sparks, were constantly passing, by which sparks the fire was kindled, and the cotton was destroyed by a fire which occurred in broad daylight, at about four o'clock P. M., and which fire those two railroad companies, by the use of ordinary care, could have extinguished by removing the bales first ignited or by putting out the fire by water from the hydrants which were close by; and that none of the cotton was destroyed by the negligence of the Little Rock & Memphis Railroad Company or its employes.

The plaintiff demurred to certain paragraphs of the answer, and among them paragraphs 7 and 8, as not stating facts sufficient to constitute a defense. The court overruled such demurrer as to two of the paragraphs and sustained it as to paragraphs 7 and 8: to which latter ruling the defendant excepted. Thereupon the case was tried by a jury, which found a verdict for the plaintiff for $9,491.96, on which a judgment was accordingly entered, to review which the defendant has brought a writ of error.

The first four assignments of error on the part of the defendant relate to the overruling of its motion to strike out part of the complaint, the overruling of its demurrer to the complaint and to part thereof, and the sustaining of the demurrer of the plaintiff to paragraphs 7 and 8 of the answer.

At the trial, the plaintiff offered evidence tending to prove that it was engaged in the business of compressing cotton at the Town of Argenta, which is on the north bank of the Arkansas River directly opposite the City of Little Rock; that it received cotton for compression at Argenta and also at the premises described in the policy, at Little Rock; that for cotton received at either place it issued receipts to the depositors, red receipts at Argenta and green receipts at Little Rock, a blank form of which, as it appears in the bill of exceptions, if filled out, would read thus: "Little Rock, Arkansas, Nov. 1, 1887. Received by the Union Compress Company. From John Smith. Account of John Doe. For Compression. Storage after ten days will be charged. Not responsible for any loss by fire. Marks X, Y, Z. No. bales cotton, 65. Richard Roe, Superintendent;" that the holders of such receipts took them to the freight offices of one or the other of the two railway companies, the Missouri Pacific Railway Company and the Little Rock & Memphis Railroad Company, and those companies issued bills of lading for cotton, which specified the number of bales and the marks, agreeing to deliver the cotton at an address specified in the bill of lading; that the same bills of lading covered cotton which was received by the plaintiff at Argenta and which actually was at Argenta, and cotton received at Little Rock and which actually was at Little Rock; that one form of bill of lading was issued by the Missouri Pacific Railway Company and two forms by the Little Rock & Memphis Railroad Company; that it was claimed that each form covered a portion of the cotton burned; that each form, by its terms, exempted the carrier from liability for loss or damage by fire; and that, as the cotton might pass through the custody of several carriers before reaching its destination, each of them provided that the legal remedy for loss or damage occurring in transit should be only against the particular carrier in whose custody the cotton actually might be at the time of the happening thereof. The Missouri Pacific Railway Company in its bills of lading reserved to itself the privilege of compressing all cotton signed for on the bill of lading. The Memphis & Little Rock Railroad Company did not reserve that privilege, but in one of its two forms, which was a through bill of lading to England, it stipulated for the benefit of any insurance that might have been effected on the goods. There are five of such foreign bills of lading, covering 158 bales of lost cotton. Bills of lading covering 1,460 bales alleged to have been burned were issued by the Missouri Pacific Railway Company. The loss claimed on behalf of the latter company was for 1,468 bales. The bills of lading issued by the Memphis & Little Rock Railroad Company were for 992 bales, but the loss claimed was for 1,211 bales. By the bills of lading issued by the Missouri Pacific Railway Company on the lost cotton, 884 bales were covered after the date of the policy; and by those issued by the Memphis & Little Rock Railroad Company 255 bales were covered after that date.

It also appears by the bill of exceptions that, on the issuing of the bills of lading, the respective railroad companies notified the plaintiff of their issue, and ordered the cotton designated therein to be compressed at Argenta; that all of the cotton transported from Little Rock to Argenta was carried on the track and by the cars of the Missouri Pacific Railway Company; that the Little Rock & Memphis Railroad Company had no track and ran no cars near the premises described in the policy; that the plaintiff paid the Missouri Pacific Railway Company an agreed price for the transportation of the cotton from Little Rock to Argenta; and that the cotton was to be compressed after it arrived at Argenta, and was there to be loaded on the cars of such of the two railroad companies as its marks and the bills of lading called for, to be transported by them to its destination.

The bill of exceptions further states that the plaintiff offered evidence tending to prove that 2,670 bales of cotton, covered by said bills of lading, were burned at the fire in question, while in the hands of the plaintiff for compression, after the bills of lading were issued and at the place described in the policy.

The plaintiff also proved that in October and November, 1887, there was an accumulation of cotton at the premises described in the policy, owing to the fact that the Missouri Pacific Railway Company had not sufficient cars to transport the cotton to Argenta as fast as it was received; that the cotton-sheds were open sheds and were at the time of the fire full of cotton, which had no tarpaulin or other cover over it, and stood within three or four feet of the track of the Missouri Pacific Railway Company, over which locomotives and trains passed several times daily; that, after the sheds were full, the cotton was stored in the street, leaving a passageway some four feet wide for foot passengers; that the two railroad companies had no control over the cotton while so stored, and could not obtain actual possession of it until the Missouri Pacific Railway Company transported it to Argenta for compression; but that that company could take it at any time across the river for compression.

The defendant offered in evidence the proof of loss furnished by the plaintiff to it, made out after the bringing of the suit, alleging the total destruction by fire of 2,687 bales of cotton, in addition to what was known as the Hanger cotton, and that the 2,687 bales were held by the plaintiff in trust or on commission, that is to say, to be compressed, and were the property of various persons, the plaintiff being interested in the same to the extent of its charges, and stating the names of the consignees and the number of bales and their value pertaining to each consignee, no allusion being made to any interest of the railroad companies.

(1.) The plaintiff offered evidence tending to prove that the policy in suit was taken out by it for the benefit of the railroad companies named in the complaint, and in pursuance of agreements between the plaintiff and those companies by which the plaintiff agreed to take out such insurance. The defendant objected to such evidence, on the ground that it was incompetent and in contradiction of the terms of the policy. The objection was overruled, and the defendant excepted.

The plaintiff also offered evidence tending to prove that by agreement between it and the railroad companies it charged and collected from them 18 cents per 100 pounds for all cotton compressed by it, which charge was by agreement intended to cover and did cover the compression of the cotton, the loading of it on the cars at Argenta, and the cost of insuring it for the benefit of the railroad companies. The defendant objected to the evidence on the ground that it was immaterial, irrelevant and incompetent, the objection was overruled, and the defendant excepted.

The plaintiff also offered evidence tending to prove that the contracts and customs of business before stated were well known to shippers and the defendant when the policy sued on was issued, it having been stated to the agents of the defendant, by an officer of the plaintiff, when the policy was applied for, that it was intended to cover the interests of the plaintiff and of the railroad companies. The defendant objected to this evidence, but the objection was overruled and the defendant excepted.

The plaintiff also offered evidence tending to prove that claims had been filed against the Missouri Pacific Railway Company by the owners of 1,463 bales of cotton burned at the fire, of the claimed value of $72,735.58; that since the commencement of this suit that company had paid such claims to the amount of $65,000; and that the balance had been adjusted by that company and would be paid. The defendant objected to the evidence on the ground that it was immaterial, irrelevant and incompetent, but the objection was overruled and the defendant excepted.

The plaintiff further offered evidence tending to prove that claims had been filed against the Little Rock & Memphis Railroad Company by the owners of 1,211 bales of cotton burned at the fire, of the claimed value of $57,529.55, no part of which has been paid by that company, though suits had been brought on several of the claims and were still pending. The defendant objected to the evidence on the ground that it was incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial; but the court overruled the objection and the defendant excepted.

After the close of the evidence, the defendant requested the court to instruct the jury as follows: "1. The policy of insurance of the defendant on which this action is brought covered all goods in possession of the Union Compress Company at the place designated in the said policy, at the date when said policy was issued, which were held by the said Union Compress Company under warehouse receipts issued to the owners of said cotton by said Company, and also all cotton subsequently and during the life of said policy so received by the Union Compress Company. 2. The policy in question insures the goods of the Union Compress Company at the place designated. It also insures the Union Compress Company to the extent of its liens upon or charges against all goods held by it during the life of the policy, not its own, but held by it in trust or on commission. It also insures the interest of the owners of the legal title to such goods so held. It does not insure anyone else. Any possible interest of any common carrier not an owner of the goods, or any of them, in the place designated, is not insured by said policy. 3. The jury are instructed to disregard all evidence in the case tending to show that the insurance in question was issued for the benefit of any railroad company not an owner of any of the goods destroyed by fire, for the value of which recovery is sought herein." The court refused to give any of those three instructions and the defendant excepted to each refusal.

The foregoing exceptions, except the two which relate to the sustaining of the demurrer to paragraphs 7 and 8 of the answer, may be grouped together, because they relate to the same question. The court refused to strike out the matter in the complaint which is before recited in brackets, and also overruled the demurrer of the defendant to that portion of the complaint; and on the trial the plaintiff was permitted to introduce evidence tending to prove some of the allegations contained in that part of the complaint. The three instructions before quoted as asked by the defendant, and not given, relate to the same matter.

The defendant contends that there was error in the action of the court covered by those exceptions, and complains that the court treated the words in the policy, "their own or held by them in trust or on commission," as if they read, "on account of whom it may concern;" that, as the plaintiff did not own the cotton, the beneficiaries under the policy were its owners; that no interest of any common carrier was covered by the policy; that it was not ambiguous; and that no parol testimony was admissible to aid in its interpretation or to show that the railroad companies were intended to be beneficiaries under it. The view urged is, that the plaintiff did not own any of the cotton or hold any of it on commission; that the insurance on goods held in trust was an insurance only for the benefit of the owners of the cotton; and that evidence of an intention to effect the insurance for the benefit of one who was not the owner of the goods was inadmissible, because it would contradict the policy.

But we think the positions taken on behalf of the defendant are not sound. The title to cotton in the temporary custody of a bailee for compression, for which receipts or bills of lading have been given, is manifestly changing hands constantly. The language of the present policy, insuring cotton "their own or held by them in trust or on commission," accommodates such a state of things. In the present case, the insurance was really taken out by the railroad companies, and that fact was well known to the agents of the defendant at the time the policy was issued. The railroad companies had an insurable interest in the cotton, and to that extent were the owners of the cotton, which was held in trust for them by the plaintiff. Evidence of their ownership of the cotton was admissible. Home Ins. Co. v. Baltimore Warehouse Co. 98 U. S. 527, 542 [28: 868, 869].

The policy covered all the cotton which was placed in the hands of the plaintiff by those companies. It was lawful for the plaintiff to insure in its own name goods held in trust by it, and it can recover for their entire value, holding the excess over its own interest in them for the benefit of those who have intrusted the goods to it. DeForest v. Fulton Fire Ins. Co. 1 Hall, 94; Home Ins. Co. v. Baltimore Warehouse Co. 98 U. S. 527, 543 [28: 868, 869]; Stillwell v. Staples, 19 N. Y. 401; Waring v. Indemnity Fire Ins. Co. 45 N. Y. 806; Waters v. Monarch F. & L. Assur. Co. 5 El. & Bl. 870; Siler v. Morris, 13 Pa. 218; Johnson v. Campbell, 120 Mass. 449; Fire Ins. Assn. v. Merchants & Miners Transp. Co. 66 Md. 339; London & N. W. R. Co. v. Glyn, 1 El. & Bl. 652; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, 81 U. S. 14 Wall. 504, 508 [20: 729, 731].

The words "held by them in trust," in this policy, cannot properly be limited to a holding in trust merely for an absolute owner, when it clearly appears that the railroad companies had an insurable interest in the cotton, and the plaintiff held the property in trust exclusively for those companies. The reasoning of the cases where the bailor was the owner of the goods insured by the bailee applies equally to any person, who, having an insurable interest in property, intrusts it to another; and such bailor can, to the extent of his insurable interest, claim the benefit of insurance effected in his favor by his bailee. The original depositors of the cotton surrendered to the railroad companies the receipts which they had taken from the plaintiff, and those companies were thus substituted in the relation to the plaintiff which before had been held by such depositors. The railroad companies thus became the beneficiaries of the trust, so far as the plaintiff was concerned, because they thus became the persons to whom the plaintiff owed the duty of bailment, and the persons entitled to demand the possession of the property from the plaintiff. There was privity in the plaintiff with the person who held its receipt, and privity with no one else. This is a necessary and obvious result of the course of business; and the business in question could not be carried on under any other circumstances so as to give protection by insurance to the parties really interested.

The case is not varied or affected by the clause in the receipts given by the plaintiff, "not responsible for any loss by fire," because the relation of the plaintiff to the property intrusted to it, and its duty to the bailor, determine the legal propriety of the insurance for the benefit of the latter. In the present case, the arrangement was that the railroad companies should pay to the plaintiff, in connection with the charge for compressing, an additional sum which would provide for the insurance of all cotton in the possession of the plaintiff, for which the railroad companies should issue bills of lading. The defendant had notice that the insurance was effected in the interest of the railroad companies; and it issued the policy in the terms it did, to include the protection of the railroad companies. The fact that the same policy might protect the interest of other persons in respect to cotton held for them by the plaintiff cannot affect the question whether it protects the interest of the railroad companies in respect to cotton held by the plaintiff for them, during the life of the policy. Nor is it material whether the cotton was originally deposited by the railroad companies, or whether their interest accrued through the subsequent transfer to the railroad companies of receipts given by the plaintiff on a deposit of cotton made by other parties.

(2.) We come now to another group of errors assigned. The defendant requested the court to instruct the jury as follows: "The policy in question provides that it shall be void if there be any change in the possession of the insured property, except under circumstances which have no bearing on this case. If the jury believe from the evidence that after the policy in question was issued, any common carrier, with the knowledge and consent of plaintiff and under agreement with plaintiff, issued its bills of lading for any of the cotton which at the date of the policy was or thereafter came into possession of the plaintiff, the issuance of such bills of lading, under the conditions of the policy, avoided the policy as to all cotton covered by such bills of lading." The court refused to give such instruction, and the defendant excepted to the refusal.

The court instructed the jury as follows: "By an agreement made between the plaintiff and the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Company and the Memphis & Little Rock Railway Company, the plaintiff engaged to insure for said railway companies, respectively, all cottons stored in the compress sheds and yards of the plaintiff, at the foot of Main Street, Little Rock, when the railway companies or either of them should notify the plaintiff of the issuance by them of bills of lading therefor. This agreement was carried out, and on the day of the fire the plaintiff held insurance in various companies, aggregating the sum of $142,500 in trust and to indemnify the railway companies against loss or damage by fire of the cotton for which they had issued their bills of lading and which was stored in the plaintiff's sheds and yards described in the policy, at the foot of Main Street." The defendant excepted to this instruction.

The court also charged the jury as follows: "As the plaintiff is a trustee, and insured the cotton for the benefit of the railway companies, and has no separate claim of its own on the property, it is only entitled to recover an amount equal to its liability to the railroad companies, or, in other words, a sum that will make the railway companies whole for the cotton on which they had issued bills of lading; so that, if the market price of cotton produces a larger sum than the aggregate loss of the railway companies (and 2,870 bales at $50 per bale, if you should find that was the number of bales and their value, produces an amount slightly in excess of the claims of the railroad companies), then the plaintiff's recovery must be on the basis of the latter sum—that is, one that makes the railway companies whole. In no event is the market value of the cotton to be increased, but it may be reduced by the difference between the value and the amount that will satisfy the just claims of the railway companies. What amount of cotton was burned for which the railway companies had issued bills of lading and which was covered by policies taken out by the plaintiffs, the value of the same, and the amount of the just demands of the railway companies against the plaintiff for the cotton so burned, are questions of fact to be determined by you." The defendant excepted to this charge.

The court also charged the jury as follows: "This suit is brought on a policy of insurance issued by the defendant's Company to the Union Compress Company to indemnify the railroad company for the loss of cotton or for cotton that might be burned after the railroad company issued its bills of lading for it, and while it yet remained in the custody of the Compress Company. Now, the Compress Company, under its contract with the railroad company, is bound to make good, by insurance, to the railroad company, any damages resulting to it from the loss of cotton which the Compress Company held for the railroad company after the railroad company had issued its bills of lading therefor and notified it thereof." The defendant excepted to this charge.

The defendant contends that, although, under a proper construction of the policy, the railroad companies may be regarded as properly beneficiaries under it, the matters involved in the instructions so given by the court were questions of mingled fact and law, and were erroneous, in the light of the facts proved by the plaintiff. The ground urged is, that the policy cannot be reconciled with any intent to insure a railroad company against a loss caused by its own negligence, because the policy insures against "all direct loss or damage by fire;" that therefore the only interest which the railroad companies had in the cotton was a contingent interest, arising from their liability for damages for loss by a fire occurring through their own negligence; that the interest alleged to have been insured as that of the railroad companies was not such as could have sustained a claim on a direct loss by fire, because it was a contingent or doubtful interest, and not a certain or direct interest; that the fire alone could not inflict any loss; and that whether the railroad companies would suffer loss would depend on the contingencies: (1) whether or not their negligence caused the loss; (2) whether the owner would be able to prove negligence in the railroad companies; (3) whether the owner was innocent of contributory negligence; and (4) whether the owner should make a claim for loss against the railroad companies within the Statute of Limitations.

Under this head, it is also urged that, on the face of the policy, the insurance was on cotton held in trust by the plaintiff, in a designated place, for thirty days after November 2; that it was claimed by the plaintiff, in the face of the policy and contradictory of its terms, that cotton covered by a bill of lading issued November 8th, by the Missouri Pacific Railway Company, which was held in trust by the plaintiff, and was in the place described, was not covered by the policy until the bill of lading was issued; that if, as the defendant alleges the fact to be, that cotton was covered by the policy from the 3d to the 8th of November, for the benefit of its owners, there was no process known to the law by which the benefit of such insurance could be transferred to the railroad companies, without action by either the owner or the insurer; that the fact that the plaintiff understood that the insurance was for the benefit of the owners of the cotton was shown by the practical construction put upon the insurance by the plaintiff after the fire, in putting in a claim on behalf of Hanger for 112 bales of cotton burned, not covered by the bills of lading, and being paid for it, on behalf of Hanger, as owner of the cotton; and that thus the plaintiff claims that the insurance was for the owners of the cotton, or for the railroad companies, according to circumstances.

It is further urged that, if the bills of lading changed the possession of the cotton, it was at the time of the fire in the possession of the railroad companies and not in that of the plaintiff, and the plaintiff had ceased to hold it in trust; that in such case it was not insured, because of the provision in the policy that any change in the possession should avoid the policy; that, if the bills of lading did not change the possession, there could have been no insurance on behalf of the railroad companies, because, in the absence of possession by them, they had no right to insure and no contingent liability to loss; and that it was error in the court to charge that at the time of the fire the plaintiff held insurance on cotton covered by bills of lading.

This court is also asked to review its announcement of the principle of law laid down in Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Erie & W. Transportation Co. 117 U. S. 312, 324 [29: 873, 879], that "no rule of law or of public policy is violated by allowing a common carrier, like any other person having either the general property or a peculiar interest in goods, to have them insured against the usual perils, and to recover for any loss from such perils, though occasioned by the negligence of his own servants."

It is also contended that the jury had a right to decide whether or not the policy was issued on goods held in trust for the railroad companies by the plaintiff, and whether or not the plaintiff or the railroad companies held the cotton at the time of the fire; and that these were not questions for the court to decide.

In reply to these suggestions, it is to be said, that the exception of loss by fire, contained in the receipts given by the plaintiff, and in the bills of lading given by the railroad companies, did not free them from responsibility for damages occasioned by their own negligence or that of their employes. Nor are we disposed to review our decision that common carriers can insure themselves against loss proceeding from the negligence of their own servants. The doctrine announced in the case cited has been referred to with approval in the subsequent cases of Orient Ins. Co. v. Adams, 128 U. S. 67, 72 [81: 68, 66], and Liverpool Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co. 129 U. S. 397, 438 [32: 788, 791].

As to the suggestion that by the bills of lading the possession of the cotton was transferred to the railroad companies, and that the policy was avoided thereby, the answer is that the cotton was still in the hands of the plaintiff, in its actual possession and upon its premises. At most, the railroad companies, by acquiring the receipts of the plaintiff and issuing bills of lading for the cotton, took only constructive possession of it: and the plaintiff, retaining actual and physical possession of it, did not lose any element of possession necessary to give it the right to effect insurance for its own benefit, and, as bailee or agent, for the protection of the railroad companies. All that the railroad companies acquired was the right to ultimate possession, which passed to them by the transfer to them, by the original depositors, of the cotton receipts given by the plaintiff.

As to the argument that no recovery can be had in the interest of the railroad companies, because the injury to them depended upon their liability for the negligence of their employes in causing the fire, and the point taken in regard to the words of the policy, "direct loss or damage by fire," the reply is, that those words mean loss or damage occurring directly from fire as the destroying agency, in contradistinction to the remoteness of fire as such agency. The books are full of cases on that subject, and the meaning of the policy is not doubtful. Remoteness of agency is the explosion of gunpowder, gases or chemicals, caused by fire; the explosion of steamboilers; the destruction of buildings to prevent the spread of fire, or their destruction through the falling of burning walls; and so forth. In the present case, the bales of cotton were physically burned by the direct action of fire.

(3.) The court also charged the jury as follows: "Now, you have heard the testimony, gentlemen, with reference to the situation under which this cotton was placed and the length of time it remained there. If you think there is no negligence on the part of the railroad company, then you will find that the railroad company is not liable for this cotton. If you can say that that was a proper place to store cotton, and that leaving a passageway there of not exceeding four feet up and down, through which persons passed at all hours of the day and night to the boat house and skiff ferry, and it being a dry season, with three or four thousand bales of cotton stored there—then, if you say this is not negligence, you excuse this railroad company, and to that extent will disallow the claim of the plaintiff; but if you should so find I would be very much surprised at your verdict, and would not be surprised if I should set it aside; but I will leave it for you to say." The defendant excepted to this instruction, and especially to the italicized portion thereof.

It is urged that in this part of the charge the court did not allude to facts proved which the defendant claimed disproved negligence, and that thus the instruction was not a fair one as to the facts; that the place of storage was selected and the cotton was stored there by the owners of it, and not by the Memphis & Little Rock Railroad Company; that no negligence can be imputed to the latter on account of the unfitness of the place; that it had no control over the cotton stored in that place, and had no track at that place, the Missouri Pacific Railway Company having the track there; that the Memphis & Little Rock Railroad Company had no opportunity to obtain possession of the cotton until after it had been compressed at Argenta; that the bills of lading of the latter company exempted it from liability for loss occurring on the lines of other carriers, and the cotton was burned, not on its line, but on the line of the Missouri Pacific Railway Company; that the court made no allusion to any of these matters as going to establish the absence of negligence and liability on the part of the Memphis & Little Rock Railroad Company; that the court threatened the jury with its displeasure and the setting aside of the verdict if the jury should bring in a verdict for the defendant on that issue; and that this action of the court was erroneous.

But the mere fact of the dwelling by the court with emphasis upon facts which seemed to it of controlling importance, and expressing its opinion as to the bearing of those facts on the question of negligence, is immaterial, if the court left the issue to the jury. In the charge, just before the passage complained of, the court, in referring to the question of the liability of the Memphis & Little Rock Railroad Company for the destruction of the cotton, had said to the jury: "It is for you to determine whether this railroad company was not guilty of negligence, and was not at fault in leaving this cotton in an exposed condition after it issued bills of lading therefor;" and in the clause of the charge objected to, the court expressly states that it leaves the question of negligence to the jury.

On this subject, this court said, in Vicksburg & M. R. Co. v. Putnam, 118 U. S. 545, 553 [80: 257, 258]: "In the courts of the United States, as in those of England, from which our practice was derived, the judge, in submitting a case to a jury, may, at his discretion, whenever he thinks it necessary to assist them in arriving at a just conclusion, comment upon the evidence, call their attention to parts of it which he thinks important, and express his opinion upon the facts; and the expression of such an opinion, when no rule of law is incorrectly stated, and all matters of fact are ultimately submitted to the determination of the jury, cannot be reviewed on writ of error." See also Nudd v. Burrows, 91 U. S. 426 [23: 286]; Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Horst, 93 U. S. 291 [23: 898]; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Vickers, 122 U. S. 360 [30: 1161].

(4.) In the course of the trial the plaintiff offered evidence tending to prove that the contracts and custom of business stated in the bill of exceptions were well known to shippers and to the defendant when the policy sued on was issued, it having been stated to the agents of the defendant by an officer of the plaintiff, when the policy was applied for, that it was intended to cover the interests of the plaintiff and of the railroad companies. The defendant objected to the admission of the evidence, but the objection was overruled, and the defendant excepted; and this is alleged as error.

In this connection it is urged that the complaint does not allege any such knowledge on the part of the defendant, or any intention on its part to issue its policy for the benefit of the railroad companies. The case of Hough v. People's F. Ins. Co. 36 Md. 398, is cited in support of this assignment of error. But we think the evidence was admissible. In the Hough Case the policy covered the merchandise insured, "their own, or held by them in trust, or in which they have an interest or liability." Parol evidence was held to be incompetent which was offered to show that the policy did not cover merchandise which was their own. The evidence would have contradicted the plain terms of the policy. In the present case, the evidence offered was admissible under the ruling in Home Ins. Co. v. Baltimore Warehouse Co. 93 U. S. 527, 542 [23: 868, 869]. In that case the court says: "It is no exception to the rule" (governing the admission of parol evidence) "that, when a policy is taken out expressly 'for or on account of the owner' of the subject insured, or 'on account of whomsoever it may concern,' evidence beyond the policy is received to show who are the owners or who were intended to be insured thereby. In such cases, the words of the policy fail to designate the real party to the contract, and, therefore, unless resort is had to extrinsic evidence, there is no contract at all." See also Finney v. Bedford Ins. Co. 8 Met. 348; Fire Ins. Asso. v. Merchants & Miners Transp. Co. 66 Md. 339; Snow v. Carr, 61 Ala. 363.

Having issued the policy with notice that it was intended to cover the interest of the railroad companies, the defendant is estopped from asserting that the policy was intended to protect only the legal owners of the cotton.

(5.) It is alleged, also, that the court erred in sustaining the demurrer of the plaintiff to paragraph 7 of the defendant's answer, which alleged that at the time of the loss 2,172 bales of the cotton alleged to have been burned were covered by marine policies theretofore issued to the respective owners of the cotton, and therefore, under the terms of the policy in this suit, such cotton was not covered by it. It is alleged also as error that the court, at the trial, rejected, on the objection of the plaintiff and under the exception of the defendant, evidence offered by the latter tending to prove that that number of bales of the cotton covered by the bills of lading, and alleged to have been burned, were, at the time of the fire, covered by marine policies of insurance theretofore issued to the respective owners of such cotton, residing in various portions of the United States and in England.

It is to be said, in reply, that paragraph 7 of the answer does not show that the marine policies were on the same interest as that covered by the fire policy. This element is necessary, because otherwise the policy sued on would be of no practical force. As soon as the consignees of the cotton were advised by telegraph of its shipment, they would take out marine policies to cover their own risk; and thus the fire insurance companies would obtain the premiums of insurance from the railroad companies, and immediately avoid all risk, because of the taking out of the marine policies. North British & M. Ins. Co. v. London, Liverpool & Globe Ins. Co. L. R. 5 Ch. Div. 569. The question of the legal effect of the contribution clause of the policy, before recited, is not presented by the record.

The objection alleged at the trial to the introduction of evidence as to the marine policies was made on the ground that it was immaterial and irrelevant, and that the insured knew nothing of those policies and had no interest in them. This was the objection which was sustained; and the allegation of paragraph 7 of the answer was, that the marine policies had been issued to the respective owners of the cotton. It did not appear that either the insurer or the insured had any previous knowledge of the existence of the marine policies, nor did it appear whether they were issued before or after the date of the fire policy. The issuing of the marine policies, in order to have any effect in this case, must amount to double insurance. In no other view can the defendant have any interest in the question of marine insurance. Double insurance exists only in the case of risks upon the same interest in property and in favor of the same person. North British & M. Ins. Co. v. London, L. & G. Ins. Co. L. R. 5 Ch. Div. 569; Lowell Mfg. Co. v. Safeguard F. Ins. Co. 84 N. Y. 591; Phillips, Insurance, § 359; Wood, Fire Ins. (1st ed.) § 352. No reason can exist for a distinction between the construction of a provision avoiding a policy in case of marine insurance and in case of further or additional fire insurance. In the latter case the provision is always construed as relating only to additional insurance upon the same interest and effected by the same person or in his interest.

The contention of the defendant is, that its policy is avoided by the taking out of a marine policy by the owner of the cotton, without the knowledge or participation of the plaintiff or of the railroad companies, whether the marine insurance was effected before or after the fire insurance in favor of the railway companies, and although the fire insurance policy was taken to protect the independent interests of the railroad companies. We cannot admit the soundness of this view. The cases cited where a policy is avoided by the carrying on of a prohibited business, or the storing of a prohibited article, without the knowledge or consent of the insured owner of a building, are placed upon the ground that the possession of the tenant or occupant of a building is the possession of its owner, and that the contracts which he makes as to the use of the insured premises are in the nature of warranties, and relate to matters over which he has legitimate control. It cannot be contended successfully that the condition in question here was intended by the plaintiff to subject the policy to forfeiture if any person who had a remote and independent insurable interest should take out a policy of marine insurance to protect that interest, the plaintiff having no privity with such person. As was said in Grandin v. Rochester German Ins. Co. 107 Pa. 26, 37: "We are not to suppose that conditions involving forfeitures are introduced into policies by insurance companies, which are purely arbitrary and without reason, merely as a trap to the assured or as a means of escape for the company in case of loss. When, therefore, a general condition has no application to a particular policy, where the reason which alone gives it force is out of the case, the condition itself drops out with it." See also Hoffman v. Aetna F. Ins. Co. 82 N. Y. 405.

The offer of evidence by the defendant at the trial, in regard to the marine insurance, was by its terms an offer to prove the mere fact of marine insurance, in support of the defense set up in paragraph 7 of the answer; and the claim on the part of the defendant that the evidence was proper to support the further defense set up in the answer, as to the amount of the proportionate liability of the defendant, is not tenable. The offer was to prove merely the fact of marine insurance, and not to prove its amount. It was an offer in bar of liability, and not an offer applicable to a reduction of the verdict. No suggestion of the latter object was made in the offer, and the evidence, if admitted as offered, could have no bearing upon the question as to how much the proportionate liability of the defendant would be reduced by virtue of the marine policies. The only specific offer to prove the terms of any marine policy, and the extent of the insurance under it, was made in the form of an offer of the deposition of one Phillips and the testimony of one Bowen, both of which were excluded on proper grounds, and complaint is made only of the exclusion of the deposition of Phillips.

(6.) It is assigned for error that the court erred in striking out the testimony in the deposition of Phillips, the clerk of Ralli Bros., who were claiming pay from the Memphis & Little Rock Railroad Company for 158 bales of cotton, to the effect that that cotton was covered by marine policies taken out by Ralli Bros. The policies of insurance mentioned in the testimony in the deposition were not attached to it. The testimony was objected to by the plaintiff as incompetent because it was an attempt to prove by parol the contents of written instruments; it was stricken out by the court, and the defendant excepted.

The ruling of the court was manifestly correct. There was no proof that the policies referred to were in Liverpool, for all that the witness Bowen said was that he was informed they were there; and as to the copy which Phillips refused to attach to his deposition, all the evidence in regard to its identity is that Phillips said to the witness Bowen that such copy was a copy of the marine policy which had been issued on the cotton. This was, all of it, only hearsay evidence.

(7.) The court was requested by the defendant to instruct the jury as follows: "As this action is brought solely on behalf of the railroad companies on account of liability incurred through carelessness of the agents and servants of the companies, no cause of action accrued against the defendant until the actual payment by said companies of damages on account of the alleged fire, and the recovery cannot be greater than the value, on November 14, 1887, at Little Rock, of the cotton so burned and paid for—nor greater than the sum paid by the railroad companies—that is, if they have paid more than the value of the cotton they cannot recover the excess from the defendant; if they have paid less than the value, they can recover only to the extent of the payment." The court refused to give that instruction, and defendant excepted. This is alleged as error. It is urged that the Memphis & Little Rock Railroad Company has never paid any damages, and that the Missouri Pacific Railway Company had not paid any when this suit was commenced; and it is contended that no cause of action accrues, in a case of that kind, until payment of the damages by the railroad companies is made.

But, as a bailee, under a policy taken out to cover property his own or held by him in trust or on commission, may enforce the contract of insurance to the full value of the property destroyed, holding the proceeds primarily for his own benefit and the balance for that of his bailor, the right of action of the plaintiff accrued on the occurring of the loss. The case cited by the defendant, Oincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. Spratt, 2 Duvall, 4, does not apply to the present case. That was a suit brought by a consignee of goods against a carrier, where the carrier was entitled, under a bill of lading given by it to the consignee, to insurance obtained by the consignee; and it was held that the consignee could not be compelled to proceed upon the policy of insurance before enforcing his claim against the carrier, even where it appeared that the insurer had agreed to pay its loss under the policy, and although it was alleged that the suit was prosecuted for the benefit of the insurer. But here the plaintiff is the assured. The insurance included the protection of the railroad companies. The premium was paid. The insured property was destroyed by fire. The condition of the liability of the insurer was complete, and its liability had fully accrued. The only question for litigation was whether the railroad companies were protected by the insurance. The defendant is called upon to perform only its agreement to pay the insurance money in case of the destruction of the cotton by fire. Its liability is not dependent upon the question whether the liability of the railroad companies has been discharged; nor is the plaintiff's right of action contingent upon the payment by the railroad companies of the value of the cotton burned, but it is contingent only upon the destruction of the cotton by fire under circumstances which impose a liability upon the railroad companies.

We see no error in the record, and the judgment is affirmed.

SCHOOL DISTRICT NO. 2, IN THE

compensation—school building on land—allowance for it—condition—possession in good faith—trespass—date of statute—owner's real interest.

1. Where a School District purchased a piece of land from a person in possession, having a squatter title, with knowledge by it of the issuance of a United States patent therefor, but under the advice of counsel and with the belief that the squatter title was the better title, and erected a school-house thereon, in subsequent proceedings to condemn the land as against the holder of the United States patent, who is the true owner, the School District is only obliged to pay such owner the value of the land without the school-house, although it was notified before the erection of the school-house that it would erect the school-house at its peril.
2. Courts of equity, in accord with the principles of the civil law, when their aid is sought by the real owner, compel him to make allowance for permanent improvements made bona fide by a party lawfully in possession under a defective title. But if the entry upon the land is a naked trespass, buildings permanently attached to the soil become the property of the owner of the latter. The trespasser can acquire no rights by his tortious acts.
3. The right of eminent domain cannot be exercised except upon condition that just compensation shall be made to the owner, and it is the duty of the State to see that the compensation is just, not merely to the individual whose property is taken, but to the public which is to pay for it.

4. The good faith of the School District fixed the character of the entry and it cannot be held to have been such a trespass as to justify the claim that the school building, erected in similar good faith, so became part of the land as to entitle the owner to recover its value.
5. That the School District was not entitled, when it acquired the property, to the exercise of the power of eminent domain, because the Act making such proceedings lawful had not then been passed, is immaterial.
6. The Law of Colorado that "in estimating the value of all property actually taken, the true and actual value thereof at the time of the appraisalment shall be awarded," means the value of the owner's real interest.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

School District No. 2, in the County of Lake and State of Colorado, filed its petition in the County Court of that County against R. S. Searl, stating that long prior to the first day of July, 1881, it had been, and then was, a School District duly and regularly organized; that on July 1, 1881, one Frances M. Watson was in the actual possession and occupancy, under a deed of conveyance to her, of certain lots in a certain block of an addition to the City of Leadville; that on the same day one Schlessinger was in the actual possession and occupancy under deed of conveyance to him of certain other lots; that said Watson and Schlessinger then were, and they and their grantors had for a long time prior thereto been, in the actual possession and occupancy of said lots claiming the ownership thereof; that on that day the board of directors of the School District, having been duly authorized and directed so to do, purchased the lots from Watson and Schlessinger and they were conveyed to the District, the said lots being contiguous and together constituting but one tract or lot, not exceeding one acre; that the lots were situated within the boundaries of the School District, and were purchased for the purpose of a school lot upon which to locate and construct a school-house for the benefit of the School District and the people resident therein; that the School District entered into possession and occupation of the land on July 1, 1881, and proceeded to and did construct thereon a large, costly and valuable school-house, and ever since that time had been and now is in the possession and occupancy of said land, using the same for the purposes of a school; that since the purchase and entry into possession by the School District, the defendant, Searl, had acquired the legal title to the lots composing the school lot, the full title to the same having become vested in him on the second day of February, 1884; "that he is now the owner of said property, and that the title thereto acquired by your petitioner as aforesaid has wholly failed; that your petitioner made the purchases, entered into the possession, and constructed the school-house aforesaid in good faith, believing that it had good right so to do; that said school-house is located with reference to the wants and necessities of the people of each portion of said District, and was at the time of said purchases and is now necessary for the school purposes of said District, and that said land and school lot contain no more than is necessary for the location and construction of the school-house aforesaid and the convenient use of the school; that the compensation to be paid for and in respect of the property aforesaid for the purposes aforesaid cannot be agreed upon by your petitioner and the said defendant, the parties interested; and that the said defendant is a nonresident of the State of Colorado." Petitioner then averred that the value of the property did not exceed the sum of two thousand dollars; and prayed that the compensation to be paid by it to defendant for and on account of said property be assessed in accordance with the statute.

The defendant appeared and on his application the cause was removed into the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Colorado. Upon the trial before the circuit judge and a jury, it was "agreed and admitted, among other things, that the premises appropriated were necessary for the petitioner and were taken for public use." And the following stipulation in writing was offered and read in evidence:

"For the purposes of the present hearing and trial only of the above-entitled action or proceeding, either in this court, where it is now pending, or in the Supreme Court of the United States, where it may be taken on appeal or writ of error, the following facts are agreed upon by and between the respective parties hereto, to wit:

"First. That a receiver's receipt was issued for the Sizer placer, United States survey No. 388, on the 16th day of April, A. D. 1881, out of the district land office of the United States at the City of Leadville, in the State of Colorado, to one Isaac Cooper, claimant.

"Second. That on the 18th day of May, A. D. 1881, a United States patent was issued to the said Isaac Cooper for the said Sizer placer.

"Third. That the land sought to be condemned in the present proceeding is a part of the said Sizer placer.

"Fourth. That since the 20th day of November, A. D. 1882, and before the institution of this proceeding, the said Isaac Cooper conveyed to the said R. S. Searl the said Sizer placer, and the said Searl by virtue thereof is now the owner and holder of the said patent title thereto.

"Fifth. That prior to the application for a patent to the said Sizer placer, and up to the time when the said school board purchased the same and took possession thereof, the land herein sought to be condemned was occupied, possessed and improved, and the ownership thereof claimed, by persons holding under what was called and known as a 'squatter title.'

"Sixth. That on or about the first day of July, A. D. 1881, the said school board purchased and took conveyances of the land now sought to be condemned, with the buildings and improvements thereon, made and erected by the said squatter occupants, from said occupants, and paid therefor the sum of thirty-five hundred ($3,500) dollars.

"Seventh. That on or before the thirtieth day of July, A. D. 1881, the said school board went into actual possession of the lots described in the petition herein, and immediately commenced to build, and on the thirtieth day of January, A. D. 1882, prior to the institution of these proceedings, completed improvements suitable and appropriate for educational purposes, at a cost to the said School District of forty thousand ($40,000) dollars; which property it has since possessed and occupied and still occupies for school purposes.

"Eighth. That at the time of the commencement of this action and the institution of these proceedings in condemnation, the land described in the petition herein, together with the improvements thereon so made by the school board as aforesaid, was of the value of forty thousand ($40,000) dollars.

"Ninth. That at the said times of taking possession and at the time of the commencement of this action and the institution of these proceedings in condemnation, the land described in the petition herein, without the improvements thereon made by the school board, was of the value of three thousand ($3,000) dollars, and that the area of same is less than one acre.

"Tenth. That petitioner had knowledge of the issuance of a United States patent, covering the property sought to be condemned, prior to the purchase of the title which it subsequently purchased, and which was known as the squatter title.

"That prior to such purchase petitioner employed and paid reputable counsel to investigate said title; that the counsel so employed reported in favor of the validity of the so-called squatter title and against the validity of the United States patent; that, believing said so-called squatter title to be better than the title conveyed by United States patent, petitioner purchased the same; that after said purchase petitioner subscribed to the funds of an association organized for the purpose of endeavoring to defeat said patent title.

"Eleventh. That prior to the commencement of and during the erection of the school building now standing on the land sought to be condemned, the board of school directors of petitioner was notified on behalf of respondent, who at that time owned an equitable interest in the said property, and on behalf of respondent's grantors, that any building said School District might erect on said lots would be erected at the peril of the said School District, and would be claimed, when completed, by said respondent and his grantor, but the said School District, having purchased the said lots of the squatters in possession as aforesaid and believing that it had the better title thereto, proceeded, notwithstanding such notice, and made and erected said improvements as aforesaid.

"And in view of the Statute (Dawson's Colorado Code, p. 80, sec. 253), and for the purpose of putting as speedy an end to contention as possible, it is further stipulated that the foregoing values may be taken as the actual values at the time of the trial of this suit, and that the property sought to be condemned is for public use, and within the meaning of the law is necessary for the School District.

"Twelfth. That R. S. Searl is now, and was at the time of the commencement of these proceedings, a citizen and resident of the State of Kansas."

The bill of exceptions also states that "the said defendant, R. S. Searl, introduced further evidence tending to show that he became the legal owner of the premises on the 2d day of February, 1884, and commenced his action of ejectment on the 24th of March, 1884, which was at issue and set for trial in this court on the 11th day of June, 1884; that petitioner filed bill for injunction and obtained writ of injunction restraining trial of ejectment suit on the 7th of June, 1884, and commenced these proceedings on the 9th of June, 1884."

The defendant requested the court to give to the jury a number of instructions, which are omitted in view of the grounds of decision here.

The court refused these instructions and charged the jury generally, and instructed them that the form of their verdict should be as follows: "We, the jury, find, first, that the accurate description of the property sought to be condemned in this action is lots 812, 814, 816, 818, and the north 18.6 feet and the east 35 feet of lot 810, North Poplar Street, and lots 211 and 218 East 9th Street, in Cooper's subdivision of the surface of the Sizer placer, U. S. survey No. 888, situate in the County of Lake and State of Colorado, together with the improvements thereon. Second. That the value of said property at this date is $8,000."

To the giving of this instruction and to the refusal to give those prayed by the defendant, the defendant by his counsel then and there excepted. The jury thereupon returned a verdict in the sum of three thousand dollars, and judgment was rendered thereon that the petitioner, upon "the payment of the amount of the said verdict to the said respondent or the deposit of the said amount in this court within thirty days hereafter, shall be, and it hereby is, invested with the fee in and to said premises. And it appearing that the said petitioner is in possession, it is further considered by the court that upon the payment or deposit of the said sum of money within the time aforesaid [said petitioner shall] retain possession of and hold the premises aforesaid, with all the rights and interests thereto belonging and appertaining."

To review this judgment a writ of error was sued out from this court.

The School District is a part of that sovereignty to which the power of eminent domain is reserved, and in which it rests and abides.

Marathon Twp. School Dist. v. Gage, 39 Mich. 484; Widner v. State, 49 Ark. 172.

The practice of condemnation for a school-house exists in many of the States.

Mills, Eminent Domain, § 17, and cases cited; Township Board of Education v. Hackmann, 48 Mo. 243; Williams v. Newfane School Dist. 33 Vt. 271; Peckham v. North Providence School Dist. 7 R. I. 545; Long v. Fuller, 68 Pa. 170.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

Upon the conceded facts, unless the plaintiff in error was entitled to be compensated for the school-house in question, the instruction limiting the recovery to three thousand dollars was correct, and the judgment must be affirmed.

The Constitution of the State of Colorado provides "that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property, without due process of law;" and "that private property shall not be taken or damaged, for public or private use, without just compensation." (Art. II. §§ 15, 25; Gen. Stat. Col. 1883, pp. 84, 35.)

Did the just compensation thus secured to the owner of property, taken in the exercise of the power of eminent domain, include in this instance payment to the plaintiff in error for the improvements made by the School District in order to carry out the specific use and purpose for which the land was required? Could plaintiff in error properly insist that the loss of the school-house was an injury which he sustained by reason of the taking?

The argument is that the moment the school-house was completed it belonged to the owner of the land by operation of law, and therefore that he was entitled to be recompensed for it upon condemnation. The maxim quicquid plantatur solo, solo cedit, is not of universal application. Structures for the purposes of trade or manufacture, and not intended to become irrevocably part of the realty, are not within the rule (Van Ness v. Pacard, 27 U. S. 2 Pet. 137 [7:184]); nor is it applicable where they are erected under agreement or by consent, the presumption not arising that the builder intended to transfer his own improvements to the owner. And courts of equity, in accord with the principles of the civil law, when their aid is sought by the real owner, compel him to make allowance for permanent improvements made bona fide by a party lawfully in possession under a defective title. Story, Eq. Jur. § 1237.

The civil law recognized the principle of reimbursing to the bona fide possessor the expense of his improvements if he was removed from his possession by the legal owner, by allowing him the increase in the value of the land created thereby. And the Betterment Laws of the several States proceed upon that equitable view. The right of recovery, where the occupant in good faith believes himself to be the owner, is declared to stand upon a principle of natural justice and equity, and such laws are held not to be unconstitutional as impairing vested rights, since they adjust the equities of the parties as nearly as possible according to natural justice; and in its application as a shield of protection, the term "vested rights" is not used in any narrow sense, but as implying a vested interest of which the individual cannot be deprived arbitrarily without injustice. The general welfare and public policy must be regarded, and the equal and impartial protection of the interests of all. Cooley, Const. Lim. *356, *386.

But if the entry upon land is a naked trespass, buildings permanently attached to the soil become the property of the owner of the latter. The trespasser can acquire no rights by his tortious acts.

The circuit court was not dealing with an action of ejectment or trespass, but simply with a proceeding in the exercise of the right of eminent domain. That right is the offspring of political necessity, and is inseparable from sovereignty unless denied to it by its fundamental law. It cannot be exercised except upon condition that just compensation shall be made to the owner, and it is the duty of the State, in the conduct of the inquest by which the compensation is ascertained, to see that it is just, not merely to the individual whose property is taken, but to the public which is to pay for it. Garrison v. New York, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 196, 204 [22:612, 614]; Kohl v. United States, 91 U. S. 867, 871 [23:449, 450]. The occupancy here was in no respect for a private purpose or pecuniary gain, but strictly and wholly for the public use. There could be no presumption that this public agent intended to confer public property upon a private individual, nor were the circumstances such as to impart the character of willful trespass to the entry by the District, or impose liability to the forfeiture of improvements made in discharge of its public duty.

It is among the agreed facts in the case that the premises appropriated were necessary for the schools and were taken for that public use; that though the District had knowledge of the issuing of a patent covering the property, yet it purchased the adverse title of the party then in possession, believing it to be better than the patent title, and upon the advice of reputable counsel, who had, on investigation, reported against the validity of the patent and in favor of the validity of the title purchased, and paid thirty-five hundred dollars, which was five hundred dollars more than the actual value, without the building, was admitted to be when the trial took place; and that, notwithstanding notice that it was proceeding at its peril, it erected the building in reliance upon such belief that it had the better title. The only legitimate inference from these facts is that the District acted throughout in good faith, as the opposite of fraud and bad faith, and, although it may have been wholly mistaken, the intention guided the entry and fixed its character, and it cannot be held to have been such a trespass as to justify the claim that the school building, erected in similar good faith, so became part and parcel of the land as to entitle the owner to recover its value. Plaintiff in error knew when he obtained the title that the land was in necessary use by the public for a purely public purpose, and that no intention of parting with the structures could be imputed; and no notice of what his grantor or himself intended to insist on could destroy the good faith in fact, which the conceded belief of the District imparted to its conduct.

In Wright v. Mattison, 59 U. S. 18 How. 50 [15:280], this court, in considering a statute of the State of Illinois in protection of persons "in the actual possession of lands or tenements under claim and color of title made in good faith," reiterated the rule that color of title is matter of law, but good faith in the party claiming under such color is purely a question of fact; and held that, while defects in the title might not be urged against it as destroying color, they might have an important and legitimate influence in showing a want of confidence and good faith in the mind of the vendee, if they were known to him, and he therefore believed the title to be fraudulent and void. The court approved of the opinion of the Supreme Court of Illinois in Woodward v. Blanchard, 16 Ill. 424, in which it was said by Scates, Ch. J., that "the state of mind of the party in relation to such title was an existing truth which must be ascertained and found as a fact in the cause. Many independent facts and surrounding circumstances may be admissible in evidence, and legitimately considered as establishing or impeaching the state of mind in its good faith, honest belief or trust in, or dependence upon, such title." And this language was quoted by the court from that opinion: "Good faith is doubtless used here in its popular sense, as the actual, existing state of the mind; whether so from ignorance, skepticism, sophistry, delusion, fanaticism or imbecility, and without regard to what it should be from given legal standards of law or reason." Ewing v. Burnet, 86 U. S. 11 Pet. 41 [9:624]; Pillow v. Roberts, 54 U. S. 13 How. 472 [14:228]. As remarked by Beckwith, J., in McCagg v. Heacock, 34 Ill. 476, 479: "The good faith required by the statute, in the creation or acquisition of color of title, is a freedom from a design to defraud the person having the better title;" and "the knowledge of an adverse claim to, or lien upon, property, does not, of itself, indicate bad faith in a purchaser, and is not even evidence of it, unless accompanied by some improper means to defeat such claim or lien."

We are of opinion that plaintiff in error could not successfully contend that the School District should be treated as a naked trespasser. And as the actual value of the land at the time of the trial must have included whatever increase may have inured by reason of its adaptability to school purposes and every other element entering into its cash or market value, as tested by its capacity for any and all uses, it follows that the true criterion of recovery was adopted.

It is not denied that the School District, when it filed its petition, was entitled to acquire the property in the exercise of the power of eminent domain, but it is said that it could not do so prior to February 13, 1883, the date of the passage of an Act rendering such action on its part lawful. (Sess. Laws Col. 1883, p. 263; Gen. Stat. § 8044, p. 898.) But we cannot perceive that this affects the precise question before us. Inability to condemn indicates that possession was not taken with the view of proceedings to that end, but that is conceded on the other ground that the School District believed that it had the better title and erected its building accordingly. When it came to possess and exercise the power, the inquiry was limited to such compensation as was just and did not embrace remote or speculative damages, or payment for injuries not properly susceptible of being claimed to have been sustained.

It was ruled in Secombe v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 90 U. S. 23 Wall. 108, 118 [23:67, 70], in relation to the taking of private property by a railroad company under the power of eminent domain, that "prior occupation without authority of law would not preclude the company from taking subsequent measures authorized by law to condemn the land for their use. If the company occupied the land before condemnation without the consent of the owners, and without any law authorizing it, they are liable in trespass to the persons who owned the land at the time, but not to the present plaintiff."

Plaintiff in error obtained the legal title February 2, 1884, and this petition was filed the second day of June of that year. If he suffered injury by being kept out of possession, for which he could recover damages, they could not be assessed in this action, and there is nothing in the record to show that any claim to that effect was made.

Chapter XXXI. of the General Laws of Colorado treats of eminent domain, and constitutes chapter XXI. of Dawson's Code of Civil Procedure, referred to in the record. Section 258 provides that "in estimating the value of all property actually taken, the true and actual value thereof at the time of the appraisalment shall be allowed and awarded," and that "in all cases the owner or owners shall receive the full and actual value of all property actually taken." (Dawson's Code 1884, p. 80.) This means, of course, the value of the owner's real interest. It was agreed that at the time of the trial the actual value of the land, "without the improvements thereon made by the school board," was three thousand dollars, so that, as before stated, the sole question is whether the circuit court erred in holding that the defendant could not be allowed for the improvements.

We think that in this there was no error. In our judgment, the technical rule of law invoked to sustain the defendant's contention that he owned the school-house was inapplicable, and the value of the improvements could not justly be included in the compensation. Numerous well-considered decisions of the state courts announce the same result. Justice v. Nesquehoning Valley R. Co. 87 Pa. 28, 32; Jones v. New Orleans & S. R. Co. 70 Ala. 227; Lyon v. Green Bay & M. R. Co. 42 Wis. 588; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Goodwin, 111 Ill. 273; Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. Mosier, 14 Or. 519; Morgan's Appeal, 39 Mich. 675.

The judgment is affirmed.

DAVID ARMSTRONG, Receiver of the FIDELITY NATIONAL BANK OF CINCINNATI, OHIO, Appt.,
v.

THE AMERICAN EXCHANGE NATIONAL BANK OF CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

SAME v. SAME.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 433-470.)

Foreign bill of exchange—consideration—deposit of draft—notice—deposit ticket—estoppel by representation—certificate of deposit—rights of receiving bank—receiver of bank, when estopped—payment of certificate—liability of bank issuing it—improper use of proceeds—illegal transaction—recovery upon—obligation connected with, when enforced—interest on receiver's dividend.

1. A draft drawn in Ohio, upon a bank in New York, and payable in New York, is a foreign bill of exchange.

NOTE.—Bills drawn in one State and payable in another are foreign bills. See note to Buckner v. Finley, Bk. 7, p. 523.

As to liability of a bank upon a check drawn upon it, see note to National Bank of Republic v. Millard, Bk. 13, p. 397.

2. In a suit on a bill of exchange by the payee against the drawer, want of consideration from the purchaser of the bill cannot be shown, if the payee is a bona fide holder for value, the purchaser not being the drawer's agent in delivering the bill to the payee.
3. Where a draft is deposited with a bank by the holder, and the bank places the draft to the depositor's credit, as cash, and pays his checks drawn on it, the bank becomes the owner of the draft for value.
4. The fact that the draft was payable to the order of the bank was not notice to the bank that the holder was not its purchaser or remitter.
5. A deposit ticket made by the assistant cashier of the bank for the use of the officers of the bank, and not seen nor assented to by the depositor, did not change the terms of the deposit as between the bank and the depositor.
6. Where a bank represents to another bank that a holder of a draft is a bona fide holder, and it takes the draft on deposit and places it to the holder's credit and pays his checks, relying on such representation, the former bank is estopped from showing that such holder was not a bona fide holder of the draft, and its receiver stands in no better position.
7. A letter of advice or statement written by the cashier of one bank to another bank stating that a person therein named has deposited with the former bank a sum of money therein stated to the credit of the latter bank for the use of another, is a certificate of deposit.
8. The bank to whose credit the moneys were thus stated to be deposited, by receiving such certificate and applying it to the use of the person directed therein, became an innocent purchaser for value of the certificate, and the bank writing it became indebted in its amount to the bank receiving it.
9. The subsequent receiver of the bank who made such certificate is estopped from setting up the falsity of the statement therein that the money was deposited with it to the credit of the other bank, after the latter has acted upon it.
10. The certificate of deposit was as much applied to the use of the person named therein as having made the deposit, by paying his indebtedness to the bank receiving it, as by paying what he owed to any other party.
11. If the person stated in the certificate as having made the deposit to the credit of the bank receiving it did not in fact deposit the money as stated by the bank making the certificate, the receiver of the latter bank must make good the representation by placing a like amount to the credit of the bank who received the certificate.
12. The bank receiving the certificate of deposit was bound to honor the checks of the person named therein drawn on the fund, and could not refuse to pay them on the ground that such person intended to make a improper use of the money, such as to pay a gambling debt.
13. In a suit on the certificate of deposit brought by the bank which received it against the receiver of the bank which issued it, the latter cannot defend on the ground that the plaintiff knew that if it paid over the money to the person named in the certificate, as the bank issuing it requested, the money would be used in an illegal transaction, in which the plaintiff did not participate and of which it had no knowledge or notice.
14. Where losses have been made in an illegal transaction, a person who lends money to the loser, with which to pay the debt, can recover the loan, notwithstanding his knowledge of the fact that the money was to be so used.
15. An obligation will be enforced, though indirectly connected with an illegal transaction, if it is supported by an independent consideration, so that the plaintiff does not require the aid of the illegal transaction to make out his case.
16. Interest on a dividend declared by a receiver should be allowed from the time it was declared and ought to have been paid.

Submitted Jan. 13, 1890. Decided March 3, 1890.

APPEALS from decrees of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Ohio, the decree in No. 1110 being one directing defendant to allow the plaintiff's claim on the draft in question for its full amount against the assets in his hands as receiver and to satisfy it by dividends from the assets of the Fidelity Bank and to pay the dividend of 25 per cent already declared, with interest from date of dividend and the costs of the suit; and the decree in No. 1111 being that the plaintiff is bona fide holder of the certificate of deposit for valuable consideration, and that such certificate is a valid claim for the balance due on it against the assets in the hands of defendant as such receiver, and that he satisfy the same by paying dividends from the assets of said bank, and that he pay thereon said dividend of 25 per cent already declared, with interest and costs.

Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. John W. Herron, for appellant:

The court erred in giving a judgment for interest on the amount of dividend previously declared.

Mr. Justice Blatchford delivered the opinion of the court:

These are appeals by David Armstrong, receiver of the Fidelity National Bank of Cincinnati, Ohio, from decrees rendered against him by the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Ohio, in two suits in equity brought against him in that court by the American Exchange National Bank of Chicago, Illinois. The first case will be referred to as No. 1110, and the second case as No. 1111.

No. 1110 was commenced on the 5th of November, 1887, by a petition, which was demurred to by the defendant. The demurrer was overruled, the defendant answered the petition, and there was a replication to the answer. Then, by leave of the court, a bill in equity was filed in place of the petition. The bill sets forth the following facts: The plaintiff is a corporation under the laws of the United States, doing a general banking business in Chicago, Illinois. The defendant is the receiver of the Fidelity National Bank of

Cincinnati, Ohio, a corporation created under the laws of the United States, which did a general banking business in Cincinnati, Ohio. On the 15th of June, 1887, the plaintiff became the owner and holder of a draft drawn by the Fidelity Bank on the Chemical National Bank of the City of New York, a copy of which, with all credits and indorsements thereon, is as follows:

"The Fidelity National Bank.

"Cincinnati, June 14, 1887, No. 16,412.

"Pay to the order of American Exch'ge Nat. B'k, Chicago, one hundred thousand dollars.

"Benj. E. Hopkins,

"As. Cas. Cashier.

"To the Chemical National Bank, New York City."

Indorsed: "Without recourse. A. L. Dewar, cashier. Dep. acct. C. J. Kershaw & Co. C. J. Kershaw & Co. Pay American Exchange Nat. Bank, New York, account of American Exchange Nat. Bank of Chicago, 15 June, 1887. A. L. Dewar, cash."

At the time the draft was drawn, Benjamin E. Hopkins was the assistant cashier of the Fidelity Bank, and by its authority the signature, "Benj. E. Hopkins, As. Cas.," was used for the signature of that bank. Within a reasonable time after the plaintiff became the owner of the draft, to wit, on June 17, 1887, it was presented to the drawee for payment, which was refused. It was protested for non-payment, and notice of the demand, refusal and protest was forthwith given to the Fidelity Bank; and thereupon that bank became liable to the plaintiff in the sum of $100,000, with interest from June 17, 1887. After the draft was drawn and the plaintiff had become its owner, the Fidelity Bank, without the knowledge of the plaintiff, ordered the drawee not to pay the draft; and the drawee, in refusing to pay it, was acting in accordance with such instructions. On the 27th of June, 1887, the comptroller of the currency of the United States, acting under the statute, appointed the defendant receiver of the Fidelity Bank. On the 12th of July, 1887, a decree was rendered by the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western Division of the Southern District of Ohio, in a proceeding instituted by such comptroller against the Fidelity Bank, adjudging that its franchises had been forfeited and declaring it to be dissolved. In September, 1887, the claim of the plaintiff was presented to the receiver in due form, but he rejected it.

The prayer of the bill is for a decree that such claim for $100,000, with interest from June 17, 1887, to June 27, 1887, is a valid claim against the estate in the hands of the defendant as receiver, and that he be directed to satisfy it by paying dividends upon it from the assets of the Fidelity Bank; and for general relief.

The defendant answered the petition, and, after the bill was filed, it was ordered that such answer stand for an answer to the bill, and that the replication which had been filed to it stand also.

The defense set up in the answer is that the plaintiff is not the owner of the draft; that it was signed by Hopkins, and came into the possession of the plaintiff, without any consideration paid for it by the plaintiff to the Fidelity Bank; and that that bank never received any consideration from any person for it, and is not indebted to the plaintiff on account of it.

It was admitted of record that the draft was presented to the drawee within the reasonable time allowed by law, that payment was refused, that it was protested for nonpayment, and that notice of demand, refusal and protest was given in due time to the Fidelity Bank; and also that the defendant, on October 31, 1887, declared, and has paid, a dividend of 25 per cent on all claims against the Fidelity Bank and the receiver, approved or adjudicated as valid claims.

Besides cases Nos. 1110 and 1111, a third suit was brought, and testimony was taken in all three of them at the same time. It was stipulated of record that all depositions taken or to be taken in any one of the three cases might be read by either party in all of them.

After a hearing on pleadings and proofs, a decree was entered, on the 3d of December, 1888, in No. 1110, setting forth that, on the 15th of June, 1887, the plaintiff became and had ever since been the owner of the draft in question; that it was duly presented to the drawee and payment refused, and the Fidelity Bank had due notice; that the claim was duly presented to the receiver and rejected; that it is a just and valid claim, and should have been allowed by him; that the plaintiff is a bona fide holder of the draft for a valuable consideration before maturity, without notice of any want of consideration, free from all equities or defenses whatsoever; and directing the defendant to allow the claim as one for the full amount of $100,000 against the assets in his hands as receiver, to satisfy it by paying such dividends as had been made theretofore and as should be made thereafter from the assets of the Fidelity Bank in due course of administration, and to pay the dividend of 25 per cent already declared October 31, 1887, with interest from that date until the date of payment, and also the costs of the suit. From that decree the defendant has appealed.

No. 1111 was commenced by a petition filed on the 5th of November, 1887, which was demurred to and the demurrer was overruled. The defendant then answered the petition, a replication was filed to the answer, and then leave was granted to the plaintiff to file a bill in equity instead of the petition. That bill sets forth as follows, in addition to the same formal matters set forth in the bill in No. 1110: On the 14th of June, 1887, the Fidelity Bank issued a certificate of deposit, or letter of advice, addressed to the plaintiff, of which the following is a copy:

"Briggs Swift, President; E. L. Harper, Vice-President; Ammi Baldwin, Cashier; Benj.

E. Hopkins, Ass't. Cashier.

"U. S. depository. The Fidelity National Bank. Capital, $2,000,000.00; surplus, $400,000.00.

"Cincinnati, June 14th, 1887.

"The American Exchange National Bank, Chicago, Illinois.

"Gentlemen: Messrs. Wilshire, Eckert & Co. have deposited two hundred thousand (§200,000.00) dollars to your credit for the use of C. J. Kershaw & Co.

"Respectfully yours,
"Benj. E. Hopkins, As. Cas."

At the time this certificate of deposit was issued, Benjamin E. Hopkins was the assistant cashier of the Fidelity Bank, and his signature, "Benj. E. Hopkins, As. Cas.," was used as the signature of that bank. The certificate was delivered by it to the plaintiff on the 15th of June, 1887, and the plaintiff has owned it ever since. On the faith thereof, the plaintiff, at the request of said C. J. Kershaw & Co., on said 15th of June, paid to said C. J. Kershaw & Co., and upon their orders, the full amount of $200,000, and by means thereof became entitled to recover from the Fidelity Bank the full amount of the certificate. On June 18, 1887, the plaintiff presented the certificate to the Fidelity Bank, at its banking office in Cincinnati, and demanded payment thereof, which was refused. The plaintiff became indebted to the Fidelity Bank in the sum of $1,802.77, for a balance on general account. After deducting such balance, there was due from the latter to the plaintiff, at the time of such demand, $198,697.23, which amount is still due, with interest from June 18, 1887. In September, 1887, that claim was presented to the defendant for allowance, but he rejected it.

The prayer of the bill is for a decree that the claim, amounting to $198,697.23, with interest from June 18, 1887, to June 27, 1887, is a valid claim against the assets in the hands of the defendant as receiver, and that he be directed to satisfy it by paying dividends upon it from the assets of the Fidelity Bank in due course of administration.

The answer to the petition and the replication thereto were ordered to stand in respect to the bill, and like stipulations were made as in case No. 1110.

The defense set up in the answer is as follows: One Joseph Wilshire was a member of the firm of Wilshire, Eckert & Co. E. L. Harper, Benjamin E. Hopkins (the assistant cashier of the Fidelity Bank) and Wilshire conspired to defraud the Fidelity Bank. Harper, Hopkins and Wilshire, with other persons, were, at and before the 14th of June, 1887, engaged in what is called "a deal" in wheat, which is speculating in wheat, in Chicago, by buying very large amounts of wheat on paying a margin or percentage of the purchase price, and entering into contracts for future delivery to them of wheat in large quantities, upon which contracts they were advancing and paying a margin or part of the price of the wheat. The object of the speculation and purchase under the contracts was to enable said parties to own and control all the wheat then in Chicago or to arrive within the time of the performance of the contracts, and thereby to create what is called a "corner" in the market, that is to say, by contracting for the purchase and delivery of more wheat than exists and can by any possibility be delivered, to create a fictitious value or price therefor, effect an advance in the market price of wheat in Chicago, and realize a profit thereon to Harper, Hopkins and Wilshire, and such other persons as might be engaged with them in the speculation. Harper, Hopkins and Wilshire conspired together unlawfully to abstract from the Fidelity Bank its money and to embezzle its funds in the possession or control of Harper and Hopkins as its officers, and, by drawing bills of exchange and other evidences of indebtedness in the name of the bank, to use its credit and resources for their own benefit, not in the prosecution of its legitimate business, but in the purchase of wheat in Chicago and contracts for the future delivery of wheat, in the prosecution of said unlawful speculation. The letter of advice addressed to the plaintiff, set forth in the bill, was signed by Hopkins and delivered by Harper to Wilshire, in the execution of the scheme to abstract the funds of the bank and unlawfully use its credit in the speculation in wheat, and for no other purpose. Wilshire, Eckert & Co. did not deposit any part of the $200,000, mentioned in the letter of advice, in the Fidelity Bank, to the credit of the plaintiff, for the use therein expressed. The letter was unlawfully and fraudulently addressed to the plaintiff, when in fact no money had been deposited by any person to the credit of the plaintiff with the Fidelity Bank, and in the execution of said scheme. At the time of the alleged delivery of the letter of advice to the plaintiff, it had notice that Harper, Hopkins and Wilshire were engaged in said speculation, and were using the credit and funds of the Fidelity Bank unlawfully for such purpose, and that the letter of advice was written and signed for such purpose, and delivered to Wilshire and by him to the plaintiff, to be used by and through the plaintiff, and by C. J. Kershaw & Co., who were, and to the plaintiff were well known to be, brokers, in the purchase of wheat for the account of Wilshire and his confederates, and had full knowledge that the purchases were in the execution of an unlawful combination to control the market for wheat and thereby enhance the value thereof in Chicago. The terms of the agreement between Wilshire, representing the firm of Wilshire, Eckert & Co., and his confederates, and the circumstances connected therewith, were such that the plaintiff was put upon inquiry, and could not and did not bona fide make advances to C. J. Kershaw & Co., nor become entitled to receive from the Fidelity Bank any part of the amount of such advances, and, if made by the plaintiff, they were not made in the regular course of business, but in bad faith and with such notice. The Fidelity Bank did not become indebted to the plaintiff in any amount, and the claim is not a valid one and ought not to be allowed.

On the 3d of December, 1888, after a hearing on pleadings and proofs, a decree was made setting forth that, on the 15th of June, 1887, the plaintiff became the owner of the certificate of deposit or letter of advice set out in the bill; that, on the faith thereof, and without notice of the matters set forth in the answer, the plaintiff, on the 15th of June, 1887, advanced to C. J. Kershaw & Co. the full amount of $200,000, and by reason thereof then became entitled to recover from the Fidelity Bank the full amount of the certificate; that, on the 18th of June, 1887, the plaintiff presented the certificate to the Fidelity Bank and demanded payment thereof, which was refused; that, after the Fidelity Bank became indebted to the plaintiff in said sum of $200,000, the plaintiff became indebted to the Fidelity Bank in the sum of $1,802.77, being a balance due on general account; that, after deducting such balance, there was due from the Fidelity Bank, at the time of such demand, $198,697.23; that the claim therefor was presented to the defendant and rejected; and that the plaintiff is a bona fide holder of the certificate, for valuable consideration, without notice of any want of consideration, and free from any equities or defenses whatsoever. The decree adjudges that the claim is a valid claim for $198,697.23 against the assets in the hands of the defendant as receiver, and directs him to satisfy the same by paying thereon such dividends as had been made theretofore, and should be made thereafter, from the assets of the Fidelity Bank, in due course of administration, and to pay the dividend of 25 per cent already declared, October 31, 1887, with interest from that date until the time of payment, and also the costs of the proceeding. From this decree the defendant has appealed.

Case No. 1110 will be first considered. The receiver contends that the draft is not a valid claim against the funds in his hands; that there was no indorsement of it by the plaintiff, which was the payee, to a bona fide holder; that the draft came into the possession of the plaintiff without any consideration being paid therefor by it to the Fidelity Bank, and that bank never received any consideration from any person for it; and that the plaintiff does not occupy the position of an indorsee of it for value.

The facts in evidence, as we understand them, are these: The draft numbered 16,412 was deposited with the plaintiff by one of its regular customers, C. J. Kershaw & Co., on June 15, 1887, and was indorsed by the plaintiff's cashier and by that firm for deposit, thus: "Dep. acct. C. J. Kershaw & Co. C. J. Kershaw & Co." This draft was indorsed over on the same day by the plaintiff to the American Exchange National Bank of New York, for collection for account of the plaintiff, and was duly presented to the drawee on the 17th of June, 1887. Payment was refused, the draft was duly protested and returned to the plaintiff, and notice of protest was duly given to the drawer. Another draft for $100,000, numbered 16,413, and not involved in either of the suits Nos. 1110 and 1111, was drawn by the Fidelity Bank on the Chemical National Bank of New York City to the order of C. J. Kershaw & Co., and was indorsed and deposited with the plaintiff by that firm on June 15, 1887. It also was sent forward, payment was refused, it was protested, and notice was given to the drawer. A claim for its amount having been rejected by the receiver, a suit was brought on it by the plaintiff against the receiver, and a decree was rendered in favor of the plaintiff for its full amount. The third suit was No. 1111.

The plaintiff and the Fidelity Bank were corresponding banks, and made collections for each other. The copartnership of C. J. Kershaw & Co. was composed of Charles J. Kershaw and Hamilton Dewar, as general partners, and Charles B. Eggleston, as special partner. It was engaged in the grain commission business on the Board of Trade in Chicago, and kept its sole bank account with the plaintiff. In March, 1887, and before that time, it began to purchase wheat on orders from Wilshire, Eckert & Co., who were commission merchants in Cincinnati; and it was buying wheat also for J. W. Hoyt, another commission merchant in Cincinnati. It did not know the principals for whom Wilshire, Eckert & Co. and Hoyt were acting, and did not know until the 30th of May that they were acting for the same principal. It was the custom of Wilshire, Eckert & Co. to transfer money to Kershaw & Co., for such purchases, by advising the latter that a certain sum had been deposited in bank in Cincinnati to their credit, and Kershaw & Co. then drew a draft against such deposit, and deposited the draft to their own credit with the plaintiff. Kershaw & Co. selected the Fidelity Bank as the bank in which they wished the funds to be deposited. After the two banks became correspondents, money was transmitted also by certificates of deposit substantially like the one in No. 1111; and, prior to the 15th of June, 1887, the Fidelity Bank had issued and sent to the plaintiff four such certificates, on printed forms, reading as follows—the written portions being in italics:

"Cincinnati, O., 30.

"To American Exchange Natl. Bank, Chicago.
"Wilshire, Eckert & Co. deposit to your credit, for the use of C. J. Kershaw & Co., $100,000.
Fidelity Natl. Bank."

On the 2d of May, 1887, the Fidelity Bank sent another telegram to the plaintiff, announcing that Wilshire, Eckert & Co. had deposited with it, to the credit of the plaintiff, for account of Kershaw & Co., $100,000.

The Fidelity Bank, therefore, had advised the plaintiff, prior to June 15, 1887, that it had received six different deposits to the credit of the plaintiff for the use of Kershaw & Co., amounting in the aggregate to $353,000, and that four of those deposits, amounting to $250,000, had been made by Wilshire, Eckert & Co. It was the custom of the plaintiff, on receiving such certificates of deposit, to place the amount of the same to the credit of Kershaw & Co., and allow them to check against the same as deposits of money; and the four certificates were all paid by the Fidelity Bank. It was also the custom of the plaintiff to place to the credit of Kershaw & Co., as cash, any drafts which they drew on Cincinnati and deposited with it.

On the 13th of June, 1887, Wilshire was in Chicago, and promised Kershaw & Co. that he would deposit on the next day $200,000 for their use, in the Fidelity Bank. Wilshire returned to Cincinnati that night, and on June 14th Kershaw & Co., in anticipation of that deposit, left their draft for $200,000 with the plaintiff, asking the latter to find out by telegram if the deposit had been made, and, if so, to forward the draft for collection. The plaintiff telegraphed to the Fidelity Bank, on June 14, as follows: "Has two hundred thousand been placed with you for C. J. K. & Co.?" The Fidelity Bank on the same day replied: "Not yet made," and the draft was not sent forward. In consequence of this promise of Wilshire, and the previous course of dealing between the two banks, the plaintiff was prepared to receive, on the morning of June 15, as hereafter mentioned, the certificate of deposit for $200,000.

The state of the account of Kershaw & Co. with the plaintiff, on the morning of June 14, 1887, was this: They owed the plaintiff $380,378.37 overdraft and $280,000 in notes; against which the plaintiff held as collateral security 692,688 bushels of wheat, 5,000 bushels of corn, and certain wheat then being loaded for shipment. The total value of such collateral, on the morning of that day, was $736,000, and the total indebtedness of Kershaw & Co. to the plaintiff was $660,378.37. During that day there was a panic in wheat, and the price fell from 92 cents to 74 cents a bushel. The security of the plaintiff fell in value at a corresponding rate, and at 1 o'clock in the afternoon was worth only $544,894. Kershaw & Co. then owed the plaintiff $525,477.01, namely, $280,000 in notes and $245,477.01 overdraft. Thereupon the plaintiff stopped paying the checks of Kershaw & Co., the amount of the checks refused being about $60,000.

The state of the account between the Fidelity Bank and the plaintiff, on the 14th of June, 1887, was as follows: The former owed the latter a balance of something over $100,000, consisting in part of a draft drawn on the former by Wilshire, Eckert & Co., to the order of Kershaw & Co., on the 18th of June, and deposited by Kershaw & Co. with the plaintiff on that day. The plaintiff, in accordance with its custom, had treated such draft as a cash item, and had paid the checks of Kershaw & Co. against it, on the 14th. On the night of the 13th, that draft had been sent by the plaintiff to the Fidelity Bank for payment, and on the 14th the latter telegraphed the plaintiff that it was paid. Payment was made by placing the amount to the credit of the plaintiff on the books of the Fidelity Bank. On the same day (June 14) the plaintiff telegraphed to the Fidelity Bank, "Remit at once hundred thousand, clearing-house currency or gold," in response to which it received, on the morning of the 15th, $50,000 in currency by express and a draft for $50,000, drawn by the Fidelity Bank on the Chemical National Bank of New York, which was duly paid by the drawee. At the close of business on the 14th of June, the plaintiff had security enough to make itself whole as respected Kershaw & Co., and it had called upon the Fidelity Bank for substantially the whole balance of account due from that bank, and the same had been sent on. The plaintiff had, therefore, no inducement to take any unusual risk, in regard to the transactions now to be stated.

Just after the plaintiff had closed its bank for business on the 14th of June, it received the following telegram:

"Cincinnati O., 6 | 14, 1887.

"Am. Ex. Nat. Bank:

"Joseph Wilshire will be at your bank tomorrow morning with six hundred thousand dollars to make his trade with Kershaw and others good if they are protected until he arrives.

"Fidelity Nat. Bank."

The cashier of the plaintiff sent for Kershaw & Co., showed them this telegram, and told them that, while the plaintiff wanted to do everything in its power to assist them, it could not agree to protect them in any manner. Kershaw & Co. replied in substance that if Wilshire came from Cincinnati that night, he would arrive about 8 o'clock the next morning, and that they needed no protection for the time before his arrival. Kershaw & Co. then suggested and dictated the following telegram, which was sent by the cashier of the plaintiff:

"Chicago, 14 June, 1887.

"Fidelity National Bank, Cincinnati, Ohio:

"If Wilshire is here to-morrow morning with six hundred thousand currency the deal will be safe. Answer quick.

"Am. Exch. Nat. Bank."

The same night, two telegrams were received by the plaintiff, which read as follows:

"Cincinnati, Ohio, June 14, 1887.

"American Exchange Natl. Bank:

"Wilshire will be there on the morning train.

"Fidelity Natl. Bank."

"Cincinnati, Ohio, 6 | 14, 1887.

"American Exchange National Bank, Chicago:

"Have already wired you that he will be there with six hundred thousand in the morning.

"Fidelity Nat. Bank."

Kershaw & Co. were also advised by telegram from Cincinnati the same afternoon that $600,000 would be sent to Chicago that night.

Wilshire arrived in Chicago on the morning of June 15, and went to the plaintiff's bank, where he had an interview with Kershaw, Dewar and Eggleston, all the members of the firm of Kershaw & Co. Kershaw and Dewar figured up how much money they needed, and estimated that they needed $68,000 to settle up trades through the clearing-house of the Board of Trade, $90,000 to deposit for additional margins, and $60,000 to make good the checks which the plaintiff had refused to pay the day before, making a total of $218,000. The cashier of the plaintiff took down those figures at the time. Wilshire went out and shortly afterwards returned with an envelope from which he took four drafts (one of which was the draft in suit in No. 1110), and the certificate of deposit in suit in No. 1111. Each of the four drafts was for the sum of $100,000, dated June 14, 1887, and drawn by the Fidelity Bank on the Chemical National Bank of New York. One was payable to the order of Wilshire, Eckert & Co., one to the order of J. W. Wilshire (not sued on), one to the order of C. J. Kershaw & Co., and the other (in suit in No. 1110) to the order of the plaintiff. The four drafts and the certificate of deposit made up the sum of $600,000.

The two instruments involved in suits Nos. 1110 and 1111 were taken by Wilshire from the envelope and delivered by him to Kershaw & Co. The plaintiff took them on deposit from Kershaw & Co., and placed the amounts of them to the credit of the latter, in accordance with the usual course of business, together with another of the drafts, for the sum of $100,000. Kershaw & Co. thus received $400,000 of the paper, Irwin, Green & Co. receiving the remainder, $200,000. The evidence shows that the two drafts and the certificate of deposit were taken by the cashier of the plaintiff on its behalf, and placed to the credit of Kershaw & Co. by the plaintiff, without any agreement or arrangement on the part of the plaintiff, except to credit them to Kershaw & Co. as cash.

Before the plaintiff received this $400,000, the account of Kershaw & Co. with it was overdrawn $245,477.01, as before stated. On receiving the deposit the plaintiff placed to the credit of Kershaw & Co., as cash, in a single item, $399,200, the full amount of the deposit less $900 charged for exchange. This was according to the usual course of business between the plaintiff and Kershaw & Co., and according to the understanding of the parties at the time. This deposit canceled the overdraft of $245,477.01, and left a balance to the credit of Kershaw & Co., on the morning of June 15, of $153,722.99. As soon as the plaintiff opened its bank on that day there was a run upon the account of Kershaw & Co., and before 11 o'clock in the morning the plaintiff had paid or certified their checks to the amount of $239,930.78. Meanwhile the plaintiff received on deposit $25,249.40; but this was a draft drawn against a shipment of wheat which the plaintiff had held as collateral security, and the plaintiff's condition was not bettered thereby. The plaintiff therefore, in reliance upon such deposit of $399,200, not only canceled Kershaw & Co.'s overdraft of $245,477.01, but also gave them $239,930.78 of fresh money, making a total of $485,407.79. By crediting the paper as cash, and using it to cancel the overdraft, the plaintiff also waived its right to sell for that purpose the grain which it held as collateral security. The result was that when the plaintiff did sell the grain, after the paper of the Fidelity Bank was dishonored, it realized only $449,194.88 for the same grain which, when the plaintiff stopped paying Kershaw & Co.'s checks on June 14, was worth $544,894, being a shrinkage of $95,699.12.

When the plaintiff had paid Kershaw & Co.'s checks to the amount of $239,930.78, their account was overdrawn $60,958.39; and when it was found by Kershaw & Co. that it would take $200,000 (instead of $68,000) to pay their differences in the Board of Trade clearing-house, the plaintiff refused to certify their checks for $200,000, and they therefore suspended payment.

The Fidelity Bank placed the amount of the certificate of deposit involved in suit No. 1111 to the credit of the plaintiff, and the latter charged the same on its books to the Fidelity Bank, as a cash deposit, and notified the Fidelity Bank that it had done so. From the 28th of April, 1887, when the Fidelity Bank sent the first certificate of deposit to the plaintiff, down to the 15th of June, 1887, the Fidelity Bank had represented that Wilshire, Eckert & Co. were depositing funds with it, which it was remitting to the plaintiff; and the telegrams of June 14, 1887, from the Fidelity Bank, held out Wilshire as the owner of the $600,000 which he was to take to Chicago to protect the trades. During the six days while the Fidelity Bank remained open after the paper in question was taken by the plaintiff, the Fidelity Bank made no complaint that the plaintiff had not acted in all the transactions in an honest manner, and in accordance with the instructions of the Fidelity Bank.

What took place between the officers of the Fidelity Bank and Wilshire, which the receiver alleges in his answer amounted to a conspiracy to embezzle the funds of that bank, was not revealed to the plaintiff until it was disclosed by the evidence taken in the suits.

In regard to No. 1110, it is contended by the receiver that the draft could not take effect until it was delivered to the plaintiff; that such delivery must have been made by the Fidelity Bank; that therefore Wilshire was acting for that bank in delivering the draft; and that, as between the Fidelity Bank and the plaintiff, want of consideration may be shown.

The draft in question was drawn in Ohio, upon a bank in New York, and was payable in New York. It was therefore a foreign bill of exchange. Where there are four parties to such a bill, namely, the drawer, the drawee, the payee and the remitter or purchaser, the usual course of business is for the drawer to deliver it to the remitter or purchaser, and for the latter to deliver it to the payee. In such a course of dealing, the remitter does not act as the agent of the drawer, but acts for himself, and in a suit on the bill by the payee against the drawer, want of consideration cannot be shown, if the payee is a bona fide holder for value. Munroe v. Bordier, 8 C. B. 862; Watson v. Russell, 3 Best & S. 84; South Boston Iron Co. v. Brown, 63 Me. 189; Horn v. Fuller, 6 N. H. 511; Daniel, Neg. Inst. § 178; 1 Parsons, Notes and Bills, 181, 199.

When Wilshire went to the plaintiff's bank, on the morning of June 15, 1887, he came duly accredited by the Fidelity Bank as the purchaser of the $600,000 of paper which he brought; and he acted assuch in delivering the draft in suit in No. 1110. The fact that the draft was payable to the order of the plaintiff was not inconsistent with the representation that Wilshire held it as purchaser and remitter. Wilshire received value for it from Kershaw & Co., and acted with them in getting the draft placed to their credit as cash by the plaintiff; so that the plaintiff became the holder of the draft for value. Wilshire gave to Kershaw & Co. the $400,000 on account of the indebtedness of Wilshire, Eckert & Co. to them. As Wilshire delivered the paper to Kershaw & Co. with the knowledge of the plaintiff, and with the understanding that the plaintiff was to take it and place it to the credit of Kershaw & Co., the past indebtedness of Wilshire, Eckert & Co. to Kershaw & Co. was a sufficient consideration to give to the plaintiff a good title to the paper for the use of Kershaw & Co.; and it is manifest that the inducement to Wilshire to give the paper to Kershaw & Co. was chiefly the consideration that the plaintiff would give credit at once to Kershaw & Co. for the amount. This credit was given, and on the faith of it the plaintiff paid to Kershaw & Co., on their checks, $289,980.78. The plaintiff thus became the owner of the paper which it received on deposit. Clark v. Merchants Bank, 2 N. Y. 880; Re Franklin Bank, 1 Paige, 249; Platt v. Beebe, 57 N. Y. 339; Metropolitan Nat. Bank v. Loyd, 90 N. Y. 530; National Bank v. Millard, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 152 [19:897]; Brooks v. Bigelow, 142 Mass. 6; National Commercial 183 U. S. .

We do not think that the fact that the draft was payable to the order of the plaintiff was notice to the plaintiff that Wilshire was not its purchaser or remitter; or that the manner in which the plaintiff acted after taking the draft for deposit shows that the plaintiff was not a bona fide holder for value.

The draft for $100,000, in suit in No. 1110, and the draft for $100,000 to the order of Kershaw & Co., showed a difference in form, which was noticed by the assistant cashier of the plaintiff, who feared that the Fidelity Bank might claim subsequently that the draft payable to the order of the plaintiff was a part of the $200,000 mentioned in the certificate of deposit in suit in No. 1111. He therefore sent to the Fidelity Bank this telegram:

"Chicago, 15 June, 1887.

"Fidelity National Bank, Cincinnati, Ohio.

"Your draft on New York, number sixteen four twelve, delivered us this morning, is made payable to our order. Why was this done, and is the amount charged against us or is it intended for use of W., as he may direct? Answer quick.

"American Exchange National Bank."

This telegram was sent, as the cashier says, "as an extra precaution;" but, without waiting for a reply to it, the plaintiff paid the checks of Kershaw & Co. until their account was not only exhausted but was overdrawn $60,958.89, when further payment of their checks was stopped. This was two hours before any reply by telegram was received from the Fidelity Bank. When the reply came, it did not disavow the authority of Wilshire to use the draft No. 16,412 as a part of the $600,000, the reply being as follows:

"Cincinnati, Ohio, June 15, 1887.

"American Exchange National Bank, Chicago.

"We want number sixteen four twelve to apply on your account, and have wired parties. Please send all drafts to us and order Cincinnati National to deliver one to-day. Party that controls special account out of city. Answer.

Fidelity National Bank."

The inference to be drawn from this telegram was that draft No. 16,412 had been given to Wilshire for his use, but that since it had been issued something had occurred which made the Fidelity Bank desire to withdraw it, if it could obtain the consent of the parties in interest, to whom it had wired. The telegram from the plaintiff was sufficient to notify the Fidelity Bank that Wilshire was using draft No. 16,412 as a part of the $600,000; and it gave the Fidelity Bank an opportunity to "answer quick" that Wilshire had no right to use that draft in that way, if such were the fact. There was nothing in the reply telegram from the Fidelity Bank, even if it had been received in time, to warn the plaintiff not to place that draft to the credit of Kershaw & Co., and nothing to discredit Wilshire's title to it. After that, and until the time when the Fidelity Bank closed its doors, it made no claim that the draft No. 16,412 was not issued in good faith as a part of the $600,000, or that the plaintiff had applied it wrongly to the credit of Kershaw & Co.

While the plaintiff was paying the checks of Kershaw & Co., the two drafts for $100,000 each and the certificate of deposit were in the hands of its assistant cashier, on the way to be entered upon its books, and while they were in his hands he made out the following deposit ticket:

"American Exchange National Bank, Chicago.

"Deposited for account of C. J. Kershaw & Co., June 15, 1887. Checks and drafts on other towns and cities:

Cincinnati.....	200,000
" N. Y.....	100
*Fidelity.....	100,000
	400,000
	399,200

"*Credited subject to advice from the Fidelity Nat. that draft is for Kershaw account. We have wired for advice."

This ticket was handed to the teller with the deposit, before the note at the bottom was put upon it; but immediately afterwards the assistant cashier went back to the teller and added the note. This deposit ticket was not made out when the deposit was made.

It appears that when the deposit was taken, the cashier of the plaintiff made out a deposit ticket showing one item of $400,000 deposited by Kershaw & Co., which ticket was made out at their request when they handed the deposit to the cashier and told him to place it to their credit. That deposit ticket did not come to the hands of the assistant cashier, and he made out the above deposit ticket; but there is no evidence to show that the latter deposit ticket was ever seen or assented to by Kershaw & Co. or by Wilshire. It appears that Kershaw & Co. did not know that the plaintiff had not placed the deposit at once to their credit on its books, although they did know of the telegram which the plaintiff sent to the Fidelity Bank. The above deposit ticket was thus made out by the assistant cashier of the plaintiff, for the use of the plaintiff, and it did not change in any way the terms of the deposit as between the plaintiff and Kershaw & Co., being only a private memorandum for the guidance of the paying teller. The credit on the books of the plaintiff was not made in accordance with the terms of that ticket, the credit being in one item, of $399,200, and unconditional, the note at the bottom of the ticket not being carried into the books of the plaintiff.

These words in the telegram of June 15 from the Fidelity Bank, "Please send all drafts to us, and order Cincinnati National to deliver one to-day. Party that controls special account out of city,"—are explained thus: On the 14th of June, Irwin, Green & Co. deposited with the plaintiff a draft of theirs on the Fidelity Bank for $217,862.50, which the plaintiff sent to the Cincinnati National Bank for collection.

It was presented on the 15th of June to the Fidelity Bank, which refused to pay it, alleging that the deposit against which the draft was drawn had not been made. Irwin, Green & Co., however, held a certificate of deposit issued by the Fidelity Bank, and their draft was drawn against that deposit. The party, Hoyt, who controlled the special deposit was out of the City of Cincinnati, but he was in Chicago, and said that the draft was all right and ought to be paid. The telegram from the Fidelity Bank contained also the request that the plaintiff should order the Cincinnati National Bank to turn over to the Fidelity Bank, without payment, such draft for $217,862.50, and should send directly to the Fidelity Bank all drafts upon the latter.

On the 16th of June, four telegrams passed between Wilshire and the plaintiff, which show that the plaintiff did not suspect that Wilshire had any connection with the Fidelity Bank or its officers. The first was as follows:

"Cincinnati, Ohio, 6 | 16, 1887.

"To Am. Ex. Bank:

"After yesterday's understanding Kershaw must be protected to-day. Should this be done, all is well; if not, fear trouble to all.

Wilshire."

The plaintiff replied as follows, under date of June 17th:

"Chicago, June 17, 1887.

"Wilshire, Cincinnati, Ohio:

"Do not admit any understanding, but if you will deposit three hundred thousand to the credit of this bank, with the First National Bank, Cincinnati, and have that bank wire to their correspondents here by cipher that this has been done, and to advise us, and also have Chemical, New York, telegraph us through American Exchange National Bank that the drafts for two hundred thousand which will be presented by American Exchange National Bank for our account and use of Kershaw will be paid, we will protect Kershaw up to four hundred thousand dollars. He claims three hundred thousand will see him through."

On the 16th of June the plaintiff received the following letter from the Fidelity Bank:

"Cincinnati, June 15, 1887.

"American Exchange National Bank, Chicago, Illinois:

"Gentlemen: We charge your account $100,000 New York exchange to your order sent you by messenger to-day.

"Respectfully yours,

"E. L. Harper, V. P."

The plaintiff thereupon sent to Wilshire the following telegram, and Wilshire replied by telegram as follows:

"June 16, 1887.

"Wilshire, Cincinnati:

"Fidelity advises us this morning by letter that they have charged to our account New York exchange for one hundred thousand, payable to our order and left with us by you yesterday. This must be reversed and Chemical instructed to wire us they will pay same. Also Fidelity wire us direct that they have reversed the charge, and authorize us to use this item for Kershaw. Otherwise you must deposit four hundred thousand instead of three hundred thousand in the bank we have already designated. Rush.

"American Exchange National Bank."

"Cincinnati, 16.

"To American Exchange Natl. Bank:

"Your telegram received at eleven three.

183 U. S.

Will go to work at once and arrange matter, but you must see Kershaw through without fail. You should have wired us sooner and would have fixed you up as desired.

"J. W. Wilshire."

The telegram dated June 17, from the plaintiff to Wilshire, shows that the plaintiff was determined to avoid trouble over draft No. 16,412, which it had credited to Kershaw & Co., but which the Fidelity Bank had charged to the plaintiff.

Wilshire left Chicago during the night of June 15, knowing the exact condition of things between Kershaw & Co. and the plaintiff. He reported to Harper at Cincinnati the next morning, and at the very time when he was sending his two telegrams of June 16 to the plaintiff, he and Harper were arranging further to defraud the plaintiff by stopping payment of the drafts which Wilshire took to Chicago. They telegraphed the Chemical National Bank not to pay them, and when the four drafts were presented it refused to pay them. Harper and Hopkins, on the 16th of June, charged draft No. 16,412 to the plaintiff on the books of the Fidelity Bank, but they entered it in the transactions of June 15, and changed the footings of the column in which the entry was made.

In reply to the suggestion that the plaintiff took the draft No. 16,412 as collateral security, and therefore was not a bona fide holder of it, it is to be said that the plaintiff took the deposit as a cash deposit, and that there was no agreement with Kershaw & Co. that the deposit should be held only as security; because the amount of the deposit was credited as cash on the books of the plaintiff, at or about 11 o'clock on the morning of June 15, and the plaintiff paid the checks of Kershaw & Co. on the faith of the deposit of the draft.

The conclusion of the whole matter is, that the Fidelity Bank represented to the plaintiff that Wilshire was a bona fide holder of draft No. 16,412, for his use in making good his trades with Kershaw & Co.; that the plaintiff, relying on such representations, took the draft on deposit from Kershaw & Co., placed it to their credit, and paid their checks; and that, under those circumstances, the Fidelity Bank was estopped from showing that Wilshire was not a bona fide holder of the draft, and the receiver stands in no better position than the Fidelity Bank.

The decree of the circuit court in No. 1110 was therefore right.

As to No. 1111 the paper in question was in its legal character a certificate of deposit. Hart v. Life Assn. 54 Ala. 495; Long v. Straus, 107 Ind. 94 [4 West. Rep. 285]; Lynch v. Goldsmith, 64 Ga. 42, 50; Hove v. Hartness, 11 Ohio St. 449; Miller v. Austen, 54 U. S. 13 How. 218 [14: 119].

The certificate stated that Wilshire, Eckert & Co. had deposited so much money. The Fidelity Bank telegraphed to the plaintiff that Wilshire would come with so much money. It intended that the plaintiff should take the paper as money. The plaintiff did take it as money, and the Fidelity Bank entered the paper on its books as being its own check upon itself. Wilshire went to the plaintiff on the morning of June 15 as the purchaser and controller of the certificate in like manner as he went as the purchaser and controller of draft No. 16,412. At the request of Wilshire, Eckert & Co., the Fidelity Bank issued the certificate directly to the plaintiff. What has been said before, in relation to the claim of the plaintiff as the holder of the draft No. 16,412, applies with equal force to its claim as the holder of the certificate. It was a purchaser, and an innocent purchaser, for value, of both pieces of paper. There is no question of negotiability, because the suit is brought by the original payee, and the paper was applied by the plaintiff for the use of Kershaw & Co., as directed by the certificate.

As soon as the paper was delivered to and accepted by the plaintiff, the Fidelity Bank had entered into a contract with it to pay $200,000. The suit is for the amount which the Fidelity Bank agreed to pay, and not for damage sustained by the plaintiff through the misrepresentation of that bank. The plaintiff accepted the contract in good faith, by placing $200,000 to the credit of Kershaw & Co.; and it also charged $200,000 to the Fidelity Bank, and notified that bank that it had done so. The Fidelity Bank acted on that contract, after it was notified of its acceptance by the plaintiff, by placing $200,000 to the credit of the plaintiff, and charging that amount to Wilshire, Eckert & Co. The plaintiff was not required to pay the Fidelity Bank anything upon the contract, because the Fidelity Bank represented that Wilshire, Eckert & Co. had paid for it. The plaintiff was required, if it accepted the contract, to give the benefit of it to Kershaw & Co. It did that by at once giving Kershaw & Co. credit for $200,000, and that amount still stands on its books to the credit of Kershaw & Co. The defendant cannot escape the consequences of the contract of the Fidelity Bank by saying that the statement of that bank that it had received from Wilshire, Eckert & Co. the consideration for the contract was false, because he is estopped from setting up for his protection the falsity of that statement after the plaintiff had acted upon it. The plaintiff is seeking to recover upon a contract, and the receiver is defending by setting up the false representation of the Fidelity Bank.

The suggestion is not a sound one that the plaintiff took the paper under such circumstances as would put a man of ordinary prudence upon inquiry. The Fidelity Bank, prior to June 14, 1887, had notified the plaintiff of four deposits made with the former by Wilshire's firm, for the use of Kershaw & Co., in April and May, 1887, amounting together to $250,000. For each of those deposits the Fidelity Bank had issued paper similar to that in suit in No. 1111. The amounts were placed to the credit of Kershaw & Co. by the plaintiff, and were paid by the Fidelity Bank to the plaintiff in the due course of business. Nothing passed between the two banks to indicate that the Fidelity Bank knew what Wilshire's firm was doing with the money, until the telegram of June 14, from the Fidelity Bank to the plaintiff, was received by the latter. The plaintiff was banker for Kershaw & Co., and had that day stopped payment of their checks. Kershaw & Co. were the brokers of Wilshire's firm, and had bought a large quantity of wheat for them for future delivery, which needed immediate protection by the deposit of margins. The Fidelity Bank was the banker in Cincinnati of Wilshire's firm, and the two banks were regular correspondents. It was natural for Wilshire to ask his bank to send the telegram to Kershaw & Co's bank, and there was nothing in that to put a prudent institution upon inquiry. It was natural that the cashier of the plaintiff should understand that the two banks were carrying on the telegraphic correspondence solely for the benefit of their respective customers; and the plaintiff was led to expect that Wilshire would arrive the next morning with $600,000 of his own money, to use in making good his trades with Kershaw and others. There was nothing in the telegram to lead the plaintiff to understand that Wilshire would be in Chicago with $600,000 of the money of the Fidelity Bank, to make good trades of his for that bank. The appearance of Wilshire the next morning with $600,000 would naturally lead the plaintiff to believe that it was his own money, and the same money spoken of in the telegram of the day before from the Fidelity Bank.

There was nothing in the paper brought by Wilshire to lead the plaintiff to suspect that the money was the money of the Fidelity Bank. The paper was all in proper form to be controlled by Wilshire, and to be used by him to protect his trades with Kershaw and others. The cashier of the plaintiff had suggested by telegram to the Fidelity Bank, on the 14th of June, that Wilshire should bring currency. As he brought paper, which, if the plaintiff took it, must be treated as money, and as the plaintiff had another draft on the Fidelity Bank for $217,862.50, deposited by Irwin, Green & Co., which was then in Cincinnati for collection, the cashier of the plaintiff, before finally taking the paper, asked Wilshire if the Fidelity Bank was solvent. This indicated no suspicion of the true state of facts, as they were subsequently disclosed, and the question was a natural one to be put to a person who was having large money transactions with the Fidelity Bank, and who had just indorsed its two drafts for $100,000 each. The attorney of the plaintiff was at the bank, and before its cashier took the paper he told the attorney what Wilshire had said, and that everything appeared perfectly straight. He would not have taken the paper and paid out nearly $240,000 on the faith of it if he had suspected that it was otherwise than the bona fide paper of the Fidelity Bank, issued for a like amount of money received by that bank.

When the plaintiff learned that the Fidelity Bank had refused to pay the Irwin, Green & Co. draft for $217,862.50, and when it had received the telegram of the Fidelity Bank asking that that draft be turned over to it without payment, it lost confidence in the solvency of the Fidelity Bank, but it still believed Wilshire to be the true principal, and telegraphed him to put his money in another bank. Wilshire replied by telegram, on June 16: "Will go to work at once and arrange matter; but you must see Kershaw through without fail. You should have wired us sooner, and would have fixed you up as desired," thus keeping up the deception.

The rumors on the Board of Trade and in the public press that Harper was the real principal for whom Wilshire was acting cannot affect the plaintiff. There is no evidence that any officer of the plaintiff ever heard any rumor connecting Harper's name with the purchases of grain. Even if the plaintiff had learned as a fact that Harper was buying wheat through Wilshire, that would not have been notice that the statement in the certificate of deposit, that Wilshire, Eckert & Co. had deposited $200,000, was false; nor would it have been notice that Harper was using the funds of the Fidelity Bank. The drafts and the certificate of deposit were all of them signed by Hopkins, the assistant cashier of the Fidelity Bank. Nothing occurred to make the plaintiff suspicious of the bona fide character of the paper; and Wilshire, by delivering the paper, affirmed the statement of the Fidelity Bank that his firm had deposited $200,000 to the credit of the plaintiff. Wilshire was concerned in concealing the truth. He had come for the express purpose of deceiving the plaintiff; and the latter cannot be charged with negligence in not asking for information from him. There is no evidence tending to show that the plaintiff had any suspicion that Harper, Hopkins and Wilshire had conspired together to embezzle the funds of the Fidelity Bank, or that the paper was signed by Hopkins, and delivered by Harper to Wilshire, to be used in purchasing wheat. The success of the conspiracy depended on the concealment of the fact that Wilshire, Eckert & Co. were not depositing with the Fidelity Bank the amounts for which it was issuing its paper. There was authority to issue the paper, if Wilshire, Eckert & Co. made the deposit; and the consequence of the fraud must fall upon the Fidelity Bank, and not upon the plaintiff.

As to the suggestion that the plaintiff was not warranted in giving an immediate credit of $200,000 to Kershaw & Co. on the faith of the certificate of deposit, it is to be said that so far as the face of the paper is concerned it was left to the option of the plaintiff either to give Kershaw & Co. the immediate use of the money, or to await the collection of the money on the certificate. It is apparent that the Fidelity Bank, in issuing the paper, intended that the plaintiff should use it as money, and the emergency upon Kershaw & Company required such use of it.

In reply to the claim on the part of the receiver that if the plaintiff can recover at all it can recover only the money which it paid out in reliance on the certificate, it is to be said that that instrument is a contract by the Fidelity Bank offering to the plaintiff to become its debtor in the sum of $200,000, and asking it to become a creditor of the Fidelity Bank, for the benefit of Kershaw & Co., the object being to convert a credit in Cincinnati, for which Wilshire, Eckert & Co. had paid, into a credit in Chicago with the plaintiff, as the banker of Kershaw & Co., for the use of that firm. The plaintiff accepted this offered contract, assumed the relation of creditor to the Fidelity Bank, for the use of Kershaw & Co., and at once gave them credit for $200,000, thus fully complying with the contract. When the plaintiff placed $400,000 to the credit of Kershaw & Co., it paid them that amount; and the legal effect of the transaction was the same as if the plaintiff had given $400,000 in currency to Kershaw & Co., and they had deposited it to their credit in some other bank.

The plaintiff held Kershaw & Co's check for $256,878.18, which it was carrying. The check was regular, and the plaintiff had a right to have it paid at once. It had not been charged up, for there was only $11,401.17 in Kershaw & Co's account, against which to charge it; but, in stating the overdraft on the evening of June 14, we have treated it as if it had been debited. That check was paid by the plaintiff and charged to Kershaw & Co., on the morning of June 15, in reliance upon the deposit of the Fidelity Bank paper for $400,000. The plaintiff had the right to apply the deposit of Kershaw & Co. to the payment of their indebtedness to it which was due. It was the understanding of Kershaw & Co. that all of their outstanding checks should be paid from the deposit. In addition to canceling the check for $256,878.18, the plaintiff paid out $239,930.78 on June 15. It therefore paid out during that day $496,808.96. It received on deposit $399,200 in Fidelity Bank paper, and $25,249.40 in a draft drawn against a shipment of wheat, and there was a credit upon its books of $11,401.17 at the beginning of business on that day. The debit side of the account was therefore $496,808.96, and the credit $435,850.57, being an excess of debit of $60,958.39.

The plaintiff also forebore to sell the grain which it held as collateral security for Kershaw & Co's indebtedness, and which was worth on June 14, at the lowest market price of that day, $544,894. After payment of the Fidelity Bank paper was refused, the plaintiff sold the grain for $449,194, a shrinkage of $95,700. There was no agreement that the plaintiff should hold the grain, but the deposit of $400,000 made it unnecessary to sell it, and good faith toward Kershaw & Co., under the circumstances, required that that should not be done. The plaintiff, therefore, in reliance upon the paper of the Fidelity Bank, paid the check of Kershaw & Co. for $256,878.18, gave them $239,930.78 of further money, and suffered a loss of $95,700 on the collateral security which it held.

We do not think that the matter of the application of the proceeds of the collateral security has anything to do with either of the cases.

As Kershaw & Co. deposited, and the plaintiff credited, the three pieces of Fidelity Bank paper as a single cash item, whatever the plaintiff did on the faith of the deposit of $400,000 was done on the faith of each piece of paper which went to make up that deposit. When the plaintiff accepted the certificate of deposit, it was at liberty to use the credit for $200,000 in any manner which it and Kershaw & Co. might agree upon, the only requirement made by the Fidelity Bank being that the credit should be applied to the use of Kershaw & Co. It was applied to such use as much by paying their indebtedness to the plaintiff as by paying what they owed to any other party. As the plaintiff is seeking to recover on a contract with which it has fully complied on its part, the receiver must fully comply with the other part of it; and if Wilshire, Eckert & Co. did not put $200,000 in the Fidelity Bank to the credit of the plaintiff, as that bank declared they had done, the receiver must make good the representation by placing a like amount to the credit of the plaintiff.

As to the defense that Harper, Hopkins and Wilshire, with other persons, on and before June 14, 1887, were engaged in purchasing wheat on contracts for future delivery, and otherwise, with the object of creating a "corner" in the market; that at the time of the delivery of the paper to the plaintiff it had notice that they were engaged in such speculation; and that the certificate of deposit was delivered to Wilshire and by him to the plaintiff to be used, through the plaintiff and by Kershaw & Co., who were, and were well known to the plaintiff to be, brokers engaged in the purchase of wheat, in such speculation, for the account of Wilshire and his confederates,—the defense amounts to this, that if the plaintiff received money from the Fidelity Bank to be transferred to Kershaw & Co., it could refuse to pay over the money to the latter, if it knew that they intended to use the money to pay a gambling debt which the Fidelity Bank had contracted.

When the plaintiff received the deposit from Kershaw & Co., it was bound to honor their checks against it; and it could not refuse to pay them on the ground that Kershaw & Co. intended to make an improper use of the money. If Wilshire, Eckert & Co. and Kershaw & Co. were engaged in gambling, and the former had deposited money in the Fidelity Bank to be transferred to the plaintiff, in order that Kershaw & Co. might check out the amount from the plaintiff's bank in payment of losses sustained in the gambling transactions, and both banks knew that the money was to be so used, still the Fidelity Bank, having received the deposit, could not refuse to pay it over to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff, having received it, could not refuse to honor the checks of Kershaw & Co. drawn against it. Tenant v. Elliott, 1 Bos. & P. 3; Farmer v. Russell, 1 Bos. & P. 296; Sharp v. Taylor, 2 Phil. 801; Armstrong v. Toler, 24 U. S. 11 Wheat. 258 [6: 468]; Kinsman v. Parkhurst, 59 U. S. 18 How. 239 [15: 885]; Brooks v. Martin, 69 U. S. 2 Wall. 70 [17: 732]; Planters Bank v. Union Bank, 88 U. S. 16 Wall. 483 [21: 473]; McMicken v. Perin, 59 U. S. 18 How. 507 [15: 504].

Nor do we think that the Statute of Illinois (1 Starr & Curtis Stat. 1885, pp. 791, 792, sections 180, 181), or the case of Pearce v. Foote, 113 Ill. 228, has any application to the present case. That Statute makes it an offense to "corner" the market, or to attempt to do so, and makes void all contracts to reimburse or pay any money or property knowingly lent or advanced at the time and place of any play or bet, to any person gaming or betting. The two banks were not attempting to corner the market in wheat. Whether Wilshire and his confederates were engaged in attempting to do so, and had made purchases for that purpose through Kershaw & Co. as brokers, is another question. This is not a suit by Kershaw & Co. against Wilshire or his firm, or against the Fidelity Bank. It is a suit on a contract made by the Fidelity Bank with the plaintiff; and the receiver cannot defend it on the ground that the plaintiff knew that if it paid over the money to Kershaw & Co., as the Fidelity Bank requested, the money would be used in an illegal transaction.

In Pearce v. Foote, supra, Foote made an express agreement with certain commission men to trade exclusively in differences in options, declaring that he did not want to buy any provisions, but simply to speculate and settle on differences. He lost a large sum in such transactions, and indorsed over to the commission men certain notes. The court held that such options were gambling contracts, and that, as the Statute of Illinois provided that any person who should lose in a gambling transaction might recover back from the winner whatever he should pay on account of such loss, Foote could recover the value of the notes from the commission men. But the plaintiff is not the winner in any gambling transaction. The purport of the decision in Pearce v. Foote is that, as the commission men participated in the illegal transaction, they could not take the ground that their interest was only that of a commission. The plaintiff is not in the situation of the commission men, and the receiver is not in the situation of Foote. The cases which have been decided in regard to the Statute of Illinois arose between brokers and principals, or between winner and loser, and do not apply to the case at bar.

It is contended, however, by the receiver, that the money advanced by the plaintiff to Kershaw & Co., on the 15th of June, was advanced knowingly at the time in the course of an attempt to corner the market and to aid Kershaw & Co. in doing so. The Statute of Illinois makes void any contract "for the reimbursing or paying any money or property knowingly lent or advanced at the time and place of such play or bet to any person or persons so gaming or betting." This is not a suit against Kershaw & Co. to recover money lent to them; nor is it true that the plaintiff advanced money to them to assist them in attempting to corner the market. It is not averred in the answer, nor proved, that Kershaw & Co. were engaged in such an attempt. The averment of the answer is that Harper, Hopkins, Wilshire and other persons to the defendant unknown, were engaged in such an attempt, and that Kershaw & Co. were acting as brokers; but it is not averred that the brokers had any knowledge of the object of their principals, and the evidence shows that they had no such knowledge. The money which the plaintiff advanced to Kershaw & Co., on the 15th of June, was not lent to them on an agreement by them to repay it; but it was advanced to them in consideration of the deposit with the plaintiff of the $400,000 of Fidelity Bank paper. Nor is there any proof that any of the money paid by the plaintiff to Kershaw & Co., on the 15th of June, was paid out for wheat purchased for Wilshire, Eckert & Co. The burden was on the receiver to show clearly that the money paid out was upon illegal transactions. He fails to do so; and much more does he fail to show that the money was paid for present purchases, that is, in the language of the Statute, that it was advanced "at the time and place" of the purchases, and not to pay debts incurred in the making of past purchases. If it were shown that the plaintiff advanced money to Kershaw & Co., on the 15th of June, to be used in paying for wheat which Kershaw & Co. had purchased at some time in the past, in an attempt to corner the market, it would not follow that the plaintiff could not collect from them such advances.

Where losses have been made in an illegal transaction a person who lends money to the loser with which to pay the debt can recover the loan, notwithstanding his knowledge of the fact that the money was to be so used. Armstrong v. Toler, 24 U. S. 11 Wheat. 258 [6: 463]; Kimbrow v. Bullitt, 63 U. S. 22 How. 256, 269 [16: 313, 317]; Planters Bank v. Union Bank, 83 U. S. 16 Wall. 500 [21: 490]; Tyler v. Carlisle, 79 Me. 210 [4 New Eng. Rep. 409]; McGarock v. Puryear, 6 Coldw. 34; Waugh v. Beck, 114 Pa. 422 [5 Cent. Rep. 536].

It is not shown, as is claimed by the receiver, that in advancing the money to Kershaw & Co. the plaintiff became a participator in an illegal attempt to corner the market, or that it had aided in such an attempt by previously advancing money to them upon a part of the wheat as collateral security. Although the plaintiff had advanced money from time to time to them upon wheat as collateral security, there is no evidence that it knew, or had any reason to suspect, that the wheat was purchased in an attempt to corner the market.

An obligation will be enforced, though indirectly connected with an illegal transaction, if it is supported by an independent consideration, so that the plaintiff does not require the aid of the illegal transaction to make out his case. Armstrong v. Toler, 24 U. S. 11 Wheat. 258 [6: 463]; Faikney v. Reynous, 4 Burr. 2069; Petrie v. Hannay, 3 T. R. 418; Farmer v. Russell, 1 Bos. & P. 296; Planters Bank v. Union Bank, 83 U. S. 16 Wall. 483 [21: 473]; McBlair v. Gibbs, 58 U. S. 17 How. 232, 236 [15: 182, 183]; Brooks v. Martin, 69 U. S. 2 Wall. 70 [17: 732]; Bly v. Second Nat. Bank, 79 Pa. 453.

Although the contract between the two banks was made in the State of Illinois, it was to be performed in the State of Ohio; and, the receiver being estopped from saying that Wilshire, Eckert & Co. did not deposit the $200,000 in the Fidelity Bank to the credit of the plaintiff, it is the law of Ohio (Ehrman v. Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. 35 Ohio St. 324) that he cannot be heard to say that the plaintiff acquired the certificate of deposit in connection with an illegal transaction.

The result, however, of the evidence is that it does not appear, as alleged in the answer of the receiver, that the plaintiff had knowledge or notice that the paper in suit was delivered to it to be used through it by Kershaw & Co. in connection with an attempt to corner the market. A detailed discussion of the evidence would not be profitable.

We think, therefore, that the circuit court was right in making a decree against the receiver in No. 1111.

In both of the cases it is claimed that the court erred in adjudging that the plaintiff was entitled to interest on the 25 per cent dividend on its claim, from October 31, 1887, until the time the dividend should be paid. As authority the receiver cites the case of White v. Knorr, 111 U. S. 784 [28: 603]. But we do not think it applies. In that case a judgment was obtained for a claim by White, in June, 1883, which included interest on his claim to that time. While the claim was in litigation, the receiver had paid ratable dividends of 65 per cent to other creditors. After the judgment in favor of White, the comptroller of the currency calculated the amount due him as of December 20, 1875, the time when the bank failed, and paid him 65 per cent on that amount. He contended that the dividend should be calculated on his claim with interest to the time of the judgment; but this court sustained the action of the comptroller. In the present case, the claims of the plaintiff, as allowed, do not include interest beyond the date when the bank failed. Interest upon the dividend which it ought to have received on the 31st of October, 1887, is a different matter. The allowance of that interest is necessary to put the plaintiff on an equality with the other creditors. That point was not decided in White v. Knox, and we think the circuit court did not err in allowing such interest.

It results that the decrees in both cases must be affirmed.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller did not take any part in the decision of this case.

v.

CHARLES W. BECK.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 541-552.)

Jurisdictional amount—territorial judgment, review of—riparian proprietor's rights to running stream—settler under homestead entry of lands, is riparian proprietor—right to water of stream—lawful occupancy—sec. 2339, Rev. Stat.

1. Upon the affidavits filed on both sides in this case, the court decides that the water right in controversy is worth the jurisdictional amount, and the motion to dismiss is overruled.
2. No judgment or decree of the highest court of a Territory can be reviewed by this court in matter of fact, but only in matter of law, and this court is confined in this case to determining whether the court's findings of fact support the judgment.
3. A riparian proprietor of land bordering upon a running stream has a right to the flow of its waters as a natural incident to his estate, and they cannot be lawfully diverted against his consent.
4. A settler who has made a homestead entry of public land for over a year, and has been in possession for three years, is a riparian proprietor of the land, as to another person who subsequently locates a water right on the land.

NOTE.—As to alluvion or accretion and reliction; right to, and ownership of; by what law title to is determined; rule of division among riparian owners, —see note to Kennedy v. Hunt, Bk. 12, p. 829; also note to St. Clair County v. Lovington, Bk. 23, p. 59.

As to right of the United States and the States to shore lands and accretions against piers, see note to Hallett v. Beebe, Bk. 14, p. 36.

As to what is seashore; how far lands bounded on extend, —see note to U. S. v. Pacheco, Bk. 17, p. 865.

As to title to water by appropriation; common-law rule; rule of mining States, —see note to Atchison v. Peterson, Bk. 22, p. 414.

5. No subsequent attempt to take the water only can override the prior appropriation of both land and water of a settler who has made a homestead entry of the land, and who has lawful riparian occupancy with intent to appropriate the land.
6. Smith's lawful occupancy in this case under settlement and entry was a prior appropriation which Sturr could not displace.
7. Section 2339 of the Revised Statutes as to rights to the use of water was rather a voluntary recognition of a pre-existing right of possession, constituting a valid claim to its continued use, than the establishment of a new one.

Submitted Dec. 9, 1889. Decided March 3, 1890.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Supreme Court of the Territory of Dakota affirming a judgment of the District Court of that Territory dismissing a suit for an injunction against defendant from interfering with an alleged water right of complainant and the use of the water of a creek and for damages. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

This suit was commenced by Daniel Sturr against Charles W. Beck by a complaint filed in a District Court of the Territory of Dakota, seeking an injunction against the defendant from interfering with an alleged water right and ditch of the complainant and the use of the water of a certain creek through the same, and for damages alleged to have been sustained by interference which had already taken place. The allegations of the complaint were denied in the answer of the defendant, so far as inconsistent with its statements; and the facts in regard to the matters set up in the complaint were averred by the defendant as he claimed them to be, with a prayer for an injunction against the complainant from trespassing upon his land and diverting the water of the creek, and from keeping and maintaining the ditch on his land, and for damages and costs. The cause was tried by the court upon an agreed statement of facts, it being stipulated that the court might make its findings of fact and conclusions of law on such agreed statement with the same effect as if the facts therein contained had been proven in court. The court thereupon proceeded to make its findings of fact and conclusions of law as follows:

"Findings of Fact.

"1st. That the plaintiff, Daniel Sturr, made a homestead filing or entry of the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$, E. $\frac{1}{4}$ S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$, and S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of sec. 85, town. 7 N., of range 3 E., B. H. M., on the 15th day May, 1880, and thereafter at the United States land office at Deadwood, D. T., made final proof or entry thereof on the 10th day of May, 1888, having settled thereon in June, 1877, and he has resided thereon continuously ever since, cultivating at least seventy acres thereof, and has received a patent for said land from the United States.

"2d. That one John Smith made a homestead filing or entry of the W. $\frac{1}{4}$ S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$, and lot 2 of sec. 2, town. 6 N., of range 3 E., B. H. M., on the 25th day of March, 1879, and thereafter at the United States land office at Deadwood, D. T., made final proof or entry thereof on the 10th day of May, 1883, having settled thereon in March, 1877, and resided thereon until he sold the same to defendant Beck, in May, 1884, and has received a patent for said land from the United States.

"8d. That on or about the 15th day of May, 1880, the plaintiff, Daniel Sturr, without any grant from John Smith, the occupant and claimant, as above stated, went upon the homestead claim of John Smith, above described, and located a water right on said Smith's homestead, claiming the right to divert 500 inches, miner's measurement, of the waters of False Bottom Creek then and long prior thereto flowing over and across said land in its natural channel, and to carry the same by means of a ditch to and upon his own homestead claim, immediately adjacent.

"4th. That said plaintiff posted a written notice at the point of said proposed diversion, claiming the right to divert said water, and caused a copy of the same to be filed in the office of the register of deeds in and for Lawrence County, Dakota, on the 9th day of May, 1881, and the same was recorded in Book 14, page 468, of the records of said county.

"5th. That immediately thereafter the plaintiff constructed a ditch from the point of such diversion across the John Smith homestead, and diverted and conveyed not less than 800 inches of the waters of said False Bottom Creek to and upon his said land adjacent, and there used the same for irrigating his crops growing thereon whenever the same was necessary until interfered with by the defendant, in the summer of 1886.

"6th. That on May first, 1884, John Smith conveyed his said homestead to the defendant, Charles W. Beck, by warranty deed, purporting to convey the fee without any reservation, whereupon the plaintiff entered into the possession thereof and has so remained ever since.

"7th. That in the spring of 1886 the defendant Beck notified the plaintiff Sturr to cease diverting the waters of False Bottom Creek from their natural channel upon defendant's said land, and forbade him maintaining his said ditch upon defendant's said land for that purpose.

"8th. That the custom existing and which has existed in Lawrence County ever since its settlement recognizes and acknowledges the right to locate water rights and to divert, appropriate and use the waters of flowing streams for purposes of irrigation when such location, diversion and use does not conflict or interfere with rights vested and accrued prior thereto.

"9th. That neither John Smith nor the defendant Beck ever made any water-right location claiming the waters of False Bottom Creek, and had not prior to the said location thereof by the plaintiff, Daniel Sturr, ever diverted the said waters from their natural channel where they had been accustomed to flow.

"10th. That said John Smith, on the second day of February, 1882, recited in the written contract of that date made with the plaintiff, Daniel Sturr, that the latter was the owner of the Elm Tree water right, which was the said water right located as aforesaid by said Sturr on the 15th day of May, 1880.

"11th. That the use of said water for irrigation is beneficial and valuable to the person or persons owning or possessing the same.

"Conclusions of Law.

"1st. That at the time of the location of the water right made upon John Smith's homestead by the plaintiff, Daniel Sturr, in May, 1880, a prior right to have the waters of said False Bottom Creek flow in the regular channel of said creek over and across said land had vested in John Smith by virtue of his homestead filing or entry made on the 25th day of March, 1879, he having made final proof or entry thereafter.

"2d. That said vested right so acquired by said John Smith was conveyed to the defendant, Charles W. Beck, by warranty deed on May first, 1884.

"3d. That the plaintiff, Daniel Sturr, by his location and diversion of the waters of False Bottom Creek, so made by him upon the homestead of said John Smith on the 15th day of May, 1880, acquired no right as against the defendant Beck to divert said waters or to maintain a ditch upon defendant's land for that purpose.

"4th. That the patent issued to John Smith for the premises mentioned related back to the date of his making his homestead filing or entry of said premises on the 25th day of March, 1879.

"5th. That the plaintiff can take nothing by this action."

Judgment in favor of the defendant was entered, dismissing the complaint upon the merits and awarding costs.

To the tenth finding of fact and to conclusions of law Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4 plaintiff duly excepted, and also to the judgment and decree, and filed his motion to set aside certain of the findings of facts and conclusions of law, and to adopt others named in their places, and also for a new trial, which motions were severally overruled, and he excepted. Plaintiff thereupon prosecuted an appeal to the Supreme Court of the Territory, and assigned as error that the court erred "in its finding of fact No. 10, and in not correcting the same as requested by plaintiff in his motion to correct said finding;" in the conclusions of law Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4 respectively; in denying the motion for a new trial, and "because the decision of the court is against law." The judgment of the district court was affirmed by the supreme court, which rendered the following opinion: "The judgment of the lower court is affirmed. The court holds that the homesteader was the prior appropriator of the water right, and the plaintiff has no right to enter upon the prior possession of the defendant under his H. E. for the purpose of appropriating any portion of the running streams and creeks thereon." An appeal was then taken to this court.

Messrs. Van Cise & Wilson and R. A. Burton, for appellee:

On an appeal from a territorial court, this court will not go behind the findings of fact adopted by the trial court, and, by affirmance of judgment, approved by the appellate court, to consider the evidence.

The law gave the use of the water to appellee while it ran through his farm. To make appellant a prior appropriator he must have taken out the water under a claim of right while the land was still in the possession of the government, and before any claim or settlement had been made.

The appellee's grantor made his homestead entry over a year prior to the attempted location of appellant's water right. This gave him a vested right in the land and in the use of the water.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

With the notice of appeal and appeal bond appellant filed his own affidavit and that of another that the ditch and water right in controversy were reasonably worth $7,500. After the record was filed here a motion was made by appellee to dismiss, accompanied by several affidavits, to the effect that such value was far less than $5,000. And upon this motion counter-affidavits have been presented. We have carefully examined all these papers and conclude that the motion should be overruled.

No judgment or decree of the highest court of a Territory can be reviewed by this court in matter of fact, but only in matter of law; and we are confined in this case to determining whether the court's findings of fact support the judgment. Idaho and Oregon Land Co. v. Bradbury, 132 U. S. 509 [33: 433]; 18 Stat. 27, 28.

John Smith settled on the tract of land described in March, 1877, and continued to reside thereon until he sold and conveyed it by warranty deed to Beck, the appellee. He made his homestead filing or entry March 25, 1879, and his final proof May 10, 1883, and received a patent from the United States. The water of False Bottom Creek flowed in its natural channel over and across Smith's homestead, and in May, 1880, Sturr, the appellant, went upon that homestead, located a water right thereon and constructed a ditch which diverted the waters of the creek to his own adjacent land. Beck went into possession under the deed from Smith, and in 1886 notified Sturr to cease diverting the water and maintaining the ditch, and this suit thereupon followed.

It is not contended on behalf of Sturr that he is entitled to maintain the ditch because he constructed and used it, or that Smith's acquiescence amounted to anything more than a revocable license. There was no grant nor an adverse enjoyment so long continued as to raise a legal presumption of a grant. But it is insisted that the doctrine of prior appropriation of water on the public land and its beneficial use protects him from interference because neither Smith nor Beck made any water-right location claiming the waters of False Bottom Creek, and had never diverted those waters prior to Sturr's location.

If, however, Smith obtained a vested right to have the creek flow in its natural channel by virtue of his homestead entry of March 25, 1879, and possession thereunder, or if his patent took effect as against Sturr by relation as of that date, then it is conceded that Sturr cannot prevail and the judgment must be affirmed.

The right of a riparian proprietor of land bordering upon a running stream to the benefit to be derived from the flow of its waters as a natural incident to, or one of the elements of, his estate, and that it cannot be lawfully diverted against his consent, is not denied, nor does the controversy relate to the just and reasonable use as between riparian proprietors. The question raised is whether Smith occupied the position of a riparian proprietor or a prior appropriator, as between himself and Sturr, when the latter undertook to locate his alleged water right. At that time Smith had been in possession for three years, and his homestead entry had been made over a year.

A claim of the homestead settler, such as Smith's, is initiated by an entry of the land, which is effected by making an application at the proper land office, filing the affidavit and paying the amounts required by sections 2238 and 2290 of the Revised Statutes. Under section 2291 the final certificate was not to be given or patent issued "until the expiration of five years from the date of such entry." But under the third section of the Act of May 14, 1880, chap. 89 (21 Stat. 141), providing that "any settler who has settled, or who shall hereafter settle, on any of the public lands of the United States, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, with the intention of claiming the same under the Homestead Laws, shall be allowed the same time to file his homestead application and perfect his original entry in the United States land office as is now allowed to settlers under the Pre-emption Laws to put their claims on record, and his right shall relate back to the date of settlement, the same as if he settled under the Pre-emption Laws," the ruling of the Land Department has been that if the homestead settler shall fully comply with the law as to continuous residence and cultivation, the settlement defeats all claims intervening between its date and the date of filing his homestead entry, and in making final proof his five years of residence and cultivation will commence from the date of actual settlement.

Under section 2297 of the Revised Statutes it is provided that upon change of residence or abandonment as therein mentioned, before the expiration of the five years, "then and in that event the land so entered shall revert to the government." It was held by Attorney-General MacVeagh, in an opinion to the Secretary of War, July 15, 1881, that "where a homestead entry of public land has been made by a settler, the land so entered cannot, while such entry stands, be set apart by the President for a military reservation, even prior to the completion of full title in the settler;" that "upon the entry the right in favor of the settler would seem to attach to the land, which is liable to be defeated only by failure on his part to comply with the requirements of the Homestead Law in regard to settlement and cultivation. This right amounts to an equitable interest in the land, subject to the future performance by the settler of certain conditions (in the event of which he becomes invested with full and complete ownership); and until forfeited by failure to perform the conditions, it must prevail not only against individuals, but against the government." 1 Land Dec. 80. And many rulings of the Interior Department sustain this view. These official utterances are entitled to great respect at the hands of this court, as remarked by Mr. Justice Lamar in Hastings & Dakota R. Co. v. Whitney, 182 U. S. 357, 363 [38: 368, 366].

In Witherspoon v. Duncan, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 210, 218 [18: 389, 341], it is said by Mr. Justice Davis, speaking for the court, that "in no just sense can lands be said to be public lands after they have been entered at the land office and a certificate of entry obtained. If public lands before the entry, after it they are private property. . . . The contract of purchase is complete when the certificate of entry is executed and delivered, and thereafter the land ceases to be a part of the public domain. The government agrees to make proper conveyance as soon as it can, and in the mean time holds the naked legal fee in trust for the purchaser, who has the equitable title." It may be said that this language refers to the certificate issued on final proofs, but if the word "entry," as applied to appropriations of land, "means that act by which an individual acquires an inceptive right to a portion of the unappropriated soil of the country, by filing his claim" (Chotard v. Pope, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 586, 588 [6: 737]), the principle has a wider scope.

In Hastings & Dakota R. Co. v. Whitney, ubi supra, an affidavit for the purpose of entering land as a homestead was filed on behalf of one Turner, in a local land office in Minnesota, on May 8, 1865, Turner claiming to act under section 1 of the Act of March 21, 1864 (13 Stat. 35), now section 2298 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. As a matter of fact, Turner was never on the land, and no member of his family was then residing, or ever did reside, on it, and no improvements whatever had ever been made thereon by anyone. Upon being paid their fees, the register and receiver of the land office allowed the entry, and the same stood upon the records of the local land office, and upon the records of the General Land Office, uncanceled, until September 30, 1872. Between May, 1865, and September, 1872, Congress made a grant to the State of Minnesota for the purpose of aiding in the construction of a railroad from Hastings, through certain counties, to a point on the western boundary of the State, which grant was accepted by the Legislature of the State of Minnesota and transferred to the Hast.

ings and Dakota Railroad Company, which shortly thereafter definitely located its line of road by filing its map in the office of the commissioner of the General Land Office. All these proceedings occurred prior to the 30th of September, 1872. This court declared that the almost uniform practice of the Department has been to regard land upon which an entry of record, valid upon its face, has been made, as appropriated and withdrawn from subsequent homestead entry, pre-emption, settlement, sale or grant, until the original entry be canceled or be declared forfeited, in which case the land reverts to the government as part of the public domain, and becomes again subject to entry under the Land Laws; and it was held that whatever defects there might be in an entry, so long as it remained a subsisting entry of record, whose legality had been passed upon by the land authorities and their action remained unreversed, it was such an appropriation of the tract as segregated it from the public domain, and therefore precluded it from subsequent grant; and that this entry on behalf of Turner "attached to the land" in question, within the meaning of the Act of Congress making the grant (14 Stat. 87), and could not be included within it. And as to mere settlement with the intention of obtaining title under the Pre-emption Laws, while it has been held that no vested right in the land as against the United States is acquired until all the prerequisites for the acquisition of title have been complied with, yet rights in parties as against each other were fully recognized as existing, based upon priority in the initiatory steps, when followed up to a patent. "The patent which is afterwards issued relates back to the date of the initiatory act, and cuts off all intervening claimants." Shepley v. Cowan, 91 U. S. 330, 337 [23: 424, 426].

Section 2339 of the Revised Statutes, which is in substance the ninth section of the Act of Congress of July 26, 1866 (14 Stat. 253), provides: "Whenever, by priority of possession, rights to the use of water, for mining, agricultural, manufacturing or other purposes, have vested and accrued, and the same are recognized and acknowledged by the local customs, laws and the decisions of courts, the possessors and owners of such vested rights shall be maintained and protected in the same; and the right of way for the construction of ditches and canals for the purposes herein specified is acknowledged and confirmed." This section, said Mr. Justice Miller, in Broder v. Water Co., 101 U. S. 274, 276 [25: 790, 791], "was rather a voluntary recognition of a pre-existing right of possession, constituting a valid claim to its continued use, than the establishment of a new one."

By section 17 of the Act of July 9, 1870, amendatory of the Act of July 26, 1866, it was provided, among other things, that "all patents granted, or pre-emption or homesteads allowed, shall be subject to any vested and accrued water rights, or rights to ditches and reservoirs used in connection with such water rights, as may have been acquired under or recognized by the ninth section of the Act of which this Act is amendatory." 16 Stat. 218. And this was carried forward into section 2340 of the Revised Statutes, and Smith's patent was subject to that reservation.

The 9th section of the Act of 1866 is referred to by Mr. Justice Field in Atchison v. Peterson, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 507, 512 [22: 414, 416], and in the opinion it is said that "the government being the sole proprietor of all the public lands, whether bordering on streams or otherwise, there was no occasion for the application of the common-law doctrine of riparian proprietorship with respect to the waters of those streams."

When, however, the government ceases to be the sole proprietor, the right of the riparian owner attaches, and cannot be subsequently invaded. As the riparian owner has the right to have the water flow ut currere solebat, undiminished except by reasonable consumption of upper proprietors, and no subsequent attempt to take the water only can override the prior appropriation of both land and water, it would seem reasonable that lawful riparian occupancy with intent to appropriate the land should have the same effect.

The Dakota Civil Code contains this section:

"Sec. 255. The owner of the land owns water standing thereon, or flowing over or under its surface, but not forming a definite stream. Water running in a definite stream, formed by nature over or under the surface, may be used by him as long as it remains there; but he may not prevent the natural flow of the stream, or of the natural spring from which it commences its definite course, nor pursue nor pollute the same." Leviess's Dakota Codes, 2d ed. 781.

By section 527, which is section 1 of an Act Relating to Water Rights, passed in February, 1881, it is provided: "That any person or persons, corporation or company, who may have or hold a title or possessory right or title to any mineral or agricultural lands within the limits of this Territory, shall be entitled to the usual enjoyment of the waters of the streams or creeks in said Territory for mining, milling, agricultural or domestic purposes: Provided, That the right to such use shall not interfere with any prior right or claim to such waters when the law has been complied with in doing the necessary work." Leviess's Codes, 861.

Section 650 of the Code of Civil Procedure is as follows:

"Any person settled upon the public lands belonging to the United States, on which settlement is not expressly prohibited by Congress or some department of the general government, may maintain an action for any injuries done the same; also an action to recover the possession thereof, in the same manner as if he possessed a fee simple title to said lands." Leviess's Codes, 171.

The local custom is set forth in the findings to have consisted in the recognition and acknowledgment of "the right to locate water rights, and to divert, appropriate and use the waters of flowing streams for purposes of irrigation when such location, diversion and use does not conflict or interfere with rights vested and accrued prior thereto."

Thus, under the laws of Congress and the Territory, and under the applicable custom, priority of possession gave priority of right. The question is not as to the extent of Smith's interest in the homestead as against the government, but whether as against Sturr his lawful occupancy under settlement and entry was not a prior appropriation which Sturr could not displace. We have no doubt it was, and agree with the brief and comprehensive opinion of the supreme court to that effect.

The judgment is affirmed.

Mr. Justice Brewer was not a member of the court when this case was submitted, and took no part in its decision.

THE COUNTY OF LINCOLN, Plff. in Err.,

NICHOLAS LUNING.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 529-534.)

Suits against States—county may be sued—law stating where suit may be brought—state decision—Nevada law—when fund for payment is provided—Statute of Limitations.

1. The Eleventh Amendment of the Federal Constitution, which restrains the jurisdiction granted by the Constitution over suits against States, is limited to those suits in which the State is a real party or a party on the record.
2. A county is a corporation created by and with such powers as are given to it by the State and is not within such constitutional restriction and may be sued in the circuit court.
3. Although the Act under which the bonds in this case were issued provides for litigation concerning the same, and names a court of the State in which such litigation can be had, such jurisdiction is not exclusive and does not prevent suit in the circuit court.
4. Where the Supreme Court of a State has held that a statute of the State does not contravene a State Constitution, this court will follow such decision.
5. Sections 1950 and 1964-1966 of the General Statutes of Nevada have application only to unliquidated claims and accounts, and do not apply to bonds and coupons.
6. The Nevada Act of 1873, which provided for the registering of overdue coupons, and for payment in a particular order, was a new provision for the payment of these bonds. It provided a special trust fund to which the coupon holder might, in the order of registration, look for payment.
7. When payment is provided for out of a particular fund to be created by the act of the debtor, he cannot plead the Statute of Limitations until he shows that that fund has been provided.

Submitted Jan. 13, 1890. Decided March 3, 1890.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Nevada to review judgments against a County on bonds and coupons issued by it. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. H. F. Bartine, for plaintiff in error:

The United States circuit court had no jurisdiction of the subject matter of the actions or of the parties thereto. The defendant is an integral part, a political subdivision, of the State.

Sharp v. Contra Costa County, 94 Cal. 291; Clarke v. Lyon County, 8 Nev. 185; McBane v.

People, 50 Ill. 504; Barnes v. D. C. 91 U. S. 544 (23: 441).

Counties cannot be sued at all except by the express statutory consent of the sovereign State of which they are parts.

The complaints do not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and cannot, therefore, support the judgment.

An Act of January 18, 1877, which provides for the registration of overdue coupons, and their payment thereafter in the order of their registration, exempts them from the operation of the Statute of Limitations.

Nash v. El Dorado County, 24 Fed. Rep. 255; Underhill v. Sonora, 17 Cal. 177; Freehill v. Chamberlain, 65 Cal. 604.

Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action on bonds and coupons.

133 U. S.

Judgment was rendered against the County and it alleges error. The primary question is as to the jurisdiction of the circuit court. This jurisdiction is challenged on two grounds: first, it is claimed that because the County is an integral part of the State it could not, under the Eleventh Amendment of the Federal Constitution, be sued in the circuit court; and, secondly, inasmuch as the Act under which the bonds were issued provided for litigation concerning the same, and named a court of the State in which such litigation could be had, that such jurisdiction was exclusive and prevented suit in the circuit court.

With regard to the first objection, it may be observed that the records of this court for the last thirty years are full of suits against counties, and it would seem as though by general consent the jurisdiction of the federal courts in such suits had become established. But irrespective of this general acquiescence, the jurisdiction of the circuit courts is beyond question. The Eleventh Amendment limits the jurisdiction only as to suits against a State. It was said by Chief Justice Marshall, in Osborn v. The Bank, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 738, 857 [6: 204, 282], that "the Eleventh Amendment, which restrains the jurisdiction granted by the Constitution over suits against States, is of necessity limited to those suits in which the State is a party on the record."

While that statement was held by this court in the case of Re Ayers, 128 U. S. 448 [31: 216], to be too narrow, yet by that decision the jurisdiction was limited only in respect to those cases in which the State is a real, if not a nominal, defendant; and while the county is territorially a part of the State, yet politically it is also a corporation created by and with such powers as are given to it by the State. In this respect it is a part of the State only in that remote sense in which any city, town or other municipal corporation may be said to be a part of the State. Metropolitan R. Co. v. Dist. Col. 182 U. S. 1 [33: 231].

The Constitution of the State of Nevada explicitly provides for the liability of counties to suit. Article eight is entitled "Municipal and Other Corporations," and its ten sections contain provisions, some applicable to private and others to both private and municipal corporations. Section five declares that "corporations may sue and be sued in all courts in like manner as individuals." And that this section is not to be limited to private corporations is evident, not alone from the generality of its language and from the title of the article, but also from several sections therein in which municipal corporations are expressly named. Thus the second section subjects the property of corporations to taxation, with a proviso "that the property of corporations formed for municipal . . . purposes may be exempted by law." And section ten expressly recognizes the county as a municipal corporation, for its language is: "No county, city, town or other municipal corporation shall become a stockholder," etc. Thus the liability of counties as municipal corporations to suit is declared by the Constitution itself. Further, the Act under which these bonds were issued provided for suits against the County in respect to this indebtedness in one of the courts of the State; and this 133 U. S.

liability of a county to suit has been affirmed by the Supreme Court of Nevada in the following cases: Waitz v. Ormsby County, 1 Nev. 370; Clarke v. Lyon County, 8 Nev. 181; Floral Springs Water Co. v. Rives, 14 Nev. 484.

With regard to the other objection the case of Cowles v. Mercer County, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 118 [19: 87], is decisive. In that case the court, by the chief justice, expressed its opinion on the very question in these words: "But it was argued that counties in Illinois, by the law of their organization, were exempted from suit elsewhere than in the circuit courts of the county. And this seems to be the construction given to the statutes concerning counties by the Supreme Court of Illinois. But that court has never decided that a county in Illinois is exempted from liability to suit in national courts. It is unnecessary, therefore, to consider what would be the effect of such a decision. It is enough for this case that we find the board of supervisors to be a corporation authorized to contract for the county. The power to contract with citizens of other States implies liability to suit by citizens of other States, and no statute limitation of suability can defeat a jurisdiction given by the Constitution."

With regard to the objection that the Statute under which these bonds were issued contravenes the State Constitution, it is enough to refer to the case of Odd Fellows Sav. & C. Bank v. Quillen, 11 Nev. 109, in which the Supreme Court of the State held the Act valid, following in that decision the case of Youngs v. Hall, 9 Nev. 212.

It is further objected that the complaint was defective in not showing that the bonds and coupons had been presented to the county commissioners and county auditor for allowance and approval, as provided by sections 1950 and 1964-1966 of the General Statutes of the State. Those sections, referring to claims and accounts, have application only to unliquidated claims and accounts, and do not apply to bonds and coupons. This question was presented in the case of Greene County v. Daniel, 102 U. S. 187, 194 [26: 99, 101], in which the court observed, speaking of bonds and coupons, that "the claim was, to all intents and purposes, audited by the court when the bonds were issued. The validity and amount of the liability were then definitely fixed, and warrants on the treasury given, payable at a future day."

The remaining question arises on the Statute of Limitations. By the General Limitation Law of the State some of the coupons were barred; but there has been this special legislation in reference to these coupons. The bonds were issued under the Funding Act of 1873. In 1877 the County was delinquent in its interest, and the Legislature passed an Act amendatory to the Act of 1873. This amendatory Act provided for the registering of overdue coupons, and imposed upon the treasurer the duty of thereafter paying the coupons as money came into his possession applicable thereto, in the order of their registration. Statutes of Nevada 1877, 46.

The coupons which by the General Limitation Law would have been barred were presented, as they fell due, to the treasurer for payment, and payment demanded and refused, because the interest fund was exhausted.

Thereupon the treasurer registered them as presented, in accordance with the Act of 1877, and from the time of their registration to the commencement of this suit there was no money in the treasury applicable to their payment. This Act, providing for registration and for payment in a particular order, was a new provision for the payment of these bonds, which was accepted by the creditor, and created a new right upon which he might rely. It provided, as it were, a special trust fund, to which the coupon holder might, in the order of registration, look for payment, and for payment through which he might safely wait. It amounted to a promise on the part of the County to pay such coupons as were registered, in the order of their registration, as fast as money came into the interest fund; and such promise was by the creditor accepted; and when payment is provided for out of a particular fund to be created by the act of the debtor, he cannot plead the Statute of Limitations until he shows that that fund has been provided.

The cases of Underhill v. Sonora, 17 Cal. 172, and Freehill v. Chamberlain, 65 Cal. 603, are in point. In the former case the court observes that "the legislative Acts then recognized the debt and made provision for its payment. This is enough to withdraw the case from the operation of the Statute; it is equivalent to a trust deed by the State setting apart property out of which the money due was to be paid at a given time, if not sooner paid upon a claim acknowledged to be an outstanding debt; and we cannot conceive of any principle of law or justice which would hold the claim to be barred by the Statute simply because the creditor waited after this for his money." In the other case it was held that "where a statute provides for the issuing of bonds of a city with interest coupons payable as fast as money should come into the treasury from special sources designated by the Act, the Statute of Limitations does not commence to run against the coupons until the money is received in the treasury in accordance with the terms of the Act."

Both of these decisions were rendered before the Act of 1877 was passed, and, being in an adjoining State which has always had close relations with the State of Nevada, may well have induced the passage of that Act.

These are all the questions presented. We see no error in the rulings in the circuit court, and its judgment is therefore affirmed. The cases of the same plaintiff in error against Charles Sutro, No 1275, and C. D. Vincent, No. 1276, on the present docket, are similar, and the same judgment will therefore be entered in them.

Jurisdiction as to treaty question—French

NOTE.—As to construction and operation of treaties, see note to U. S. v. Amistad, Bk. 10, p. 828.

As to when awards will be set aside by a court of equity, and when not, see note to Burchell v. Marsh, Bk. 15, p. 98.

Treaty of 1880—authority of commission—allowance of part of claim to French heirs and legatees—extrinsic evidence, when allowable to explain judgment—immaterial evidence.

1. Where the contention of the plaintiffs in error that they are entitled to an award rendered by the French and American Claims Commission is founded upon the French Treaty of 1880, the decision of the Supreme Court of Louisiana against the right thus asserted by them presents a question for the jurisdiction of this court.
2. That Commission possessed no authority to consider any claims against the government of either the United States or of France, except as held, both at the time of their presentation and of judgment thereon, by citizens of the other country.
3. A French citizen having a claim against the United States having died, said Commission could only allow, under the Treaty, the proportion of the claim going to such of his heirs and legatees as are citizens of France; and such Commission having allowed a part of such claim, the whole sum allowed must be paid to such French heirs and legatees, and cannot be equally distributed to them and other heirs and legatees of the claimant who are citizens of the United States.
4. Relief by the Commission under the Treaty could be given only to those legatees who were at the time citizens of France.
5. Where a judgment is ambiguous or uncertain as to what, or what portion of, claims were allowed by it, extrinsic evidence is admissible to ascertain and determine those facts.
6. Letters of counsel and the letter of one of the commissioners are not competent evidence for that purpose; but where, though received as evidence, they could not have had any effect upon the decision, as the claim rested on a treaty, the evidence is immaterial.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Louisiana to review a judgment of that court reversing a decree of the District Court of the Parish of New Orleans that the amount of an award made by the French and American Claims Commission should go to the French heirs only of the original claimant, and should not be distributed equally among them and the American heirs. Reversed.

Statement by Mr. Justice Field:

At the commencement of the late civil war L. F. Foucher, a citizen of France and a resident of the City of Paris, and bearing the title of Marquis de Circé, was the owner of a plantation situated on the east bank of the Mississippi River, a few miles above the centre of the City of New Orleans, though within its corporate limits. A portion of it was known as Exposition Park or Audubon Park. When the city was occupied by the federal troops in 1862 they took possession of the plantation. Some of its fields were used for pasture; some were converted into camping ground; and upon part a hospital for the soldiers was built. The whole was in the military occupation and control of the United States, to the entire exclusion of the owner. In 1865 a claim for reimbursement of the damages sustained was presented on behalf of the owner to the Military Claims Commission sitting at New Orleans. General Canby, as commanding general of the district embracing that city, and the head of the Commission, made a report upon the claim, recommending, upon the advice of his chief quartermaster, its settlement by the payment of $36,438.83. This report was addressed to the adjutant-general's department, and forwarded to Washington in June, 1866. No part of this claim was, however, paid, for the reason, as stated by counsel, that before action was had upon it the Act of Congress of February 21, 1867, was passed, forbidding the settlement of any claim for the occupation of or injury to real estate by the military authorities or troops of the United States where such claim originated during the war. (14 Stat. 397.)

In 1869 Foucher died, leaving a will, in which he made his widow, also a citizen of France, his universal legatee, and she was put in possession of his estate. In 1877 she died, leaving a will by which she devised her entire estate to her nephews and nieces, who were appointed her universal legatees jointly. After some litigation to determine the true construction of this will, the legatees went into possession of her estate. (31 La. Ann. 568.) The estates both of Foucher and of his widow were settled and the property distributed among the legatees of the latter or their heirs. The executors were discharged and the successions considered as finally closed. Neither the estate of Foucher nor of his widow had received any moneys upon the claim which had been presented on behalf of Foucher in 1865, for the damage sustained by the occupation and use of his plantation by the federal troops, the payment of which had been recommended by General Canby; nor was any mention made of the claim in the distribution of the estate of either.

In January, 1880, a Convention was concluded between the United States and France (12 Stat. 678), by which it was agreed that "all claims on the part of corporations, companies or private individuals, citizens of the United States, upon the government of France, arising out of acts committed against the persons or property of citizens of the United States not in the service of the enemies of France, or voluntarily giving aid and comfort to the same, by the French civil or military authorities, upon the high seas or within the territory of France, its colonies and dependencies, during the late war between France and Mexico, or during the war of 1870-'71, between France and Germany, and the subsequent civil disturbances known as the 'Insurrection of the Commune;' and on the other hand, all claims on the part of corporations, companies or private individuals, citizens of France, upon the government of the United States, arising out of acts committed against the persons or property of citizens of France not in the service of the enemies of the United States, or voluntarily giving aid and comfort to the same, by the civil or military authorities of the government of the United States, upon the high seas or within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States, during the period comprised between the thirteenth day of April, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, and the twentieth day of August, eighteen hundred and sixty-six, 188 U. S.

shall be referred to three commissioners, one of whom shall be named by the President of the United States, and one by the French government, and the third by His Majesty the Emperor of Brazil." The Convention also provided that the Commission thus constituted should be competent and obliged to examine and decide upon all claims of the above character presented to them by the citizens of either country, except such as had been already diplomatically, judicially or otherwise by competent authorities previously disposed of by either government; but that no claim or item of damage or injury based upon the emancipation or loss of slaves should be entertained. The Convention also provided that the Commission should, without delay, after its organization, proceed to examine and determine the claims specified, and that the concurring decisions of the commissioners or of any two of them should be conclusive and final; and the contracting parties especially engaged so to consider them, and to give full effect to such decisions, without any objections, evasions or delay whatever.

The Commission thus provided for was organized and proceeded to the hearing of claims at the City of Washington. The claim of Foucher was for acts committed against his property within the period prescribed, and the parties interested in that claim were desirous of presenting it to the Commission for consideration. That Commission, as it was authorized to do under the Act of June 16, 1880, providing for carrying the Treaty into effect, had adopted rules for the conduct of its business, among which was one that, if the claimant were dead, his executor or administrator, or legal representatives, must appear for him, and that each claimant should file in the office of the Commission a statement of his claim, in the form of a memorial addressed to the Commission. (21 Stat. 296, chap. 253, § 4.) The successions of Mr. and Mrs. Foucher were accordingly reopened, and Arthur Denis was appointed dative testamentary executor in both, that is, an executor to take the place of the one named in the wills of the deceased.

Soon afterwards Mr. Denis filed in the office of the Commission a memorial entitled "Arthur Denis, Dative Testamentary Executor of Foucher, v. The United States." In this memorial he presented the claim in the right of Foucher, deceased, and joined with him as claimants all parties interested in the successions of Mr. and Mrs. Foucher, all of whom were citizens of the United States, except Paul Louis Burthe and Dominique Francois Burthe, who were citizens of France; and he filed a power of attorney showing that he appeared as their agent. Subsequently these latter parties filed a separate petition or memorial, in which they appeared in person. They are heirs each of one eighth of the estate of Mrs. Foucher.

In June, 1883, the Commission rendered its award as follows:

"Arthur Denis }
v. } No. 603.
The United States. }

"We allow this claim at the sum of nine thousand and two hundred dollars, with interest at five per cent from April 1st, 1865."

Of this award Mr. Denis collected $8,229.18, from which he reserved $114.98 for future costs, and deducted $2,884.20 for charges and expenses, which are conceded to have been correct, leaving a balance of $5,280. This sum as dative executor he proposed to distribute among all the heirs and legatees of Mrs. Foucher precisely as he would have done had this amount been moneys possessed by her as part of her estate at the time of her death. All the parties, except the plaintiffs in error, are citizens of the United States, and were such citizens at the time of the award. The plaintiffs in error, being the only heirs who were at the time citizens of France, insisted that they were entitled to the whole award. Mr. Denis presented the matter to the Civil District Court for the Parish of Orleans for determination, showing the respective proportions the heirs and legatees would be entitled to receive if the sum mentioned was to be distributed among them in the same proportion as the original estates. Accompanying this showing—tableau of distribution as it is termed—he made the following statement:

"The undersigned, testamentary executor, understands that the French and American Claims Commission established the uniform jurisprudence for its decisions that it could not hear and determine any claims against the United States except those of claimants and beneficiaries who were French citizens, and that the said Commission rejected all claims of persons not French citizens, even when they represented the claim of a deceased French person.

"In claim No. 603, of the succession of L. F. Foucher de Circé, the actual claimants are all American citizens except Paul Louis Burthe and Dominique Francois Burthe, who are French citizens. Under the said jurisprudence of the Commission, and considering the status of the American claimants, the executor felt great doubt and hesitation as to the distribution to be made under this tableau. On the one hand it seemed as if the Commission, under its rulings, could not have made any award in favor of the American claimants, and that the award as allowed must have been intended for the French claimants only; but, on the other side, the Commission not having in express terms excluded the American claimants, the executor concluded, in making the tableau, to allow to the several legatees their recognized proportions of interest in the estates, leaving the French heirs to come by oppositions and assert their rights, if any they have, to the entire award."

To this representation, or tableau of distribution, the plaintiffs in error made opposition, alleging that they were entitled to the whole award, being the only heirs and legatees who were French citizens at the time the claim was presented and when the award was rendered; and that no award under the Treaty could have been made in favor of the other heirs and legatees, they being citizens of the United States at that time, and that no executor, administrator or person representing the succession of a person who was not a French citizen at the time the damage was suffered and award rendered could have any standing before the Commission. The district court of the parish, the court of original jurisdiction, maintained the position of the plaintiffs in error, and decreed that the entire fund, $5,280, should go to them, one half to each. From this judgment the executor appealed to the Supreme Court of Louisiana, which tribunal reversed the decree below, giving judgment in favor of the executor, to the effect that the entire fund in his possession from the award, less the charges and expenses incurred and the amount retained for future costs, should be distributed proportionally among the legatees and heirs of Mrs. Foucher, according to the tableau of distribution presented by him. From this latter judgment the case is brought to this court on writ of error.

Mr. Justice Field delivered the opinion of the court:

As the contention of the plaintiffs in error that they are entitled to the entire award rendered by the French and American Claims Commission, after deducting from it the conceded charges and expenses, is founded upon the stipulations of the Treaty of 1880, the refusal of the Supreme Court of Louisiana to recognize the right thus asserted by them presents a question for the jurisdiction of this court, within the express terms of the 25th section of the Judiciary Act of 1789, which is reproduced, somewhat enlarged in its provisions, in the Revised Statutes (§ 709). The decision was against the right specially claimed under the Treaty in question.

The position of the plaintiffs in error was, in our judgment, well taken, and should have been sustained. Independently of the express provisions of the Treaty it could not reasonably be urged that the award should inure to the benefit of citizens of the United States. It would be a remarkable thing, and we think without precedent in the history of diplomacy, for the government of the United States to make a treaty with another country to indemnify its own citizens for injuries received from its own officers. To any suggestion of that kind from a foreign country the government of the United States would probably answer that it was entirely competent to deal with its own citizens and to do justice to them without the interposition of any other country.

But the express language of the Treaty here limits the jurisdiction of the Commission to claims by citizens of one country against the government of the other. It matters not by whom the claim may have been presented to the Commission. That body possessed no authority to consider any claims against the government of either the United States or of France, except as held, both at the time of their presentation and of judgment thereon, by citizens of the other country.

There is no ambiguity in the language of the Treaty on this subject; it is entirely free from doubt. It is true Arthur Denis presented the claim as dative testamentary executor of Mr. Foucher's succession, and he joined, in his memorial to the Commission, all the legatees and heirs under the will of Madame Foucher, to whom the estate of her husband had been left, appearing also for the plaintiffs in error under a power of attorney from them, they subsequently appearing in person. This memorial only gave the Commission full knowledge of the origin and condition of the claim. It could not enlarge its power or bring within its jurisdiction any claim against the United States of other parties than citizens of France. When the award was made it could lawfully be intended for no other than such citizens. The right of the plaintiffs in error to the award arises upon the Treaty, to which any rules for the distribution of estates under the law of Louisiana must give way, the Treaty being of superior authority in the case. They were entitled, each to one eighth of any property coming to them as legatees of Mrs. Foucher, and that proportion of the whole claim shown to exist against the United States for damages to the property of her husband and for its use, was all that the Commission could allow, as it could not consider the interests of their co-legatees or co-heirs, they not being citizens of France. The amount of the whole claim as set forth in the memorial presented by Denis exceeded $100,000. The amount which General Canby, in 1865, recommended to be paid, as already stated, exceeded $36,000. Whatever the damages sustained by Foucher as estimated by the Commission that body could allow only one fourth thereof, the proportion due to the plaintiffs in error. Any award to their co-legatees would have been invalid and void. They may be entitled to an equal share in the whole claim against the government of the United States; but if so they must resort to remedies provided by the laws of the United States for the prosecution of claims against them, or, if those remedies are inadequate to give this relief, they must apply to Congress. Relief by the Commission under the Treaty could be given only to those legatees who were at the time citizens of France.

On the hearing before the district court, the brief of counsel for the French government, and of private counsel filed with the Commission for the claimants, and letters of the latter counsel, were produced to show that no claim was pressed by them except on behalf of the plaintiffs in error; and also a letter of one of the commissioners, to show that no other claim was considered by the Commission. Objection was taken to this evidence on the ground that the decision of the Commission could not be interpreted by subsequent testimony, or by the arguments of counsel before it, or the opinions of attorneys employed in the case. As we understand the objection, it went to the competency of the testimony, rather than to its sufficiency. As a general rule, the judgment of a court or commission is to be interpreted by its own language and the pleadings or proceedings upon which it is founded. Extrinsic evidence to aid in its interpretation is inadmissible unless after reference to the pleadings and proceedings there remains some ambiguity or uncertainty in it. In such cases resort may be had to other evidence, as where, from the generality of the language in the pleadings or proceedings, as well as in the decision, it becomes necessary to ascertain and limit the extent of the judgment intended. Thus, where a former judgment is pleaded in bar of a second action upon the same demand, it is competent to show by extrinsic evidence the identity of the demands in the two cases, if this does not appear on the face of the pleadings. Washington, Alexandria & Georgetown Steam Packet Co. v. Sickles, 65 U. S. 24 How. 333 [16: 650]; Miles v. Caldwell, 69 U. S. 2 Wall. 85 [17: 555]; Cromwell v. Sac County, 94 U. S. 851, 855 [24: 195].

If it had been necessary to limit the effect of the award of the Commission in the present case, we do not perceive any valid objection to extrinsic evidence for that purpose. The brief of counsel for the claimants would show the character and extent of their contention before that body. But letters of counsel and the letter of one of the commissioners can hardly be considered as competent evidence. Their declarations, if receivable at all, could only be so in the form of testimony given by them as witnesses in the case, and not in any ex parte written communication. But, though received as evidence, they could not have had any effect upon the decision as to the claim of the plaintiffs in error. Their claim rested on the Treaty, which authorized no award in favor of any other parties before the Commission. It is therefore immaterial that such evidence was received. The nature and extent of the award, and the parties entitled to it, depended upon considerations which such evidence could in no way affect.

It follows that the judgment of the Supreme Court of Louisiana must be reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to take further proceedings in accordance with this opinion; and it is so ordered.

FRANCIS A. PALMER, Plff. in Err.,

v.

MARTIN T. McMAHON, Receiver of Taxes of the CITY OF NEW YORK.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 660-670.)

State decision—shares of national banks taxable—U. S. securities—deductions of debts from assessment—discrimination in taxation—N. Y. taxation valid—N. Y. Tax Law constitutional—due process of law—collection of tax by commitment of person constitutional.

1. This court is bound by the decision of the Court of Appeals of the State of New York as to compliance with the State Statute in relation to taxes, form of assessment and oath of assessors.
2. Capital of national and state banks invested in United States securities cannot be subjected to state taxation; but shares of bank stock may be taxed in the hands of their individual owners at their actual instead of their par value, without regard to the fact that part or the whole of the capital of the corporation might be so invested.
3. Under Acts permitting the deduction of debts from the value of all a person's taxable property, such deduction must be permitted from the value of such shares; but a statute is not void because it does not provide for a deduction; nor is the assessment void if deductions are not made, but voidable only. Individual instances of omission or undervaluation cannot be relied on to invalidate an assessment.
4. Because a state statute does not provide for the taxation of shares in corporations other than banks, it does not follow that the shareholders in national banks are discriminated against.
5. The mode of taxation adopted by the State of New York in reference to its corporations, excluding trust companies and savings banks, does not operate in such a way as to make the tax assessed upon shares of national banks at a greater rate than that imposed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens.

NOTE.—As to power of States to tax, see note to Dobbins v. Erie County, Bk. 10, p. 1022.

That taxation of stock or shares in corporation does not impair obligation of contracts; and as to taxation of shares of national banks and other corporations.—see note to Providence Bank v. Billings, Bk. 7, p. 939.

As to exemption from taxation; whether a contract

6. Chapter 230 of the Laws of New York of 1843 is constitutional. It does not deprive of liberty or property without due process of law, nor of the equal protection of the laws, in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. The phrase "due process of law" does not necessarily mean a judicial proceeding.

7. When the law provides for a mode of confirming or contesting the assessment, with due notice to the person assessed, and for a review, the assessment does not deprive the owner of his property without due process of law.

8. Collection of tax by distress and seizure of person is of very ancient date. Under the Act of 1843, commitment is not resorted to until other means of collection have failed and then only upon a showing of property possessed, not accessible to levy, but enabling the owner to pay if he chooses.

9. Collection in this way, founded on necessity and long recognized by the State of New York and operating alike on all persons and property similarly situated, is not within the inhibitions of the Fourteenth Amendment.

IN ERROR to the Court of Common Pleas for the City and County of New York to review a judgment and order finding Francis A. Palmer guilty of misconduct in neglecting to pay personal taxes assessed against him and ordering that he stand committed until he shall have paid the taxes with interest and costs. Affirmed.

The several decisions in this case below are reported as follows: 11 Daly, 214; 12 Daly, 362; 102 N. Y. 176.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

This is a writ of error to the Court of Common Pleas for the City and County of New York to review a judgment and order finding Francis A. Palmer guilty of misconduct in neglecting to pay personal taxes assessed, imposed and confirmed against him for the year 1881, and ordering that he stand committed until he shall have paid the amount of the said taxes, with interest and costs, unless the court should see fit sooner to discharge him, which judgment and order were rendered in a proceeding brought under the provisions of chapter 230 of the Laws of the State of New York of 1843, art. II., secs. 12 and 13, which sections are as follows:

"Sec. 12. In case of the refusal or neglect of any person to pay any tax imposed on him for personal property, if there be no goods or chattels in his possession upon which the same may be levied by distress and sale according to law, and if the property assessed shall exceed the sum of one thousand dollars, the said receiver, if he has reason to believe that the person taxed has debts, credits, choses in action or other personal property, not taxed elsewhere or not; not implied,—see note to Tucker v. Ferguson, Bk. 22, p. 805.

As to when an injunction to restrain the collection of a tax will be granted, see note to Dows v. Chicago, Bk. 20, p. 65.

As to when taxes illegally assessed can be recovered back, see note to Ersikine v. Van Arsdale, Bk. 21, p. 63.

in this State, and upon which levy cannot be made according to law, may thereupon in his discretion make application, within one year, to the court of common pleas of the county, or the supreme court, to enforce the payment of such tax.

"Sec. 18. The court may impose a fine for the misconduct mentioned in the next preceding section, sufficient in amount for the payment of the tax assessed, and of the costs and expenses of the proceedings authorized by this Act to enforce such payment, or to punish such misconduct; and the amount of such tax shall be paid out of such fine to the said receiver, who shall pay the same in like manner as the tax was required to be paid; and costs and expenses of such proceedings shall be paid out of such fine to the said receiver who made the application to enforce the payment of the tax."

The record shows that on the 17th day of April, 1882, Martin T. McMahon, the receiver of taxes of the City of New York, filed a petition against Francis A. Palmer in the court of common pleas, stating that in the year 1881 Mr. Palmer was a resident of the Twenty-first Ward in the City of New York and a stockholder in the National Broadway Bank, located in the Third Ward of said City; that the shares of stock in said bank owned by Mr. Palmer were duly assessed for the year 1881 at the valuation of $247,635, which valuation was entered by the tax commissioners in "The Annual Record of the Assessed Valuation of Real and Personal Estate" for the year 1881, which record was open for examination and correction from the second Monday of January until the first day of May, 1881, and the fact that the books were so open was duly advertised; that before April 30, 1881, Palmer applied for a reduction of the valuation, and it was reduced by the commissioners to the sum of $190,635; that on May 1, 1881, the assessment rolls were prepared from the books, upon which his name was entered, with an assessment against him for his shares at the valuation last mentioned, which rolls were duly certified to the Board of Aldermen of the City of New York, and immediately afterwards the tax commissioners gave public notice that the tax rolls had been completed and delivered to the board, and would be open to public inspection for the period of fifteen days from the date of the notice, which notice was duly published in several newspapers in the City of New York for fifteen days consecutively, commencing July 5, 1881; that thereafter the tax upon such valuation of Palmer's shares of stock was estimated and set down upon said roll at the sum $4,994.63, and on October 13, 1881, was duly confirmed by the board of aldermen, and corrected assessment rolls showing the amount of said tax were delivered to McMahon, as receiver of taxes, with a warrant for the collection thereof; that notice was duly published in twelve New York newspapers that said assessment rolls had been delivered and that the taxes were due and payable thereon; that thereafter notice was again published in twelve newspapers that unless the taxes were paid the receiver would proceed to collect them according to law; and a fourth notice was likewise published requiring payment; that Palmer had neglected to pay the sum of $3,684.63 of the tax assessed against him; that subsequently to the 15th of January, 1882, a warrant was issued by the receiver to a marshal of the city for the collection of said tax, which was returned unsatisfied, except as to the sum of $1,310, after demand of payment from Palmer, which was refused as to $3,684.63; that there were no goods or chattels in Palmer's possession upon which said tax might be levied by distress and sale; that one year had not elapsed since said refusal or the return of the warrant; and that the receiver had reason to believe that Palmer had debts, credits, choses in action or other personal property, not taxed elsewhere in the State of New York, upon which levy could not be made according to law; and he applied for the enforcement of payment of the tax pursuant to the Statute.

Defendant Palmer was ordered, upon the foregoing petition, to show cause why he should not be punished for his misconduct in neglecting and refusing to pay said personal-property tax, and he appeared and interposed an affidavit, in which he set up various matters in resistance to the order, and among other things insisted that his shares of stock were not lawfully assessed for the year 1881, for reasons stated in a demand theretofore served upon the commissioners of taxes in the City of New York, of which a copy was attached to the affidavit, dated April 26, 1881, and whereby the tax commissioners were requested to strike from the record the names of all the shareholders in said bank upon various grounds, and, in case the foregoing demand was refused, further demanding that the assessed value of each share, which had been fixed by the commissioners at $45, be reduced to $10, by deducting the value of United States bonds held by the bank, and, in the event of a refusal, that the valuation of each share should be reduced to the amount of $27, being sixty per cent of the assessed value of each share of stock exclusive of real estate. In support of the petition affidavits of the tax commissioners were presented to the court. It appeared that a deduction of $57,000 on account of debts due by Palmer had been made from the original valuation of the shares, on his application. The court of common pleas thereupon made the order complained of, an opinion being given by Van Brunt, J. (11 Daly, 214), in which all the objections made by Palmer were carefully considered and overruled. From this order an appeal was taken to the general term of the court of common pleas, by which said order was affirmed, the opinion of the court being delivered by Beach, J., and reported in 12 Daly, 362. From the judgment of the general term an appeal was taken to the Court of Appeals of the State of New York, the judgment affirmed, and the proceedings remitted to the court of common pleas. The opinion of the court of appeals by Ruger, Ch. J., is to be found in 102 N. Y. 176, and is quoted from with approval by this court in Mercantile Bank v. New York, 121 U. S. 138, 158 [80: 895, 902]. To the judgment of the court of common pleas this writ of error was sued out.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

We are bound by the decision of the Court of Appeals of the State of New York adversely to the plaintiff in error, as to failure to comply with the State Statute in relation to the method of procedure, form of assessment, oath of assessors, etc., in respect to which it may be further remarked that the attack in this case is in its nature collateral. Stanley v. Albany County Suprs. 121 U. S. 535 [30: 1000]; Albany County Suprs. v. Stanley, 105 U. S. 305 [26: 1044]. We proceed to examine, therefore, whether the assessment was invalid because the Statute under which it was laid contravened the Constitution or laws of the United States, and whether the proceedings authorized by chapter 280 of the Laws of 1843 operated to deprive the citizen of liberty or property without due process of law.

Section 5219 of the Revised Statutes, Title LXII., National Banks, reads as follows:

"Nothing herein shall prevent all the shares in any association from being included in the valuation of the personal property of the owner or holder of such shares, in assessing taxes imposed by authority of the State within which the association is located; but the Legislature of each State may determine and direct the manner and place of taxing all the shares of national banking associations located within the State, subject only to the two restrictions, that the taxation shall not be at a greater rate than is assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of such State, and that the shares of any national banking association owned by nonresidents of any State shall be taxed in the city or town where the bank is located, and not elsewhere. Nothing herein shall be construed to exempt the real property of associations from either state, county or municipal taxes, to the same extent, according to its value as other real property is taxed."

Chapter 596 of the Laws of New York of 1880 is entitled "An Act to Provide for the Taxation of Banks and of Moneyed Capital Engaged in the Business of Banking, Receiving Deposits or Otherwise," and its third section reads thus:

"The stockholders in every bank, banking association or trust company, organized under the authority of this State, or of the United States, shall be assessed and taxed on the value of their shares of stock therein; said shares shall be included in the valuation of the personal property of such stockholders in the assessment of taxes at the place, city, town or ward where such bank, banking association or trust company is located, and not elsewhere, whether the said stockholder reside in said place, city, town or ward or not; but in the assessment of said shares, each stockholder shall be allowed all the deductions and exemptions allowed by law in assessing the value of other taxable personal property owned by individual citizens of this State, and the assessment or taxation shall not be at a greater rate than is made or assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of this State. In making such assessment there shall also be deducted from the value of such shares such sum as is in the same proportion to such value as is the assessed value of the real estate of the bank, banking association or trust company, and in which any portion of their capital is invested, in which said shares are held, to the whole amount of the capital stock of such bank, banking association or trust company; nothing herein contained shall be held or construed to exempt the real estate of banks, banking associations or trust companies from either state, county or municipal taxes; but the same shall be subject to state, county, municipal and other taxation, to the same extent and rate, and in the same manner, according to its value, as other real estate is taxed." 1 Laws of New York of 1880, pp. 888, 889.

We have decided that so much of the capital of national and state banks as is invested in United States securities cannot be subjected to state taxation (People v. Comrs. of Taxes, 67 U. S. 2 Black, 620 [17: 451]; Bank Tax Case, 69 U. S. 2 Wall. 200 [17: 793]); but that shares of bank stock maybe taxed in the hands of their individual owners at their actual instead of their par value (People v. Comrs. of Taxes, 94 U. S. 415 [24: 164]; Hepburn v. Carlisle School Directors, 90 U. S. 23 Wall. 480 [23: 112]), without regard to the fact that part or the whole of the capital of the corporation might be so invested (Van Allen v. Assessors, 70 U. S. 3 Wall. 573 [18: 229]; Bradley v. People, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 459 [18: 433]; People v. New York County Comrs. of Taxes, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 244 [18: 344]); and that under Acts permitting the deduction of debts from the value of all a person's taxable property, such deduction must be permitted from the value of such shares (People v. Weaver, 100 U. S. 539, 546 [25: 705, 707]); but that a statute is not void because it does not provide for a deduction, nor is the assessment void if deductions are not made, but avoidable only. Albany County Suprs. v. Stanley, 105 U. S. 805 [26: 1044]. We have also held that individual instances of omission or undervaluation cannot be relied on to invalidate an assessment (Suprs. v. Stanley, supra); and that because a state statute does not provide for the taxation of shares in corporations other than banks, it does not follow that the tax on moneyed capital invested in bank shares is at a greater rate than that of the moneyed capital of individual citizens invested in other corporations, nor are the shareholders in national banks discriminated against, because the taxation of such other corporations is arrived at under a separate system. Mercantile Bank v. New York, 121 U. S. 188 [30: 895]. In this last case the assessment was made in pursuance of section 812 of an Act of the Legislature of the State of New York, passed July 1, 1882, entitled "An Act to Revise the Statutes of This State Relating to Banks, Banking and Trust Companies," which section is identical with section 8 of the Act of 1880, except that trust companies are omitted in the Act of 1882, and a provision in relation to notice is added at the end of the section. The court held as follows: "The main purpose of Congress in fixing limits to state taxation on investments in shares of national banks was to render it impossible for the State, in levying such a tax, to create and foster an unequal and unfriendly competition, by favoring institutions or individuals carrying on a similar business, and operations and investments of like character. The term 'moneyed capital,' as used in Rev. Stat., § 5219, respecting state taxation of shares in national banks, embraces capital employed in national banks, and capital employed by individuals when the object of their business is the making of profit by the use of their moneyed capital as money—as in banking as that business is defined in the opinion of the court; but it does not include moneyed capital in the hands of a corporation, even if its business be such as to make its shares moneyed capital when in the hands of individuals, or if it invests its capital in securities payable in money. The mode of taxation adopted by the State of New York in reference to its corporations, excluding trust companies and savings banks, does not operate in such a way as to make the tax assessed upon shares of national banks at a greater rate than that imposed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens." The conclusions there announced and the reasoning by which they are supported, are decisive in the disposition of the errors assigned on behalf of the plaintiff in error, on the first branch of this case. The assessment was not void because in contravention of the Constitution or laws of the United States.

But it is argued that chapter 280 of the Laws of New York of 1843 is unconstitutional, as depriving the plaintiff in error of liberty and property without due process of law, and of the equal protection of the laws, in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. That Amendment provides that no State "shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." It is insisted that Palmer had no notice and no opportunity to be heard or to confront or cross-examine the witnesses for the taxing authorities or to subpoena witnesses in his own behalf; and had not otherwise the protection afforded in a judicial trial upon the merits. The phrase "due process of law" does not necessarily mean a judicial proceeding. "The nation from whom we inherit the phrase 'due process of law,'" said this court, speaking by Mr. Justice Miller, "has never relied upon the courts of justice for the collection of her taxes, though she passed through a successful revolution in resistance to unlawful taxation." McMillen v. Anderson, 95 U. S. 87, 41 [24: 385, 386].

The power to tax belongs exclusively to the legislative branch of the government, and when the law provides for a mode of confirming or contesting the charge imposed, with such notice to the person as is appropriate to the nature of the case, the assessment cannot be said to deprive the owner of his property without due process of law. Spencer v. Merchant, 125 U. S. 845 [31: 763]; Walston v. Nevins, 128 U. S. 578 [32: 544]. The imposition of taxes is in its nature administrative and not judicial, but assessors exercise quasi judicial powers in arriving at the value, and opportunity to be heard should be and is given under all just systems of taxation according to value.

It is enough, however, if the law provides for a board of revision authorized to hear complaints respecting the justice of the assessment, and prescribes the time during which and the place where such complaints may be made. Hagar v. Reclamation District, 111 U. S. 701, 710 [28: 569, 571].

The Law of New York gave opportunity for objection before the tax commissioners (Laws of New York 1859, chap. 302, § 10, p. 681), and the plaintiff in error appeared and obtained a large deduction from the original valuation. If dissatisfied with the final action of the commissioners, he could have had that action reviewed on certiorari. Laws of New York 1859, chap. 302, § 20, p. 684; People v. Comrs. of Taxes, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 244 [18: 344]. But he did not avail himself of this remedy.

The proceeding here was purely an executive process to collect the tax after the liability of the party was finally fixed.

Collection by distress and seizure of person is of very ancient date (Murray v. Hoboken Land Co. 59 U. S. 18 How. 272 [15: 372]); and counsel for defendant in error cites many English statutes, commencing with the twelfth year of Henry VII. (chap. 13), which in their essential features resemble the New York Law upon the subject, one in 6 Henry VIII. (chap. 26) being strikingly like it. (2 Statutes of the Realm, 644; 3 Statutes of the Realm, 156, 230, 516, 812; 4 Statutes of the Realm, 176, 334, 385, 744, 991, 1108, 1247; 5 Statutes of the Realm, 9, 700; 7 Statutes of the Realm, 567.) Under the Act of 1843 commitment is not resorted to until other means of collection have failed and then only upon a showing of property possessed, not accessible to levy, but enabling the owner to pay if he chooses, this constituting such misconduct as justifies the order. That law had been in existence for more than forty years at the time of this proceeding. We do not regard the collection in this way, founded on necessity and so long recognized by the State of New York as to be justifiably resorted to under the circumstances detailed in the Act, and operating alike on all persons and property similarly situated, as within the inhibitions of the Fourteenth Amendment.

The judgment is affirmed.

Mr. Justice Blatchford did not take any part in the decision of this case.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Illinois to review a judgment affirming a judgment of a lower court of that State in favor of plaintiff for the amount of certain promissory notes given as the purchase price of land in that State, the title to which defendants alleged had failed. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Opinion below, 4 West. Rep. 176, 116 Ill. 643.

Mr. Morton Culver, for plaintiffs in error:

This case has been tried twice in the Circuit Court of Cook County, Illinois, has twice been passed upon by the Appellate Court of the First District of Illinois (Gormley v. Uthe, 1 Ill. App. 170; Culver v. Uthe, 7 Ill. App. 468), and was then decided by the Supreme Court of Illinois. Gormley v. Uthe, 4 West. Rep. 176, 116 Ill. 643.

The pretended location was improperly admitted in evidence.

Under the Act of 28th February, 1850, the title to the swamp lands in the several States passed to such States individually on that day; the Act was a grant in presenti.

Land disposed of by the United States in satisfaction of military land warrants are not sold, within the meaning of the Statute.

Mr. Harvey B. Hurd for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

The writ of error in this case brings before us for review a judgment of the Supreme Court of the State of Illinois. The suit was brought originally by the present defendant in error, Gertrude Uthe, against Morton Culver and Michael Gormley, in which she sought to recover on eleven promissory notes made by them March 28, 1874, all of which were due and unpaid at the commencement of this action, and on which she claimed to recover the sum of $7,000. To this the defendants pleaded, among other defenses, that the notes were given as the purchase price of a quarter section of land in Cook County in that State, and that the consideration for which said notes were given, namely, the title to said quarter section, had utterly failed, and that plaintiff had no title to the lands which she sold to the defendants at the time of the sale, or at any other time.

U. S., Book 33.

The plaintiff recovered judgment against defendants, notwithstanding this plea, which was affirmed in the Supreme Court of the State, upon a writ of error issued by that court, and it is that judgment which we are called upon to review. 116 Ill. 643 [4 West. Rep. 176].

The facts out of which the jurisdiction of this court arises, and on which we are to determine whether there is error in the judgment of the supreme court, are substantially as follows: The father of the plaintiff, Gertrude, in whom the title which she sold to the defendants originated, had a patent from the United States for the land in controversy, dated February 10, 1851, which purported on its face to be issued under the Act of Congress of February 11, 1847 (9 Stat. 123), on a military land warrant that he had deposited in the General Land Office.

This land warrant was located on the land in question, at the Land Office of the United States in Chicago, Illinois, on July 10, 1850, under the authority of Uthe himself, and the land-warrant certificate was delivered up, and the patent aforesaid issued to him in due time and after the proper course of proceedings. There does not seem to be any valid objection to the mode in which this was done.

The defense relied upon the fact that the land in question was swamp land within the meaning of the Act of Congress of the 28th of September, 1850 (9 Stat. 519); that by that Statute the title to the land was transferred to the State of Illinois between the time of the location of the military land warrant and the issue of the patent for it to Uthe; and that therefore the title claimed under Uthe utterly failed, being vested by that Statute in the State of Illinois, the Act being a grant in presenti, and taking effect at its date.

The first section of that Act reads as follows:

"To enable the State of Arkansas to construct the necessary levees and drains to reclaim the swamp and overflowed lands therein, the whole of those swamp and overflowed lands, made unfit thereby for cultivation, which shall remain unsold at the passage of this Act, shall be, and the same are hereby, granted to said State."

The Act is extended by its fourth section to the other States of the Union in which there were swamp lands belonging to the United States, including the State of Illinois, and the argument of the defendant in error is that by reason of the location of the military land warrant of Uthe on this land on the 10th day of July, 1850, nearly three months before the passage of this Act, it had been sold to Uthe, within the meaning of the Statute; and this is the principal question which we have to decide.

There does not seem to be any doubt that the land in controversy was swamp land, within the meaning of the Act of Congress, and if the location by Uthe of his land warrant did not create a right to the land which excludes it from the grant to the State by Congress, the plaintiff Gertrude had no title, and the defense should have been sustained.

The first objection taken to the claim of Uthe was to the introduction in evidence of the certified copy of the records of the Land Office of the United States at Washington, concerning the location of the land warrant by Uthe. This transcript is certified by L. Harrison, acting commissioner of the General Land Office, under the seal of his office, and contains the various acts of the register and receiver of the Land Office at Chicago and of Uthe, in regard to the location of the land, showing that it was subject to location at the time, and that the land warrant was properly delivered up and deposited with the commissioner of the Land Office.

The objection made in the brief of counsel to the reception of this copy is not very clearly stated. It is said that a simple inspection both of the United States Statute and of the Illinois Statute would show conclusively that it could not be admitted under either of them, and reference is made to section 20, chapter 51, of the Revised Statutes of Illinois, and section 906 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. But section 891 of the latter Statutes is ample authority for the introduction in evidence of the transcript of the General Land Office in the present case. It reads as follows:

"Copies of any records, books or papers, in the General Land Office, authenticated by the seal and certified by the commissioner thereof, or, when his office is vacant, by the principal clerk, shall be evidence equally with the originals thereof. And literal exemplifications of such records shall be held, when so introduced in evidence, to be of the same validity as if the names of the officers signing and countersigning the same had been fully inserted in such record."

There is therefore no error in the admission of this transcript in evidence.

As regards its effect upon the rights of the parties, it seems to us it shows that under an Act of Congress which authorized it to be done, Uthe, by directing his land warrant to be located upon this land and delivering up the warrant, and by the proceedings of the Land Office upon that location, which resulted in issuing a patent to him for the land, had acquired an equitable title to the land, or what may be called a vested interest in it, prior to the passage of the Swamp Land Act by Congress. He had done what by the Act of Congress of 1847 entitled him to the land on which his warrant was located. He had delivered up the land warrant, the evidence of his claim against the government. He had received in exchange for it the certificate of the receiver and register of the Land Office, and these entitled him to a patent after such delay as was necessary to ascertain the fact that the land had been granted to no one else, and that all his proceedings were regular, which facts were to be determined by the commissioner of the General Land Office, and which were determined in his favor. He had paid for this land. He had paid by the delivering up and cancellation of his land warrant. He had received the certificate of the register and receiver of the Land Office at Chicago, which, by the laws of nearly all the Western States, have been made equivalent to a title to the land in actions of ejectment, though the strict legal title remained in the United States at the date of the passage of the Swamp Land Act.

Are we to suppose that Congress intended to give to the State of Illinois the land which it had already, by a contract for which value was received, promised to convey to Uthe? As the grant to the States of the swamp land within their jurisdiction was a gratuity, although accompanied with a trust for the reclamation of said land, it is not easily to be supposed that Congress intended to be thus generous at the expense of parties who had vested rights in any of the lands so donated, derived from the United States. It would be a matter of considerable doubt whether such an inference, that Congress intentionally violated its contract, would be indulged, if there were no words of reservation in the Statute. But when we find the broad declaration made that the grant only includes those swamp and overflowed lands made unfit thereby for cultivation, which shall remain unsold at the passage of the Act, we do not have much difficulty in holding that this land was not unsold within the meaning of the Statute. It is true that in a technical sense, and where a due regard to the intention of the parties using the word "sold" is had, it may mean a transfer of the title of property for a money consideration. Yet, it has other meanings which would include the present transaction, when it is obvious that such was the intent of the party using the phrase. We cannot doubt that the delivery by Uthe of his land warrant to the proper officers of the government, with a direction that it be located on this land, and the paper which they issued to him, showing that he had thereby acquired the right to a patent for the land, constituted a sale within the meaning of the Act of Congress granting the swamp lands to the States. The case of Iowa v. McFarland, 110 U. S. 471 [28:198], it is true, gives a different construction to the word "sale" in an Act of Congress concerning certain sales of public lands. But the intent of Congress in that case was relied on as indicating that the word "sale," as applied to a disposal of the public lands by the government, was limited to sales for cash. The following language, used in the opinion in that case, indicates this very clearly:

"When each of these Acts speaks of lands 'sold by Congress,' five per cent of the net proceeds of which shall be reserved and be 'disbursed' or 'appropriated' for the benefit of the States in which the land lies, it evidently has in view sales in the ordinary sense, from which the United States receive proceeds, in the shape of money payable into the treasury, out of which the five per cent may be reserved and paid to the State; and does not intend to include lands promised and granted by the United States as a reward for military service, for which nothing is received into the treasury."

In the present case, the Act which we are now construing does not contemplate the receipt of any money into the treasury of the United States, nor the payment of any money out of it, in regard to these swamp lands. We feel at liberty, therefore, to construe the Statute as intending to exclude from the grant all the swamp and overflowed lands for which it had, by contract, given a vested right, for a valuable consideration, to individuals before the passage of that Act.

The decision of the Supreme Court of Illinois, which affirmed the action of the lower court, founded on this principle, is sound in regard to the questions which we have power to review, and its judgment is therefore affirmed.

WILLIAM ASPINWALL, Plff. in Err.

PETER BUTLER, Receiver of the PACIFIC NATIONAL BANK OF BOSTON.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 595-610.)

National bank—liability of shareholder—increase of stock—whole amount not subscribed—secs. 5142 and 5151, Rev. Stat.

1. Where the directors of a National Bank passed a resolution to increase its stock, giving its stockholders the right to take the new stock to an amount equal to that then held by them, the fact that some of the new stock is not taken is not sufficient ground for a particular stockholder to repudiate his new stock taken by him and withdraw the amount paid therefor, and to exempt him as a shareholder from statutory liability to creditors.
2. There was no express condition that the individual subscriptions should be void if the whole of the new stock was not subscribed; and there was no implied condition in law to that effect.
3. Section 5142 of the Revised Statutes is not violated by an issue of the exact amount of stock that was paid in; it was intended to prevent what is called watering of stock.
4. Where the stock was lawfully created and the defendant subscribed for the shares in question and paid for them, and received his certificate, he became a stockholder; and, when the Bank went into liquidation, he became liable under section 5151 of the Revised Statutes to pay an amount equal to the stock by him so held for debts of the Bank.

Submitted Jan. 7, 1890. Decided March 3, 1890.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Massachusetts to review a judgment for plaintiff in an action by a Receiver of a National Bank to recover an assessment on its capital stock, of a stockholder, to pay the debts of the Bank. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Opinion below, 83 Fed. Rep. 217.

Messrs. Thomas H. Talbot and Benjamin N. Johnson for plaintiff in error.

Mr. A. A. Ranney, for defendant in error:

The acceptance and holding of a certificate of shares in an incorporation makes the holder liable to the responsibilities of a shareholder. Upton v. Tribilcock, 91 U. S. 45 (23: 208); Brigham v. Mead, 10 Allen, 245; Buffalo & N. 183 U. S.

Y. O. R. Co. v. Dudley, 14 N. Y. 836; Seymour v. Sturges, 26 N. Y. 134.

Informalities and irregularities in the proceedings, the general action being intra vires, are of no avail in collateral suits.

Scoville v. Thayer, 105 U. S. 143 (26: 968); Chubb v. Upton, 95 U. S. 665 (24: 523); Pullman v. Upton, 96 U. S. 328 (24: 818); Upton v. Tribilcock, 91 U. S. 45 (23: 208).

The determination by the comptroller of the facts essential for his action in giving the certificate is conclusive.

Casey v. Galli, 94 U. S. 673 (24: 168); Keyser v. Hitz, 2 Mackey, 478; Cadle v. Baker, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 650 (22: 448); Kennedy v. Gibson, 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 498 (19: 476).

Not only the original associates, but each new member, agree to the charter and the charter powers.

Mr. Justice Bradley delivered the opinion of the court:

This case is governed by that of Delano v. Butler, 118 U. S. 634 [30: 260]. The cases are not identical, it is true; but the principles established in that case require a similar decision in this. The substantial facts, up to a certain point, are the same; what took place afterwards cannot vary the result.

The Pacific National Bank of Boston failed and passed into the hands of a receiver on the 22d day of May, 1882, and the comptroller of the currency on the 27th of November, 1882, ordered an assessment of 100 per cent on the capital stock for the purpose of enforcing the individual liability of the stockholders, to pay the liabilities of the institution, under section 5151 of the Revised Statutes. Fifty shares of the stock, amounting to $5,000, stood in the name of Aspinwall individually, and 50 other shares in his name as trustee and guardian. This suit was brought against him by the receiver of the Bank to recover $5,000 as the holder of the individual stock. He denied that he was the holder of any such stock; and, for another plea, averred that it had been fraudulently and illegally issued, and was not binding against him as a holder thereof. A trial by jury was waived, and the cause was tried by the circuit court, which made a special finding of facts, and decided in favor of the plaintiff. The writ of error is to that decision.

After the finding of facts had been made, the defendant prayed the court to rule "Upon the facts found in this case the plaintiff is not entitled to judgment;" but the court refused this prayer, and found that the defendant was the owner of fifty shares of stock on May 20 and May 22, 1882, and entered judgment for the plaintiff for the sum of $6,550; to which refusal to rule, ruling and entry of judgment the defendant then excepted; and this is the only exception in the case. The question is whether this general finding is supported by the special facts found, and is in accordance with the law.

Amongst other things, the findings set forth the 5th and 6th of the original articles of association of the Bank. By the 5th article the capital stock is fixed at $250,000, but with the privilege of being increased, according to section 5142 of the Revised Statutes, to any sum not exceeding $1,000,000; and in case of increase, each stockholder was to have the privilege of subscribing his pro rata share. The sixth article specifies the powers and duties of the board of directors, amongst which was the power "to provide for an increase of the capital of the association, and to regulate the manner in which such increase shall be made," and the power "to make all by-laws that it may be proper and convenient for them to make under said Revised Statutes for the general regulation of the business of the association and the management and administration of its affairs."

The findings also set forth the first and eleventh by-laws of the Bank: the former of which fixed the regular annual meeting of the stockholders for the election of directors on the second Tuesday of January of each year, fourteen days' notice of which was to be given. The eleventh by-law was as follows, to wit:

"Sec. 11. Whenever an increase of stock shall be determined upon it shall be the duty of the board to notify all the stockholders of the same and cause a subscription to be opened for such increase, and each stockholder shall have the privilege of subscribing for such number of shares of new stock as he may be entitled to subscribe for in proportion to his existing stock in the Bank. If any stockholder should fail to subscribe for the amount of stock to which he may be entitled within a reasonable time, which shall be stated in the notice, the directors may determine what disposition shall be made of the privilege of subscribing for the new stock."

The findings further state:

"On the 18th day of September, 1881, the capital stock of the Bank was $500,000, divided into 5,000 shares of the par value of $100 each, of which shares the defendant, Aspinwall, as trustee under the will of Augustus Aspinwall and guardian under the will of Thomas Aspinwall for the benefit of his son, William H. Aspinwall, a minor, held fifty, which stood in his name as guardian and trustee on the books of the Bank, a certificate of said shares having been taken in the same way. . . .

"September 18, 1881, the directors of the Bank passed the following vote:

"Voted, That the capital of this Bank be increased to one million dollars, and that stockholders of this date have the right to take the new stock at par in an amount equal to that now held by them."

A printed notice of this resolution was thereupon sent to all the stockholders of the Bank; and at the bottom of this printed notice there was left a space and lines indicated for stockholders to write therein their subscriptions to the new stock to which they were entitled. Other than this there was no subscription paper opened. Some stockholders signified their assent on the notice in the place indicated at the bottom and sent it to the Bank. Others did not, but went or sent to the Bank and paid the money for the new stock to which they would be entitled in the proposed increase, taking receipts in the printed form prepared for that purpose.

The defendant received said notice, and thereupon went to the Bank and informed A. I. Benyon, its president, that he had not sufficient funds in his hands as guardian and trustee with which to take as such the fifty shares in the proposed increase, and that he should therefore subscribe for and take the same himself individually. The president of the Bank said that he could do so. The defendant afterwards returned to the Bank the said notice received by him with the following subscription written at the bottom thereof signed by him:

"I will take the fifty new shares to which I am entitled and will pay for them as above.
"William Aspinwall."

Subsequently, on October 1st, 1881, the defendant went to the Bank and paid the sum of five thousand dollars, receiving therefor a receipt, a copy of which is as follows:

"Pacific National Bank.

"$5,000. Boston, October 1st, 1881.

"Received of William Aspinwall five thousand dollars on account of subscription to new stock.

"J. M. Pettengill, Cashier."

The defendant was well acquainted with Mr. Benyon, seeing him almost daily, and he did some business with the Bank.

At the time the defendant paid this money and took this receipt he asked Mr. Benyon, the president of the Bank, if there was any of the new stock that had not been taken, stating that if that were the case he, the defendant, would like to take some more of the new stock. The president of the Bank replied that all the new stock had been taken, and that the defendant could not have any more than fifty shares already subscribed for and taken. Defendant desired his certificate, but was told that he could only have a receipt, as they were not in a position to issue certificates. The defendant believed this statement of the president of the Bank, that all the new stock had been taken, to be true, but he was not told that all the money had been paid for the new stock.

Payments for new stock in the proposed increase of $500,000 were made to the amount of $330,100 on and prior to October 1, 1881, subsequent to which time additional payments were made until November 15, 1881. The total amount thus paid in for new stock was $461,800.

Certificates for the new stock were issued on and after October 1, 1881, as called for, nearly all being delivered. The following is a copy of the certificate delivered to, and received by, the defendant, November 5, 1881, to wit:

"Fifty shares.

"Pacific National Bank of Boston, Mass.

"This certifies that William Aspinwall, of Brookline, is proprietor of fifty shares in the capital stock of the Pacific National Bank of Boston, Mass.; transferable only on the books of said Bank in person or by attorney on surrender of this certificate.

"A. I. Benyon, President.

"Boston, October 1, 1881.

"J. M. Pettengill, Cashier."

The Bank kept a book, called a stock ledger, in which it entered the names of the stockholders, their places of residence, and the number of shares held by each, in a debit and credit account.

An entry of fifty shares to the credit of William Aspinwall appears to have been made in this stock ledger, of which the following is a copy:

"William Aspinwall, of Brookline.
"October 1st, 1881. By fifty shares. $5,000."

At what time this certificate and entry were made does not appear except by the books. The stock ledger shows that the amount of capital stock as credited to the respective parties named therein in a credit and debit form as aforesaid was, on November 18, 1881, $961,300, and so remained to May 22, 1882, the entry as to said defendant being the same at the latter date as made originally as aforesaid.

On the 18th of November, 1881, said Bank became insolvent, suspended payment and closed its doors; and Daniel Needham, an examiner of national banks, was placed by the comptroller of the currency in charge of said Bank and all its funds, assets, records and books. The Bank remained under the exclusive charge and in the possession of said Needham, with its doors closed to business, until on or about March 18, 1882.

A committee of the directors went to Washington in December, 1881, and had an interview with the comptroller of the currency in relation to the affairs of the Bank. The fact that a vote had been passed in September previous to increase the capital to a million dollars, and that the full amount of that increase had not been subscribed for or paid in when the Bank failed, in November, was talked over in that conversation. It was discussed with the comptroller as to what should be done in view of the facts and as to what should be regarded as the capital of the Bank, and in pursuance of that interview the directors of the Bank, on December 18, 1881, passed the following vote, viz.:

"Voted, That whereas it was voted by this board on the thirteenth day of September last that the capital of this Bank be increased to one million dollars, and that stockholders of this date have the right to take the new stock at par in equal amount to that held by them; and whereas the stockholders were duly notified of said vote, and also that subscriptions to the new stock would be payable October 1; and whereas $461,300 of said new stock has been taken and paid in; and whereas $38,700 thereof has not been taken and paid in:

"Voted, That said $38,700 of said stock be, and is hereby, canceled and deducted from said capital stock of $1,000,000, and that the paid-up capital stock of this association amounts to $961,300.

"Voted, That the comptroller of the currency be notified that the capital of this association has been increased in the sum of $461,300, and that the whole amount of said increase has been paid in as part of the capital of this association, and that he be requested to issue his certificate of said increase to this association, according to law."

The following certificate was thereupon sent to the comptroller of the currency by the cashier, and sworn to by him, to wit:

"Pacific National Bank of Boston.

"December 13, 1881.

"To the Comptroller of the Currency, Washington, D. C.:

"It is hereby certified that the capital stock of 'The Pacific National Bank of Boston' has been increased, pursuant to the articles of association of said Bank, in the sum of four hundred and sixty-one thousand three hundred dollars, all of which has been paid in, and that the paid-up capital stock of said Bank now amounts to nine hundred sixty-one thousand three hundred dollars.

"[Seal.] J^r M. Pettengill, Cashier."

Upon the receipt by the comptroller of a copy of the vote of December 13th and the certificate of the cashier of December 13th the comptroller sent, December 16, 1881, to the directors of the Bank the following certificate:

"Treasury Department.

"Office of Comptroller of the Currency.

"Washington, December 16, 1881.

"Whereas satisfactory notice has been transmitted to the comptroller of the currency that the capital stock of 'The Pacific National Bank of Boston, Mass.,' has been increased in the sum of four hundred and sixty-one thousand three hundred dollars in accordance with the provisions of its articles of association, and that the whole amount of such increase has been paid in:

"Now, it is hereby certified that the capital stock of 'The Pacific National Bank of Boston, Mass.,' aforesaid has been increased as aforesaid in the sum of four hundred and sixty-one thousand three hundred dollars; that said increase of capital has been paid into said Bank as a part of the capital stock thereof, and that the said increase of capital is approved by the comptroller of the currency.

"In witness whereof I hereunto affix my official signature.

"[Seal.] John J. Knox, Comptroller."

At a meeting of the directors of the Bank, held on the 14th of December, 1881, resolutions were adopted and a copy sent to the comptroller, whereby, after setting forth, by way of recital, several particulars with regard to the condition of the Bank, going to show that it might resume business under certain conditions, it was, amongst other things, resolved as follows, to wit:

"Resolved, That in the opinion of the directors of said Bank the interests of both creditors and stockholders require its early reorganization.

"Resolved, That the comptroller of the currency be requested to authorize the stockholders of the association to levy an assessment of 100 per cent upon the par value of the capital stock now paid in, viz., $961,300, upon condition that said Weeks shall return to this Bank $350,000 additional checks, as agreed, before said assessment shall be made."

Other resolutions adopted at the same time set forth a certain scheme of reorganization, and it was finally resolved as follows, to wit:

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the comptroller of the currency and his approval asked of the scheme of reorganization herein set forth, and that he grant the directors until January 15, 1882, to perfect said scheme of organization."

There was no vote of the stockholders of said association passed relating to increase or reduction of its capital stock, unless the vote of January 10, 1882, hereafter mentioned, was such. On the 16th day of December, 1881, the comptroller of the currency sent to the Bank the following communication, namely:

"Washington, Dec. 16, 1881.

"The Pacific National Bank of Boston, Massachusetts:

"The entire capital stock of the Pacific National Bank of Boston, Massachusetts, amounting to nine hundred and sixty-one thousand three hundred (961,300) dollars, having been lost, notice is hereby given to said Bank, under the provisions of section 5205 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to pay the deficiency in its capital stock by an assessment of one hundred (100) per cent, upon its shareholders pro rata for the amount of capital stock held by each, and that if such deficiency shall not be paid and said Bank shall refuse to go into liquidation, as provided by law, for three months after this notice shall have been received by it, a receiver may be appointed to close up the business of the association according to the provisions of section 5224 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

"In testimony whereof I have hereto subscribed my name and caused my seal of office to be affixed to these presents, at the Treasury Department, in the City of Washington and District of Columbia, this sixteenth day of December, A. D. 1881.

"[Seal.]

John Jay Knox.

"Comptroller of the Currency."

It does not appear that any communication was made to the defendant by the Bank with reference to said votes of the directors of December 13 and 14, or the certificates of the comptroller of December 16, or with reference to any change in the proposed increase in the capital of the Bank to one million dollars. The defendant never saw nor had communicated to him the books of the Bank or their contents. He was in the Bank almost daily and knew of the suspension on November 18, 1881. He does not remember or believe that he had knowledge of the proposed change, or the change made in the proposed increase of the stock of $500,000, and of the certificate of the comptroller of December 16, 1881, until informed of the facts during the stockholders' meeting of January 10, 1882, or possibly on that day just before the meeting was organized and after the stockholders were assembled for the same, when he learned them.

On the 10th of January, 1882, the annual meeting of the stockholders of the Bank was held pursuant to call. At this meeting the examiner made a report of the condition of the Bank, a board of directors was chosen, and, after a statement by the counsel of the Bank of the facts relating to the increase of its capital stock, and as to how much had in fact been paid in under the vote to increase to one million dollars, and of the legal result thereof, and of the vote of December 13, and the certificates of the comptroller of the currency, dated December 16, and after a full discussion of the matter, the following vote was adopted by stock vote, 5,494 shares in favor and 55 shares against:

"Voted, In accordance with the notice of the comptroller of the currency, dated December 16, 1881, there be, and hereby is, laid an assessment of one hundred per cent upon the shareholders of the Pacific National Bank of Boston, Mass., pro rata for the amount of capital stock of said Bank held by each shareholder.

"Voted, That the board of directors notify each shareholder of said assessment and collect the same forthwith."

Notice of this vote was sent to the stockholders.

The defendant attended said meeting of the shareholders, acting as the holder of and representing only the fifty shares of original stock held by him as trustee and guardian, and as such voted in the negative on the question of the assessment, expressly stating on his ballot that he voted as the holder of fifty shares of old stock held by him as trustee and guardian. He did not vote or in any way act at said meeting as the holder of any new stock, and notified the directors of the Bank that he did not consider himself a holder of any shares in the alleged increase of $461,300.

April 23, 1882, the defendant paid the assessment voted January 10, 1882, on the fifty shares of original stock held by him as guardian and trustee, using his own personal funds to make such payment, but did not pay any assessment on any new stock.

On March 18, 1882, by permission of the comptroller of the currency, on representations to the effect that the Bank was then solvent, the directors took possession of the assets of the Bank, opened its doors to business, and continued to do a general banking business, loaning money, receiving and paying deposits, and paying debts and expenses, until the 20th day of May, 1882, but made no losses on new loans during that period.

On or about April 21, 1882, notice was sent to all those who had not paid the assessment voted January 10th, and amongst others to the defendant, that unless such assessment should be paid by the 28th of April, 1882, their stock would be advertised for sale, and would be sold at auction according to law on the 31st of May, 1882.

On the 22d of May, 1882, the defendant delivered to the cashier of the Bank the certificate for new stock which he had received, and a written demand for the repayment of the $5,000 which he had paid thereon; and on the 30th of May he brought suit against the Bank therefor, which is still pending.

On the 20th of May, 1882, the directors voted to go into liquidation, and the business of the Bank was closed, and a receiver was appointed by the comptroller of the currency. It was found that the liabilities of the Bank, exclusive of capital stock, were $2,500,000, and its assets worth about $500,000.

The court further found that the board of directors and the comptroller of the currency acted in good faith and without fraud in the premises.

It will be seen from the foregoing statement that all the material facts which existed in the case of Delano v. Butler, qua supra, existed in the present case, except that Delano actually paid the assessment made on his new stock as well as that made on his original stock; whereas, in the present case, Aspinwall refused to pay said assessment, repudiated the new stock, and has brought suit to recover the amount of his subscription paid therefor.

We do not think that this difference makes any difference in the liability. The new stock was created in a regular manner by the board of directors, who had authority for that purpose; it was subscribed and actually paid in by the stockholders; it was certified to the comptroller of the currency, and approved by him; and it was reported to the meeting of stockholders, and approved by them, as their almost unanimous vote for an assessment shows.

The most forcible objection to the validity of the increased capital of $461,300 is that it did not equal the amount first voted for by the directors, which was $500,000. But as reduced, it had the sanction of the directors, the approval of the comptroller of the currency, and the assent of the stockholders at their meeting on the 10th of January, 1882. The deficiency under $500,000 arose from the fact that some of the stockholders did not avail themselves of their right to subscribe. The 11th section of the by-laws of the Bank has this express provision, that "if any stockholder should fail to subscribe for the amount of stock to which he may be entitled within a reasonable time, which shall be stated in the notice, the directors may determine what disposition shall be made of the privilege of subscribing for the new stock." This gave the directors full power over the deficiency of the subscriptions, and was in itself authority, if no other existed, to validate the action of the directors and the comptroller in disregarding such deficiency, and equating the new stock to the subscriptions actually made and paid in. There was no express condition that the individual subscriptions should be void if the whole $500,000 was not subscribed; and, in our judgment, there was no implied condition in law to that effect. Each subscriber, by paying the amount of his subscription, thereby indicated that it was not made on any such condition. It is not like the case of creditors signing a composition deed to take a certain proportion of their claims in discharge of their debtor. The fixed amount of capital stock in business corporations often remains unfilled, both as to the number of shares subscribed, and as to payment of installments; and the unsubscribed stock is issued from time to time as the exigencies of the company may require. The fact that some of the stock remains unsubscribed is not sufficient ground for a particular stockholder to withdraw his capital. There may be cases in which equity would interfere to protect subscribers to stock where a large and material deficiency in the amount of capital contemplated has occurred. But such cases would stand on their own circumstances. It could hardly be contended that the present case, in which more than ninety-two per cent of the contemplated increase of capital was actually subscribed and paid in, would belong to that category. In Minor v. Mechanics Bank of Alexandria, 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 46 [7: 47], only $820,000 out of $500,000 of capital authorized by the charter was subscribed in good faith; but the court did not regard this deficiency in the subscriptions as at all affecting the status of the corporation, or the validity of its operations.

Some reliance is placed on the words of the Act of Congress which authorizes an increase of capital within the maximum prescribed in the articles of association. They are found in section 5142 of the Revised Statutes, which declares that any banking association may, by its articles, provide for an increase of its capital from time to time, but adds, "No increase of capital shall be valid until the whole amount of such increase is paid in, and notice thereof has been transmitted to the comptroller of the currency, and his certificate obtained specifying the amount," etc. This clause would have been violated by an issue of $500,000 of new stock, when only $461,300 was paid in; but not by an issue of the exact amount that was paid in. The clause in question was intended to secure the actual payment of the stock subscribed, and so to prevent what is called watering of stock. In the present case the Statute was strictly and honestly complied with.

The argument of the defendant asks too much. It would apply to the original capital of a company as well as to an increase of capital. And will it do to say, after a company has been organized and gone into business, and dealt with the public, that its stockholders may withdraw their capital and be exempt from statutory liability to creditors, if they can show that the capital stock of the company was not all subscribed?

In the Delano Case the objection under consideration was discussed by Mr. Justice Matthews, speaking for the court, in the manner following. He there said: "In the present case the association did, in fact, finally assent to an increase of the capital stock, limited to $461,300; that amount was paid in as capital and the comptroller of the currency, by his certificate, approved of the increase, and certified to its payment; so that there seems little room to question the validity of the proceedings resulting in such increase. All the requisites of the Statute were complied with. The circumstance that the original proposal was for an increase of $500,000, subsequently reduced to the amount actually paid in, does not seem to affect the question, for the amount of the increase within the maximum was always subject to the discretionary power of the association itself, exerted in accordance with its articles of association, and to the approval and confirmation of the comptroller of the currency." (118 U. S. 649 [30:264]). In these remarks we entirely concur, and do not see why they do not furnish a complete answer to the objection arising from the change of amount. There was no agreement or condition that the amount should not be changed. The making of the change, therefore, could not have the effect of enabling the defendant to repudiate his subscription and his acceptance of the stock, unless he could show that the change was fraudulently made, or was made to such an inequitable extent as to defeat the purpose and object of the increase.

If these views are correct, it makes no manner of difference what the defendant afterwards did in the way of objection or protest, either at the stockholders' meeting or elsewhere. The stock was lawfully created, the defendant subscribed for the shares in question and paid for them, and received his certificate; and nothing was afterwards done by the directors, the comptroller of the currency, or the stockholders in meeting assembled, which they had not a perfect right to do. The defendant became a stockholder; he held the shares in question when the Bank finally went into liquidation, and, of course, became liable under section 5151 of the Revised Statutes to pay an amount equal to the stock by him so held.

The judgment is affirmed.

THE LOUISVILLE, NEW ORLEANS AND TEXAS RAILWAY COMPANY,

Plff. in Err.,

v.

STATE OF MISSISSIPPI.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 587-595.)

Mississippi Statute requiring railroads to provide separate accommodations for white and colored races, constitutional—distinction between state and interstate commerce.

1. The Mississippi Statute of March 2, 1868, as settled by the Supreme Court of that State, applies solely to commerce within the State; and this court must accept as conclusive such construction of the Statute of the State by its highest court.
2. The first section of said Statute, which requires railroads to provide separate accommodations for the white and colored races, is within the power of the State, and is not a regulation of interstate commerce and does not violate the commerce clause of the Constitution.
3. There is a commerce wholly within the State, which is not subject to the constitutional provision, and a distinction between commerce among States and between the citizens of a single State, conducted within its limits.

Submitted Jan. 10, 1890. Decided March 3, 1890.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Mississippi to review a judgment sustaining a conviction for a violation of sec. 1 of the Mississippi Statute of March 2, 1868, requiring railroads to provide separate accommodations for the white and colored races.

Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. P. Harris and Yerger & Percy, for plaintiff in error:

The decision of the Mississippi court, that the Act of March 2, 1868, is valid, is in direct conflict with the judgment of this court.

Hall v. DeCuir, 95 U. S. 485 (24:547); Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 557 (30:244).

The carrier, its road, the process of commerce it conducts and the instruments employed, fall, with the business to which they are inseparably attached, under the commerce clause of the Constitution.

Sherlock v. Alling, 93 U. S. 99, 104 (23: 819, 821); Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 473 (31:510).

Imposing conditions upon the carrier are impediments to its free admission to the territory of the State as a carrier of interstate commerce.

Henderson v. Wickham, 92 U. S. 259 (23:543); Cooper Mfg. Co. v. Ferguson, 118 U. S. 727 (28:1137); People v. Compagnie Générale, 107 U. S. 59 (27:383).

There is a distinction between the vessel or vehicle employed, and fixtures or wharves or conveniences and agencies strictly territorial and local.

Cooley v. Wardens of Phila. 58 U. S. 12 How. 299 (13:966); Gilman v. Philadelphia, 70 U. S. 3 Wall. 713 (18:96); Mobile County v. Kimbal, 102 U. S. 691 (26:288); Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 196 (29: 158).

Mr. T. M. Miller for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court:

The question presented is as to the validity of an Act passed by the Legislature of the State of Mississippi on the 2d of March, 1868. That Act is as follows:

"Sec. 1. Be it enacted, That all railroads carrying passengers in this State (other than street railroads) shall provide equal, but separate, accommodation for the white and colored races, by providing two or more passenger cars for each passenger train, or by dividing the passenger cars by a partition so as to secure separate accommodations.

"Sec. 2. That the conductors of such passenger trains shall have power, and are hereby required, to assign each passenger to the car or the compartment of a car (when it is divided by a partition) used for the race to which said passenger belongs; and that should any passenger refuse to occupy the car to which he or she is assigned by such conductor, said conductor shall have power to refuse to carry such passenger on his train, and neither he nor the railroad company shall be liable for any damages in any event in this State.

"Sec. 3. That all railroad companies that shall refuse or neglect within sixty days after the approval of this Act to comply with the requirements of section one of this Act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction in a court of competent jurisdiction, be fined not more than five hundred dollars; and any conductor that shall neglect to, or refuse to, carry out the provisions of this Act shall, upon conviction, be fined not less than twenty-five nor more than fifty dollars for each offense.

"Sec. 4. That all Acts and parts of Acts in conflict with this Act be, and the same are hereby, repealed, and this Act to take effect and be in force from and after its passage." Acts of 1868, p. 48.

The plaintiff in error was indicted for a violation of that Statute. A conviction in the trial court was sustained in the supreme court, and from its judgment this case is here on error. The question is whether the Act is a regulation of interstate commerce and therefore beyond the power of the State; and the cases of Hall v. DeQuir, 95 U. S. 485 [24:547], and Wabash R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 557 [30:244], are specially relied on by plaintiff in error.

It will be observed that this indictment was against the Company for the violation of section one, in not providing separate accommodations for the two races; and not against a conductor for a violation of section two, in failing to assign each passenger to his separate compartment. It will also be observed that this is not a civil action brought by an individual to recover damages for being compelled to occupy one particular compartment, or prevented from riding on the train; and hence there is no question of personal insult or alleged violation of personal rights. The question is limited to the power of the State to compel railroad companies to provide within the State separate accommodations for the two races. Whether such accommodation is to be a matter of choice or compulsion does not enter into this case. The case of Hall v. DeQuir, supra, was a civil action to recover damages from the owner of a steamboat for refusing to the plaintiff, a person of color, accommodations in the cabin specially set apart for white persons; and the validity of a Statute of the State of Louisiana, prohibiting discrimination on account of color, and giving a right of action to the party injured for the violation thereof, was a question for consideration. The steamboat was engaged in interstate commerce, but the plaintiff only sought transportation from one point to another in the State. This court held that Statute, so far as applicable to the facts in that case, to be invalid. That decision is invoked here; but there is this marked difference. The Supreme Court of the State of Louisiana held that the Act applied to interstate carriers, and required them, when they came within the limits of the State, to receive colored passengers into the cabin set apart for white persons. This court, accepting that construction as conclusive, held that the Act was a regulation of interstate commerce, and therefore beyond the power of the State. The chief justice, speaking for the court, said: "For the purposes of this case we must treat the Act of Louisiana of February 23, 1869, as requiring those engaged in interstate commerce to give all persons traveling in that State, upon the public conveyances employed in such business, equal rights and privileges in all parts of the conveyance, without distinction or discrimination on account of race or color. Such was the construction given to that Act in the courts below, and it is conclusive upon us as the construction of a state law by the state courts. It is with this provision of the Statute alone that we have to deal. We have nothing whatever to do with it as a regulation of internal commerce, or as affecting anything else than commerce among the States." And again: "But we think that it may safely be said that state legislation which seeks to impose a direct burden upon interstate commerce, or to interfere directly with its freedom, does encroach upon the exclusive power of Congress. The Statute now under consideration, in our opinion, occupies that position. It does not act upon the business through the local instruments to be employed after coming within the State, but directly upon the business as it comes into the State from without or goes out from within. While it purports only to control the carrier when engaged within the State, it must necessarily influence his conduct to some extent in the management of his business throughout his entire voyage. His disposition of passengers taken up and put down within the State, or taken up within to be carried without, cannot but affect in a greater or less degree those taken up without and brought within, and sometimes those taken up and put down without. A passenger in the cabin set apart for the use of whites without the State must, when the boat comes within, share the accommodations of that cabin with such colored persons as may come on board afterwards, if the law is enforced."

So the decision was by its terms carefully limited to those cases in which the law practically interfered with interstate commerce. Obviously whether interstate passengers of one race should, in any portion of their journey, be compelled to share their cabin accommodations with colored passengers, was a question of interstate commerce, and to be determined by Congress alone. In this case, the Supreme Court of Mississippi held that the Statute applied solely to commerce within the State; and that construction, being the construction of the Statute of the State by its highest court, must be accepted as conclusive here. If it be a matter respecting wholly commerce within a State, and not interfering with commerce between the States, then obviously there is no violation of the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution. Counsel for plaintiff in error strenuously insists that it does affect and regulate interstate commerce, but this contention cannot be sustained.

So far as the first section is concerned (and it is with that alone we have to do), its provisions are fully complied with when to trains within the State is attached a separate car for colored passengers. This may cause an extra expense to the railroad company; but not more so than state statutes requiring certain accommodations at depots, compelling trains to stop at crossings of other railroads, and a multitude of other matters confessedly within the power of the State.

No question arises under this section, as to the power of the State to separate in different compartments interstate passengers, or to affect in any manner, the privileges and rights of such passengers. All that we can consider is, whether the State has the power to require that railroad trains within her limits shall have separate accommodations for the two races. That affecting only commerce within the State is no invasion of the powers given to Congress by the commerce clause.

In the case of Wabash Railway Co. v. Illinois, supra, Mr. Justice Miller, speaking for the court, said: "If the Illinois Statute could be construed to apply exclusively to contracts for a carriage which begins and ends within the State, disconnected from a continuous transportation through or into other States, there does not seem to be any difficulty in holding it to be valid. For instance, a contract might be made to carry goods for a certain price from Cairo to Chicago, or from Chicago to Alton. The charges for these might be within the competency of the Illinois Legislature to regulate. The reason for this is that both the charge and the actual transportation in such cases are exclusively confined to the limits of the territory of the State, and is not commerce among the States, or interstate commerce, but is exclusively commerce within the State. So far, therefore, as this class of transportation, as an element of commerce, is affected by the Statute under consideration, it is not subject to the constitutional provision concerning commerce among the States. It has often been held in this court, and there can be no doubt about it, that there is a commerce wholly within the State, which is not subject to the constitutional provision, and the distinction between commerce among the States and the other class of commerce between the citizens of a single State, and conducted within its limits exclusively, is one which has been fully recognized in this court, although it may not be always easy, where the lines of these classes approach each other, to distinguish between the one and the other. The Daniel Ball, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 557 [19: 999]; Hall v. DeCuir, 95 U. S. 485 [24: 547]; W. U. Tel. Co. v. Texas, 105 U. S. 460 [28: 1067]."

The Statute in this case, as settled by the Supreme Court of the State of Mississippi, affects only such commerce within the State, and comes therefore within the principles thus laid down. It comes also within the opinion of this court in the case of Stone v. Farmers Loan and Trust Co. 116 U. S. 307 [29: 636].

We see no error in the ruling of the Supreme Court of the State of Mississippi, and its judgment is therefore affirmed.

Mr. Justice Harlan, dissenting:

The defendant, the Louisville, New Orleans and Texas Railroad Company, owns and operates a continuous line of railroad from Memphis to New Orleans. If one of its passenger trains—starting, for instance, from Memphis to go to New Orleans—enters the territory of Mississippi, without having cars attached to it for the separate accommodation of the white and black races, the Company and the conductor of such train are liable to be fined as prescribed in the Statute, the validity of which is here in question. In other words, it is made an offense against the State of Mississippi if a railroad company engaged in interstate commerce shall presume to send one of its trains into or through that State without such arrangement of its cars as will secure separate accommodations for both races.

In Hall v. DeCuir, 95 U. S. 485 [24: 547], this court declared unconstitutional and void, as a regulation of interstate commerce, an Act of the Louisiana Legislature which required those engaged in interstate commerce to give all persons traveling in that State, upon the public conveyances employed in such business, equal rights and privileges in all parts of the conveyance, without distinction or discrimination on account of race or color. The court, speaking by Chief Justice Waite, said: "We think it may safely be said that state legislation which seeks to impose a direct burden upon interstate commerce, or to interfere directly with its freedom, does encroach upon the exclusive power of Congress. The Statute now under consideration, in our opinion, occupies that position. It does not act upon the business through the local instruments to be employed after coming within the State, but directly upon the business as it comes into the State from without, or goes out from within. While it purports only to control the carrier when engaged within the State, it must necessarily influence his conduct to some extent in the management of his business throughout his entire voyage. This disposition of passengers taken up and put down within the State, or taken up within to be carried without, cannot but affect in greater or less degree those taken up without and brought within, and sometimes those taken up and put down without. A passenger in the cabin set apart for the use of whites without the State must, when the boat comes within, share the accommodations of that cabin with such colored persons as may come on board afterwards, if the law is enforced. It was to meet just such a case that the commercial clause in the Constitution was adopted. The River Mississippi passes through or along the borders of ten different States, and its tributaries reach many more. The commerce upon these waters is immense, and its regulation clearly a matter of national concern. If each State was at liberty to regulate the conduct of carriers while within its jurisdiction, the confusion likely to follow could not but be productive of great inconvenience and unnecessary hardship. Each State could provide for its own passengers and regulate the transportation of its own freight regardless of the interests of others. Nay, more, it could prescribe rules by which the carrier must be governed within the State in respect to passengers and property brought from without. On one side of the river or its tributaries he might be required to observe one set of rules, and on the other another. Commerce cannot flourish in the midst of such embarrassments. No carrier of passengers can conduct his business with satisfaction to himself, or comfort to those employing him, if on one side of a state line his passengers, both white and colored, must be permitted to occupy the same cabin, and on the other be kept separate. Uniformity in the regulations by which he is to be governed from one end to the other of his route is a necessity in his business, and to secure it Congress, which is untrammelled by state lines, has been invested with the exclusive legislative power of determining what such regulations shall be."

It seems to me that those observations are entirely pertinent to the case before us. In its application to passengers on vessels engaged in interstate commerce, the Louisiana enactment forbade the separation of the white and black races while such vessels were within the limits of that State. The Mississippi Statute, in its application to passengers on railroad trains employed in interstate commerce, requires such separation of races, while those trains are within that State. I am unable to perceive how the former is a regulation of interstate commerce and the other is not. It is difficult to understand how a state enactment, requiring the separation of the white and black races on interstate carriers of passengers, is a regulation of commerce among the States, while a similar enactment forbidding such separation is not a regulation of that character.

Without considering other grounds upon which, in my judgment, the Statute in question might properly be held to be repugnant to the Constitution of the United States, I dissent from the opinion and judgment in this case upon the ground that the Statute of Mississippi is, within the decision in Hall v. DeCuir, a regulation of commerce among the States, and is therefore void.

I am authorized by Mr. Justice Bradley to say that, in his opinion, the Statute of Mississippi is void as a regulation of interstate commerce.

ALBERT GRÄFF ET AL.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 697-709.)

Refusal to grant new trial not reviewable—assignment of patent—patented articles cannot be bought in foreign country, and sold here—master's report—exceptions to—damages—reduction of price.

1. The refusal of the circuit court to grant a rehearing is not open to consideration in this court.
2. An assignment of a patent absolute in form conveys the legal title, which is not defeated by a subsequent conditional contract that, if the payments are not made, the title is to return to the assignor,—particularly where the payments were made in full.
3. A dealer residing in the United States cannot purchase in another country articles patented there, from a person authorized to sell them, and import them to and sell them in the United States, without the license of the owners of the United States patent.
4. The report of a master is merely advisory to the court, which it may accept and act upon in whole or in part, according to its own judgment as to the weight of the evidence.
5. In dealing with exceptions to such reports the conclusions of the master have every reasonable presumption in their favor, and are not to be set aside or modified unless there clearly appears to have been error or mistake.
6. Where the patentee granted no licenses, and had no established license fee, but supplied the demand himself, and was able to do so, an enforced reduction of price is a proper item of damages, if proven by satisfactory evidence.
7. When a plaintiff seeks to recover because he has been compelled to lower his prices to compete with an infringing defendant, he must show satisfactorily that his reduction in prices was due solely to the acts of the defendant, or to what extent it was due to such acts.

APPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of California in favor of complainant in an action to recover damages for infringement of letters-patent for an improvement in lamp burners. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. J. Scrivner, for appellants:

This case should be dismissed for want of jurisdiction, on the ground that the title to the patents, sufficient to maintain a suit for infringement, was not vested in the complainants.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

Albert Gräff and J. F. Donnell filed their bill in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of California against Emile Boesch and Martin Bauer, to recover for infringement of letters-patent No. 289,571, for an improvement in lamp burners, granted on December 4, 1883, to Carl Schwintzer and Wilhelm Gräff of Berlin, Germany, assignors of one half to J. F. Donnell & Co., of New York, all rights being averred to be now vested in the complainants. Claim 1 alleged to have been infringed reads as follows:

"In a lamp burner of the class described, the combination, with the guide tubes, of a ring-shaped cap provided with openings for the wicks, said cap being applied to the upper ends of the guide tubes, so as to close the intermediate spaces between the same, substantially as set forth."

The patent was granted December 4, 1883, but prior to that, November 14, 1879, January 13, 1880, and March 26, 1880, letters-patent had been granted to Carl Schwintzer and Wilhelm Gräff by the government of Germany for the same invention. After a hearing on the merits, an interlocutory decree was entered, finding an infringement, and referring the case to a master for an accounting. The opinion will be found reported in 33 Fed. Rep. 279. A petition for a rehearing was filed and overruled. The case then went to the master, who reported that the infringement was willful, wanton and persistent; that the appellees had sustained damages to the extent of $2,970.50; and that they waived all claims to the profits realized by the infringement. Exceptions were filed to this report and overruled, and a final decree entered in favor of Gräff and Donnell for $2,970.50, with interest, and costs, from which decree this appeal has been prosecuted.

Appellants urge three grounds for reversal:

First. That a title to the patent sufficient to maintain a suit for infringement was not at the date of filing the bill vested in the complainant.

Second. That Boesch and Bauer could not be held for infringement, because they purchased the burners in Germany from a person having the right to sell them there, though not a licensee under the German patents.

Third. That the damages awarded were excessive.

These propositions are presented by some of the errors assigned, and are the only errors alleged which require attention, that which questions the infringement not being argued by counsel, and that which goes upon the refusal of the circuit court to grant a rehearing not being open to consideration here. Buffington v. Harvey, 95 U. S. 99, 100 [24: 381]; Steines v. Franklin County, 81 U. S. 14 Wall. 15, 22 [20: 846, 848]; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Heck, 102 U. S. 120 [26: 58]; Kennon v. Gilmer, 131 U. S. 22, 24 [33: 110, 111].

The assignment by Schwintzer to Albert Gräff was dated the 22d day of April, 1885, was absolute in form and transferred title to six twenty-fourths of the patent for the expressed consideration of "the sum of one hundred dollars and for other valuable considerations;" but a contract between Schwintzer and Albert Gräff was produced by the latter upon his examination by the respondents, which read as follows:

"S. 1. Mr. Albert Gräff binds himself to pay to Mr. Carl Schwintzer, instead of the, in the patent letter mentioned, one hundred dollars for the first year, the sum of two hundred and fifty marks, payable on the 1st February, 1886, and each following year on the same date the sum five hundred marks (not less) till the amount of four thousand marks are paid in all.

"S. 2. Should Mr. Albert Gräff, of San Francisco, not be able to sell more than one thousand burners, called Diamond or Mitrail-leuse burners, No. 10,621, manufactured by Mess. Schwintzer & Gräff, of Berlin, he reserves to himself to make up a new agreement with Mr. Carl Schwintzer.

"S. 3. Should not Mr. Albert Gräff, San Francisco, against all expectations, stick to the agreements mentioned in S. 1 & 2, all titles of the patent letter ceded to him by Carl Schwintzer shall him return.

"S. 4. Mr. Carl Schwintzer, partner of the firm Schwintzer & Gräff, engages to deliver to Mr. Albert Gräff the said burners at the same price as before, if the market price of the metal does not exceed—make 150 % kos., and promise likewise to effect any order promptly, if in his power."

Albert Gräff testified in respect to the words, "instead of the, in the patent letter mentioned, one hundred dollars for the first year," etc., that they meant that, instead of the one hundred dollars mentioned in the assignment, he was to pay two hundred and fifty marks the first year, and that the contract was made one day later than the assignment. Counsel contends that the two documents must be construed together, and amount simply to an executory contract to assign when Gräff shall have paid the sum of 4,000 marks; that, therefore, Gräff could at most only be regarded as a licensee of the interest under the patent, until such time as his contract should be executed according to its terms; and that the legal right as to six twenty-fourths of the patent remained in Schwintzer, who was therefore a necessary party. It is evident that the agreement was not drawn by parties well versed in English, but their intention is sufficiently apparent. The assignment being absolute in form, conveyed the legal title, and on the next day the parties signed this contract, relating to the consideration, probably to enable Albert Gräff to pay the 4,000 marks out of the sales of the burners; at all events, it provides that if Gräff failed to carry out his covenants, then the title was to return to Schwintzer, which provision was in the nature of a security to him that he should be paid. The condition that if Mr. Albert Gräff did not, "against all expectations, stick to the agreements mentioned in S. 1 & 2, all titles of the patent letter ceded to him by Carl Schwintzer shall him return," is a condition subsequent. The title had already vested, but was liable to be defeated in futuro on failure of the condition. There has been no such failure, but on the contrary Albert Gräff has paid the 4,000 marks in full. We shall therefore not reverse the decree on the ground first referred to.

Letters-patent had been granted to the original patentees for the invention by the government of Germany in 1879 and 1880. A portion of the burners in question were purchased in Germany from one Hecht, who had the right to make and sell them there. By section 5 of the Imperial Patent Law of Germany, of May 25, 1877, it was provided that "the patent does not affect persons who, at the time of the patentee's application, have already commenced to make use of the invention in the country, or made the preparations requisite for such use" (12 Pat. Off. Gaz. 183.) Hecht had made preparations to manufacture the burners prior to the application for the German patent. The official report of a prosecution against Hecht in the first criminal division of the Royal District Court, No 1, at Berlin, in its session of March 1, 1882, for an infringement of the Patent Law, was put in evidence, wherefrom it appeared that he was found not guilty, and judgment for costs given in his favor upon the ground "that the defendant has already prior to November 14, 1879—that is to say, at the time of the application by the patentees for and within the State—made use of the invention in question, especially, however, had made the necessary preparations for its use. § 5, eodem. Thus Schwintzer & Gräff's patent is of no effect against him, and he had to be acquitted accordingly."

It appears that appellants received two invoices from Germany, the burners in one of which were not purchased from Hecht, but, in the view which we take of the case, that circumstance becomes immaterial. The exact question presented is whether a dealer residing in the United States can purchase in another country articles patented there, from a person authorized to sell them, and import them to and sell them in the United States, without the license or consent of the owners of the United States patent.

In Wilson v. Rousseau, 45 U. S. 4 How. 646 [11: 1141], it was decided that a party who had purchased and was using the Woodworth planing machine during the original term for which the patent was granted, had a right to continue the use during an extension granted under the Act of Congress of 1836; and Mr. Chief Justice Taney, in Bloomer v. McQuewan, 55 U. S. 14 How. 539, 549 [14:582, 585], says, in reference to it, that "the distinction is there taken between the grant of the right to make and vend the machine and the grant of the right to use it." And he continues: "The distinction is a plain one. The franchise which the patent grants consists altogether in the right to exclude everyone from making, using or vending the thing patented without the permission of the patentee. This is all he obtains by the patent. And when he sells the exclusive privilege of making or vending it for use in a particular place, the purchaser buys a portion of the franchise which the patent confers. He obtains a share in the monopoly, and that monopoly is derived from, and exercised under, the protection of the United States. And the interest he acquires necessarily terminates at the time limited for its continuance by the law which created it. . . . But the purchaser of the implement or machine for the purpose of using it in the ordinary pursuits of life stands on different ground. In using it he exercises no rights created by the Act of Congress, nor does he derive title to it by virtue of the franchise or exclusive privilege granted to the patentee. The inventor might lawfully sell it to him, whether he had a patent or not, if no other patentee stood in his way. And when the machine passes to the hands of the purchaser it is no longer within the limits of the monopoly. It passes outside of it, and is no longer under the protection of the Act of Congress."

In Adams v. Burke, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 453 [21: 700], it was held that "where a patentee has assigned his right to manufacture, sell and use within a limited district an instrument, machine or other manufactured product, a purchaser of such instrument or machine, when rightfully bought within the prescribed limits, acquires by such purchase the right to use it anywhere, without reference to other assignments of territorial rights by the same patentee;" and that "the right to the use of such machines or instruments stands on a different ground from the right to make and sell them, and inheres in the nature of a contract of purchase, which carries no implied limitation to the right of use within a given locality." Mr. Justice Bradley, with whom concurred Mr. Justice Swayne and Mr. Justice Strong, dissented, holding that the assignee's interest "was limited in locality, both as to manufacture and use." The right which Hecht had to make and sell the burners in Germany was allowed him under the laws of that country, and purchasers from him could not be thereby authorized to sell the articles in the United States in defiance of the rights of patentees under a United States patent. A prior foreign patent operates under our law to limit the duration of the subsequent patent here, but that is all. The sale of articles in the United States under a United States patent cannot be controlled by foreign laws. This disposes of the second error relied on.

This brings us to the consideration of the damages reported by the master, which report was confirmed by the court; and we are met on the threshold by the objection that the exceptions taken in the circuit court were not sufficiently specific to entitle appellants to raise the questions here upon which they submit argument.

These exceptions are as follows:

"First exception. For that the said master has in and by his said report certified on page six thereof that 'the cap was the essential feature' of the Gräff burner. The respondent adopted Gräff's arrangement, and then reduced the price of the burner, forcing Gräff to do the same in order to hold his trade. The evidence shows that the reduction in prices by Gräff was solely due to the respondents' infringement. So far as the evidence shows, the only competitor with Gräff in the use of his cap arrangement during the period covered by the accounting, was the respondent; whereas the said master ought to have certified that respondent came innocently into possession of the burners by purchase in the ordinary course of business from legitimate manufacturers thereof in Germany, and that immediately upon being notified that they were claimed to be an infringement he ceased to sell the same. The evidence shows that at about the time Gräff made the alleged reduction in the price of his burners there were thrown upon the market lamp-burners of other kinds of equal or greater power, which came directly in competition with the Gräff burner, and that the reduction in price was the result of such competition; that the sale of 14 infringing burners by respondent in the course of three years' trade could not have been a sufficient competition to plaintiff's business to cause him to make a reduction of price, where the testimony shows that during the period from March 1st, 1896, when complainant reduced the price of burners, until October 31st, 1897, he sold about 6,000 of said burners.

"Second exception. For that the said master hath certified 'that the amount of damages which the complainant has suffered and sustained from and by reason of said infringement is two thousand nine hundred and seventy dollars and fifty cents;' whereas he should have reported nominal damages.

"In all which particulars the report of the said master is, as the said respondent is advised, erroneous, and the said respondent appeals therefrom to the judgment of this honorable court."

It is conceded that these exceptions raise two points, namely, that the infringement was not willful, and that the reduction of prices was not caused solely by it. And this, as it seems to us, is quite sufficient to permit the real question involved to be passed upon. The master awarded $2,970.50 as damages for the reduction in price, which, he holds, was caused by the respondents' infringement. He says:

"After the reduction in his prices, complainant sold, at wholesale, one thousand three hundred and twelve ten-wick burners, at a price twenty-five cents less on each than his original price; four hundred and fifty twelve-wick burners, at fifty cents less; five hundred and ninety-two sixteen-wick burners, at seventy-five cents less; and seven hundred and sixteen twenty-wick burners at seventy-five cents less, a total difference between the original and the reduced prices of one thousand five hundred and thirty-five dollars and fifty cents.

"In addition, he sold at retail, on an average, five burners on each of the five hundred and seventy-four business days between the time when his prices were first reduced and October 31st, 1897; the number of burners thus sold being two thousand eight hundred and seventy, which were sold at a minimum reduction of fifty cents each under original prices—a total difference between the original and the new prices of fourteen hundred and thirty-five dollars; which sum, added to the said sum of one thousand five hundred and thirty-five dollars and fifty cents, gives an aggregate amount of two thousand nine hundred and seventy dollars and fifty cents."

The report of a master is merely advisory to the court, which it may accept and act upon in whole or in part, according to its own judgment as to the weight of the evidence. Kimberly v. Arms, 129 U. S. 512, 528 [32: 764, 767]. Yet, in dealing with exceptions to such reports, "the conclusions of the master, depending upon the weighing of conflicting testimony, have every reasonable presumption in their favor, and are not to be set aside or modified unless there clearly appears to have been error or mistake on his part." Tilghman v. Proctor, 125 U. S. 136, 149 [31: 664, 668]. We think there was error here within that rule.

Where the patentee granted no licenses, and had no established license fee, but supplied the demand himself, and was able to do so, an enforced reduction of price is a proper item of damages, if proven by satisfactory evidence. Yale Lock Manufacturing Co. v. Sargent, 117 U. S. 586 [29: 954]. The damages must be actual damages, but where the patented feature is the essential element of the machine or article, as in the case just cited, if such damages can be ascertained they may be awarded. When, however, a plaintiff seeks to recover because he has been compelled to lower his prices to compete with an infringing defendant, he must show that his reduction in prices was due solely to the acts of the defendant, or to what extent it was due to such acts. Cornely v. Markwald, 131 U. S. 159 [38: 117]. There must be some data by which the actual damages may be calculated. New York v. Ransom, 64 U. S. 28 How. 487 [16: 515]; Rude v. Westcott, 130 U. S. 152 [32: 888].

The master reported "that the number of lamp burners proven to have been sold by respondents, containing the invention claimed in and by the first claim of complainants' letters-patent, is fourteen, provided that only the capped burners sold contain said invention, and that the number is one hundred and fourteen, if the half-capped burners so sold are to be held to contain said invention."

The evidence established that the first invoice of lamp burners contained fifty 20-wick burners with caps, of which respondents sold four; and fifty 12-wick burners with half caps, of which respondents sold twelve; and fifty 16-wick burners with half caps, of which respondents sold forty-four; and that respondents altered the forty-six remaining 20-wick burners by changing their caps to half caps, and sold forty-four. This makes the one hundred with half caps, referred to by the master. Of the second invoice, the respondents sold four 20-wick capped burners and six 16-wick capped burners, making, with four 20-wick burners with caps sold out of the first invoice, the fourteen capped wick burners reported as thus disposed of. The original bill in this case was filed September 17, 1886. It had been preceded by another suit, which had been dismissed. The goods in the second invoice, it is testified, had been ordered before this suit was commenced, but the invoice is dated October 16, 1886. This invoice contained one hundred 20 and one hundred 16-wick burners with caps, of which respondents sold four 20-wick and six 16-wick burners unchanged as before stated. Most of this lot were still on hand at the time the testimony was taken, though some had been altered into what was called the "Boesch burner," which had no caps at all, and sold as such.

The evidence tends to establish a profit of $1.85 on the 20-wick burners; $1.50 on the 16-wick, and 75 cents on the 12-wick. This would show a profit of $23.80 on the fourteen capped burners, being eight 20-wick and six 16-wick burners; and a profit of $156.40 on the one hundred half-capped burners, being forty-four 20-wick, forty-four 16-wick and twelve 12-wick burners. Respondents had been advised by their counsel that the burners with half caps were not an infringement. The cap was the invention in question. The claim infringed, as already seen, was a combination, with the guide tubes, of a ring-shaped cap provided with openings for the wicks, said cap being applied to the upper ends of the guide tubes, so as to close the intermediate spaces between the same. The half cap admitted the air directly to each wick, and in that respect differed from the claim of the patent. It is argued, however, with much force, on behalf of the appellees, that the difference was a difference in degree and not in kind, as the air reached the wick when the full cap was used, and the functions of the latter as a strengthening band, a protector of the tops of the tubes, and in other particulars, were performed by the half cap; and this position is not resisted by counsel for appellants. But assuming that the sale of one hundred burners with half caps was an infringement, we are not prepared to concede that the sale of one hundred and fourteen burners under the circumstances detailed could have had the effect in compelling a reduction of price which has been ascribed to it.

It is remarked by the master that "it is a fact of common knowledge that there is to be found on sale in the market a great variety of lamp burners, among which, as shown by the evidence, have been for many years burners of the same general class as complainants'." This being so, and Boesch & Bauer being dealers in burners generally, it is not to be presumed that Gräff reduced his prices, for nineteen months, on six thousand burners, not on account of competition in burners, but because of the effect upon his particular burner created by the sale of fourteen of the same kind, and of one hundred differing but the same in principle. Conceding that as Gräff granted no licenses, and had no established license fee, but supplied the demand for his burner himself, and was able to supply that demand, and that, therefore, if he was compelled to lower the price by the infringement he could recover for the loss thus sustained, does the evidence satisfactorily establish that the reduction in prices was due solely to the acts of the defendants in infringing? The opinion of Mr. and Mrs. Gräff to that effect is not sufficient, and even that is so qualified as to fall far short of expressing it. The master allowed upon 8,070 burners sold at wholesale, and on 2,870 sold at retail, by the complainants, between March 1, 1886, and October 31, 1887, or 5,940 in all. The sales of one hundred and four out of the one hundred and fourteen sold by the respondents apparently took place prior to the filing of the bill. Boesch had been in the business for twenty years. The firm of Boesch & Bauer carried a large stock of lamps, embracing a hundred varieties in styles and sizes, under a very large variety of names.

Gräff's burner was a "mitrailleuse" burner, and called "Diamond," as the Miller burner was. Boesch testified that there was no difference between the selling price of the Hecht, the Miller and the Boesch burners; that there was no demand in their trade for a mitrailleuse burner with a cap; and that in his judgment the Boesch burner was better than the Hecht. This evidence may properly be considered in connection with the fact that but one hundred and fourteen were sold.

We cannot concur with the conclusion that the result of the sales of the one hundred and fourteen burners was to keep Gräff's prices for his particular burner down from March 1, 1886, to October 31, 1887. If Boesch and Bauer had a burner which satisfied the public just as well as Gräff's, and which they could sell cheaper, Gräff cannot complain of the consequences. If Gräff's burner was so much better than any other that the public must have it he could make his own price, and, if within the bounds of reason, find a sufficient market.

In the state of the case disclosed by this record, the complainants must be content with the protection of an injunction and a recovery of the profits realized from the infringing sales. The decree is reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings in conformity with this opinion.

Parties in equity—who necessary—contract—party affected by decree.

1. In equity, all persons materially interested, either legally or beneficially, in the subject matter of a suit, are to be made parties to it, either as plaintiffs or as defendants, so that there may be a complete decree, which shall bind them all.
2. No final decree can be rendered affecting the parties to the contract sued on without making them all parties to the suit.
3. A court cannot adjudicate directly upon a person's right without having him either actually or constructively before it.
4. Notwithstanding the Statute and the 47th Equity Rule, a circuit court can make no decree in a suit in the absence of a party whose rights must necessarily be affected thereby.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. F. A. Brooks, for appellant:

Mrs. Pike was beyond the jurisdiction of the court, and it was impossible for the plaintiff in this case to join her as a party defendant therein, and therefore it was not necessary for him to attempt to do so.

Mr. John G. Stetson pro se.

Mr. Justice Lamar delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit in equity brought in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Massachusetts by Charles A. Gregory, a citizen of Illinois, against William C. N. Swift and John G. Stetson, citizens of Massachusetts, for the alleged violation by Stetson of the following contract of bailment as respects the $15,000 note therein mentioned:

"Boston, Dec. 24, 1886.

"Received of Thomas H. Talbot, Esq., as attorney for Mary H. Pike, executrix of Frederic A. Pike, and of Francis A. Brooks, Esq., as attorney of Charles A. Gregory, two notes of hand made or signed by W. C. N. Swift, of New Bedford, dated April 20, 1883, one for $15,000, on two years' time, and one for $20,834.60, three years' time, payable to Charles F. Jones. Said notes are to be held by me, subject to the joint order and direction of the said Talbot and Brooks, and dealt with as they may jointly direct.

"John G. Stetson."

The amended bill filed on the 30th of January, 1889, alleged that on the 10th of January, 1887, complainant filed a bill in that court against the defendants Swift and Stetson, and one Thomas H. Talbot, and referred to that bill as in part incorporated therein. The material allegations of that bill, so far as concerns this case, are as follows: That on or about the 16th of December, 1884, complainant filed a bill in one of the state courts of Massachusetts against the defendant Swift and one Frederic A. Pike, of Calais, in the State of Maine, to obtain possession of the two notes heretofore mentioned, then in the possession of Pike, which suit was afterwards removed into the court below, where it was then pending and undetermined; that the defendants to that suit filed their respective answers to the bill, issues were joined, proofs taken and the case assigned for final hearing, but was not heard, for the reason that it was then agreed in writing between Pike and

"The undersigned, referee in the matter submitted to him by Charles A. Gregory and Frederic A. Pike, under the submission, a copy of which is hereto annexed, having duly heard the parties, awards and determines thereon, and this is my final award in the premises as follows, to wit: That the said Pike is not entitled to detain or withhold from said Gregory the two Swift notes mentioned or described in the submission, except for the purpose of securing the payment of another certain note, signed by G. W. Butterfield and Charles F. Jones, for the sum of $2,437.50, dated July 26, 1883, and payable to C. H. Eaton, of Calais, Me., or order, a copy of which is hereto annexed; that upon or after the said Eaton note, or whatever sum is now due thereon with interest, as stipulated in said note, shall have been paid by the said Gregory, the said Gregory will be entitled to the possession of the two Swift notes, one of $15,000, and one of $20,384.60. He also finds and determines that upon the payment of said Eaton note by said Gregory, he will be entitled to a transfer or delivery to himself of said Eaton note, and to the benefit of any sums which may be recovered of the said Butterfield and Jones on said note. Dated at Boston, the thirtieth day of November, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-six.

"E. R. Hoar.

"On or before January 1, 1884, we promise to pay C. H. Eaton, or order, two thousand four hundred and thirty-seven dollars and fifty cents, with interest at the rate of one per cent per month from date. Value received.

"G. W. Butterfield;

"Charles F. Jones."

It was then alleged that afterwards Mrs. Pike, having examined the award which had been temporarily returned to the referee for that purpose, undertook to revoke the power under which the referee had acted, and to vacate and annul the award made by him, whereupon the referee, upon being waited upon by complainant through F. A. Brooks, his attorney, accompanied by Thomas H. Talbot, the attorney for Mrs. Pike, returned the award to complainant and gave the said notes to said attorneys, who thereupon took them to defendant Stetson, receiving from him the receipt heretofore set out in full; that complainant on the 4th of January, 1887, in order to entitle himself to the sole and exclusive possession of the notes heretofore mentioned, paid the note of $2,437.50 in favor of C. H. Eaton, mentioned in the award, whereby he became entitled to receive from the defendant Stetson the two notes referred to, the rights of Mrs. Pike and her attorney, Talbot, in and to the same thus having ceased and become of no effect; and that by an instrument in writing dated December 5, 1884, Charles F. Jones, the payee of the two notes, transferred and assigned them to complainant, and authorized him to sue for and collect them, using the payee's name for that purpose, and to deal with them generally as his own property.

The bill in this case then alleged that the defendants Swift and Stetson each answered that bill, and that issue was duly joined upon those answers; that on the 18th of June, 1887, while the defendant Stetson was in possession of the $15,000 note by virtue of the contract heretofore set out in full, the defendant Swift filed his petition in the old equity cause of Gregory v. Pike and Swift to enjoin the suing out or levying of an execution upon any judgment that might be rendered upon the law side of the court upon that note, which had matured and had been sued upon in the name of the payee Jones, until the final determination of the rights of the parties to that equity cause; that on the 9th of July it was ordered by the court below in the old equity cause that the defendant Stetson file the $15,000 note in the action at law of Jones v. Swift, and that upon the entry of judgment in that action the defendant Swift be directed to pay into the registry of the court the amount of that judgment, the same to be held subject to the rights of the parties claiming the note, and to abide the decision of the court in that cause; and that in obedience to those orders of court, and by the voluntary procurement of the defendant Swift, judgment was entered in the action at law against Swift on the $15,000 note, the note was delivered up by the defendant Stetson and filed with the papers in that action, and the amount of the judgment was paid by Swift to the clerk of the court below, who then claimed to hold the same "subject to the rights of the parties claiming said note and to abide the decision of the court" in the old equity cause of Gregory v. Pike et al.

The bill then alleged that all the orders and proceedings heretofore mentioned as pertaining to that old cause in equity were irregular, improper and contrary to law; that at and before the time of the passage of said orders the cause in which they were made had been abated by the death of Pike, one of the defendants thereto, which fact was suggested to the court by complainant on the 6th of January, 1887; that complainant is entitled to the benefits of the action at law heretofore mentioned and to the proceeds of the judgment obtained therein, he having by leave of the court intervened in that action, as a claimant of the note in suit, before the entry of judgment upon it; that the amount of the judgment having been paid over to the defendant Stetson, as clerk of the court, the same was entered satisfied by him, and the money so received was deposited in bank, where it has since remained, the $15,000 note being filed in said old equity cause; and that the defendant Stetson claims to have been duly authorized by the aforesaid orders of court to deal with the note as above set forth, and to be exempted by those orders from all liability to complainant under the before-mentioned receipt of December 24, 1886.

The bill prayed that the money paid by the defendant Swift to the defendant Stetson, as clerk of the court, in satisfaction of the judgment rendered on the $15,000 note, be remanded to Stetson, in his individual capacity, as if no orders, as above recited, had been passed, and that he be ordered to pay over the proceeds of that note to complainant, and for other and further relief.

Later amendments to the prayer of the bill were, that complainant be decreed to have become the sole owner of the $15,000 note prior to July 9, 1887, and that the defendant Stetson's possession of the same thereafter was that of a trustee holding for complainant's sole use and benefit; and a further prayer that if the relief sought against Stetson could not be granted, the defendant Swift be ordered and decreed to pay to complainant the amount of said $15,000 note.

The defendants filed separate demurrers to the bill, which were sustained by the court, and the bill was dismissed. Gregory v. Swift, 89 Fed. Rep. 708. The complainant thereupon prosecuted his appeal to this court.

The bill having been dismissed by agreement, as respects the defendant Swift, the only questions in the case for our consideration are those relating to the demurrer of the defendant Stetson. That demurrer rests on ten grounds, but the court below considered only one of them, viz., the ninth one, which is as follows: "This bill is defective for want of proper parties, in that it does not make Mary H. Pike, executrix of Frederic A. Pike, Thomas H. Talbot and Francis A. Brooks, or either of them, parties thereto."

We are of opinion that the decree of the court below must stand. The rule as to who shall be made parties to a suit in equity is thus stated in Story's Eq. Pl., sec. 72: "It is a general rule in equity (subject to certain exceptions, which will hereafter be noticed) that all persons materially interested, either legally or beneficially, in the subject matter of a suit, are to be made parties to it, either as plaintiffs or as defendants, however numerous they may be, so that there may be a complete decree, which shall bind them all. By this means, the court is enabled to make a complete decree between the parties, to prevent future litigation by taking away the necessity of a multiplicity of suits, and to make it perfectly certain that no injustice is done, either to the parties before it or to others, who are interested in the subject matter, by a decree, which might otherwise be grounded upon a partial view only of the real merits. When all the parties are before the court, the whole case may be seen; but it may not, where all the conflicting interests are not brought out upon the pleadings by the original parties thereto." See also 1 Daniell's Ch. Pl. and Pr. 246 et seq.

In the case before us we are unable to see how any final decree could be rendered affecting the parties to the contract sued on without making them all parties to the suit. It is an elementary principle that a court cannot adjudicate directly upon a person's right without having him either actively or constructively before it. This principle is fundamental. The allegations of the bill show that the contract sued on was made and entered into subsequently to the termination of the proceedings before the referee. By the terms of that contract the note in dispute between Mrs. Pike and the complainant was to be held by the bailee, Stetson, "subject to the joint order and direction" of their respective attorneys. It seems too plain to require argument that complainant Gregory, Mrs. Pike, Talbot, Brooks and Stetson all had an interest in the subject matter of the contract—such an interest, too, as brings the case within the rule just announced.

The point was made in the court below, and it is also pressed here, that, Mrs. Pike being a nonresident and beyond the jurisdiction of the court, it was impossible to join her as a party defendant to this suit, and that it was therefore unnecessary to attempt to do so. The court below ruled against the complainant on this point, and we see no error in that ruling. The general question involved therein has been before this court a number of times, and it is now well settled that, notwithstanding the Statute referred to and the 47th Equity Rule, a circuit court can make no decree in a suit in the absence of a party whose rights must necessarily be affected thereby. Shields v. Barrow, 58 U. S. 17 How. 130, 141, 142 [15: 158, 162]; Coiron v. Millaudon, 60 U. S. 19 How. 113, 115 [15: 575], and cases there cited.

But even admitting the complainant's contention as regards the making of Mrs. Pike a party to this suit, it does not follow that Talbot and Brooks should not have been made parties. As we have shown, they had a substantial interest in the subject matter of the contract sued on, and they should have been made parties to the suit.

We see no error in the decree of the court below prejudicial to the complainant, and it is therefore affirmed.

THE DECISIONS OF THE Supreme Court of the United States,

OCTOBER TERM, 1889.

[Authenticated copy of opinion record strictly followed, except as to such reference words and figures as are inclosed in brackets.]

EUGENE EILENBECKER ET AL., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

THE DISTRICT COURT OF PLYMOUTH COUNTY, IOWA.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 31-40.)

U. S. Constitution—trial by jury—judicial power—power of courts to punish for contempt, without trial by jury—disobedience of process—due process of law—Iowa Statute prohibiting sale of liquors—proceeding in equity.

1. The first eight articles of the Amendments to the Constitution have reference to powers exercised by the government of the United States, and not to those of the States.
2. This limitation is true in regard to clause 3 of section 2 of article III. of the original Constitution, that the trial of all crimes, except cases of impeachment, shall be by jury.

3. Article III. is intended to define the judicial power of the United States, and it is in regard to that power that the declaration is made that the trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury, and it was not intended to be applied to trials in the state courts.
4. Proceedings according to the common law for contempt of court are not subject to the right of trial by jury. It is one of the powers necessarily incident to a court of justice that it may punish for contempt in order to vindicate its dignity, enforce its orders or protect itself from insult, without the necessity of calling upon a jury to assist it in the exercise of this power.
5. Courts have the power to punish in this summary manner the disobedience of any party to any lawful writ, process, order, rule, decree or command of the court.

NOTE.—Contempt; power of court; right to trial by jury.

The power to punish for contempt is inherent in a court. Re Terry, 128 U. S. 289 (32:405); Kregel v. Bartling, 23 Neb. 848.

The courts of the United States have power to punish for contempts of court committed in the presence of the said courts, or so near thereto as to obstruct the administration of justice. Re Savin, 181 U. S. 267 (33:150); Re Terry, 128 U. S. 289 (32:405).

In suitable cases, a legislative body may punish a member for a contempt, technically termed breach of privilege. 2 Bishop, Crim. Law, §§ 247, 249, note; Anderson v. Dunn, 19 U. S. 6 Wheat. 204 (5:242); Burdett v. Abbott, 14 East, 1; Thompson's Case, 8 How. St. Tr. 1; Beaumont v. Barrett, 1 Moore, P. C. 59.

In circumstances justifying, it may expel a member. Story, Const. §§ 837, 838; Cooley, Const. Lim. 133; Hiss v. Bartlett, 3 Gray, 468.

As to powers of court to punish for contempt, see note to Ex parte Robinson, Bk. 22, p. 205.

That there is no review of decree punishing for contempt; limits to rule,—see note to New Orleans v. N. Y. M. S. Co. Bk. 22, p. 354.

Right to trial by jury.

The provisions of the South Carolina Constitution giving the right of trial by jury to every person 184 U. S.

charged with any crime or offense did not take away the power, previously existing in municipal courts, to try offenders for violating municipal ordinances without jury. Anderson v. O'Donnell, 1 L. R. A. 632, 29 S. C. 355.

A person held to answer for a contempt is not entitled to a jury trial. McDonnell v. Henderson, 74 Iowa, 619.

Va. Code, § 717, authorizing a commitment for a fine imposed by a justice, is not unconstitutional for failure to provide for a jury trial. Marx v. Milstead, 18 Va. L. J. 378, 11 Crim. L. Mag. 688.

In proceedings under the Minnesota Insolvent Act, a debtor is not entitled to a jury trial. Re Howes, 38 Minn. 408.

As to trial by jury; how affected by Seventh Amendment to the Constitution,—see note to Justices of N. Y. v. U. S. Bk. 19, p. 658.

As to jury, of what number; practice in regard to; illness or insanity of one; thirteen or eleven jurors; wrong person serving as juror by mistake,—see note to Slusby v. Foote, Bk. 14, p. 394.

As to causes of challenge of jurors and their qualifications,—see note to Clinton v. Englebrecht, Bk. 20, p. 659.

As to discharge or withdrawal of juror before verdict; effect of,—see note to U. S. v. Perez, Bk. 6, p. 165.

As to the questions of law and fact, for court or jury, in civil and criminal cases, see note to King v. Delaware Ins. Co. Bk. 3, p. 155.

6. A proceeding by which a fine and imprisonment are imposed upon parties for contempt in violating the injunction of the court, regularly issued in a suit to which they were parties, without trial by jury, is due process of law, whether the contempt occurred in the course of a criminal proceeding or of a civil suit.
7. That part of the Statute of Iowa concerning the sale of liquors which declares that no person shall own or keep, or be in any way concerned, engaged or employed in owning or keeping, any intoxicating liquors with intent to sell the same within that State, and all the prohibitory clauses of the Statute, are within the constitutional powers of the State Legislature.
8. It is no objection to the Statute that it authorizes a proceeding in the nature of a suit in equity to suppress the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors which are by law prohibited, and to abate the nuisance which the Statute declares such acts to be.

Submitted Jan. 8, 1890. Decided March 3, 1890.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Iowa to review a judgment affirming the judgment of the District Court of Plymouth County in that State imposing a fine and imprisonment for contempt in refusing to obey a writ of injunction. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Reported below, 69 Iowa, 240.

Messrs. Argo & McDuffie and William A. McKenney for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. J. S. Strubel, Rishel & Hart, S. M. Marsh and A. J. Baker, Atty-Gen. of Iowa, for defendant in error:

The power to punish for contempt is not limited to courts of law. It may be exercised in proper cases by courts of equity.

Ex parte Hamilton, 51 Ala. 68; Chaffee v. Quidnick Co. 18 R. I. 448, 444; Ex parte Walker, 25 Ala. 100; Wikle v. Siloa, 70 Ga. 717; Goodville v. Millmann, 56 Ill. 525; State v. Matthews, 87 N. H. 453; Mariner v. Dyer, 2 Me. 169.

A proceeding in the court below, for contempt of court, is not reviewable on appeal or writ of error.

Hayes v. Fischer, 102 U. S. 121 (26:95); Ex parte Kearney, 20 U. S. 7 Wheat. 38 (5:391); New Orleans v. N. Y. Mail Steamship Co. 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 387 (22:354).

The prohibitions contained in the first twelve Constitutional Amendments were not designed as limits upon the state governments in reference to their citizens, but exclusively upon federal power.

Barron v. Baltimore, 32 U. S. 7 Pet. 247 (3:878); Fox v. Ohio, 46 U. S. 5 How. 410 (12:213); Ohio Mechanics & T. Bank v. Thomas, 59 U. S. 18 How. 384 (15:460); Twitcheil v. Commonwealth, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 324 (19:228); Presser v. Illinois, 116 U. S. 252 (29:615).

The provision of the Federal Constitution which secures to every person, when value exceeds $20, right of trial by jury, has no application to trials in state courts.

Edwards v. Elliott, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 549, 557 (22:490, 492); McLean v. Leicht, 69 Iowa, 407, 408.

The power to punish for contempt is not in conflict with the provisions of the Constitution requiring the trial of crimes to be by jury.

U. S. v. Duane, Wall. C. C. 102-106; Ex parte Hamilton, 51 Ala. 68; Little v. State, 90 Ind. 388-340.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a writ of error to the Supreme Court of the State of Iowa.

The judgment which we are called upon to review is one affirming the judgment of the District Court of Plymouth County in that State. This judgment imposed a fine of five hundred dollars and costs on each of the six plaintiffs in error in this case, and imprisonment in the jail of Plymouth County for a period of three months; but they were to be released from confinement if the fine imposed was paid within thirty days from the date of the judgment.

This sentence was pronounced by the court as a punishment for contempt in refusing to obey a writ of injunction issued by that court, enjoining and restraining each of the defendants from selling, or keeping for sale, any intoxicating liquors, including ale, wine and beer, in Plymouth County, and the sentence was imposed upon a hearing by the court, without a jury, and upon evidence in the form of affidavits.

It appears that on the 11th day of June, 1885, separate petitions in equity were filed in the District Court of Plymouth County against each of these plaintiffs in error, praying that they should be enjoined from selling, or keeping for sale, intoxicating liquors, including ale, wine and beer, in that county. On the 6th of July the court ordered the issue of preliminary injunctions as prayed. On the 7th of July the writs were served on each of the defendants in each proceeding by the sheriff of Plymouth County. On the 24th of October, complaints were filed, alleging that these plaintiffs in error had violated this injunction by selling intoxicating liquors contrary to the law and the terms of the injunction served on them, and asking that they be required to show cause why they should not be punished for contempt of court. A rule was granted accordingly, and the court, having no personal knowledge of the facts charged, ordered that a hearing be had at the next term of the court, upon affidavits; and on the 8th day of March, 1886, it being at the regular term of said District Court, separate trials were had upon evidence in the form of affidavits, by the court without a jury, upon which the plaintiffs were found guilty of a violation of the writs of injunction issued in said cause, and a sentence of fine and imprisonment, as already stated, entered against them.

Each plaintiff obtained from the Supreme Court of the State of Iowa, upon petition, a writ of certiorari, in which it was alleged that the District Court of Plymouth County had acted without jurisdiction and illegally in rendering this judgment, and by agreement of counsel, and with the consent of the Supreme Court of Iowa, the cases of the six appellants in this court were submitted together and tried on one transcript of record. That court affirmed the judgment of the District Court of Plymouth County, and to that judgment of affirmance this writ of error is prosecuted.

The errors assigned here are that the Supreme Court of Iowa failed to give effect to clause 3 of section 2 of article III. of the Constitution of the United States, which provides that the trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury, and also to the provisions of article VI. of the Amendments to the Constitution, which provides that in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury.

184 U. S.

The second assignment is, that the Supreme Court of Iowa erred in holding that plaintiffs could be fined and imprisoned without first being presented by a grand jury, and could be tried on ex parte affidavits; which decision, it is said, is in conflict with and contrary to the provisions of both articles V. and VI. of the Amendments to the Constitution of the United States, the latter of which provides that in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to be confronted by the witnesses against him.

The fourth assignment is, that the Supreme Court erred in not holding that section 12 of chapter 143 of the Acts of the Twentieth General Assembly of Iowa is in conflict with article VIII. of the Amendments to the Constitution of the United States, which provides that excessive fines shall not be imposed nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted. These three assignments, as will be presently seen, may be disposed of together.

The third assignment is, that the Supreme Court of Iowa erred in not holding that said chapter 143 of the Acts of the Twentieth General Assembly of Iowa, and especially section 12 of said chapter, is void, and in conflict with section 1 of article XIV. of the Amendments to the Constitution of the United States, in this, that it deprives persons charged with selling intoxicating liquors of the equal protection of the laws, and it prejudices the rights and privileges of that particular class of persons, and denies to them the right of trial by jury, while in all other prosecutions the accused must first be presented by indictment, and then have the benefit of trial by a jury of his peers.

The first three of these assignments of error, as we have stated them, being the first and second and fourth of the assignments as numbered in the brief of the plaintiffs in error, are disposed of at once by the principle often decided by this court, that the first eight articles of the Amendments to the Constitution have reference to powers exercised by the government of the United States and not to those of the States. Livingston v. Moore, 82 U. S. 7 Pet. 469 [8: 751]; The Justices v. United States, Murray, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 274 [19: 658]; Edwards v. Elliott, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 582 [22: 487]; United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542 [23: 588]; Walker v. Sauvinet, 92 U. S. 90 [23: 678]; Fox v. Ohio, 46 U. S. 5 How. 410 [12: 213]; Holmes v. Jennison, 89 U. S. 14 Pet. 540 [10: 579]; Presser v. Illinois, 116 U. S. 252 [29: 615].

The limitation, therefore, of articles V. and VI. and VIII. of those Amendments being intended exclusively to apply to the powers exercised by the government of the United States, whether by Congress or by the judiciary, and not as limitations upon the powers of the States, can have no application to the present case, and the same observation is more obviously true in regard to clause 3 of section 2 of article III. of the original Constitution, that the trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury. This article III. of the Constitution is intended to define the judicial power of the United States, and it is in regard to that power that the declaration is made that the trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury. It is impossible to examine the accompanying provisions of the Constitution without seeing very clearly that this provision was not intended to be applied to trials in the state courts.

This leaves us alone the assignment of error that the Supreme Court of Iowa disregarded the provisions of section 1 of article XIV. of the Amendments to the Constitution of the United States, because it upheld the Statute of Iowa, which it is supposed by counsel deprives persons charged with selling intoxicating liquors of the equal protection of the law, abridges their rights and privileges, and denies to them the right of trial by jury, while in all other criminal prosecutions the accused must be presented by indictment, and then have the benefit of trial by a jury of his peers.

The first observation to be made on this subject is, that the plaintiffs in error are seeking to reverse a judgment of the District Court of Plymouth County, Iowa, imposing upon them a fine and imprisonment for violating the injunction of that court, which had been regularly issued and served upon them. Of the intentional violation of this injunction by plaintiffs we are not permitted to entertain any doubt, and, if we did, the record in the case makes it plain. Neither is it doubted that they had a regular and fair trial, after due notice, and opportunity to defend themselves in open court at a regular term thereof.

The contention of these parties is, that they were entitled to a trial by jury on the question as to whether they were guilty or not guilty of the contempt charged upon them, and because they did not have this trial by jury they say that they were deprived of their liberty without due process of law within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

If it has ever been understood that proceedings according to the common law for contempt of court have been subject to the right of trial by jury, we have been unable to find any instance of it. It has always been one of the attributes—one of the powers necessarily incident to a court of justice—that it should have this power of vindicating its dignity, of enforcing its orders, of protecting itself from insult, without the necessity of calling upon a jury to assist it in the exercise of this power.

In the case in this court of Ex parte Terry, 128 U. S. 289 [32: 405], this doctrine is fully asserted and enforced, quoting the language of the court in the case of Anderson v. Dunn, 19 U. S. 6 Wheat. 204, 227 [5: 242, 247], where it was said that "courts of justice are universally acknowledged to be vested, by their very creation, with power to impose silence, respect and decorum in their presence, and submission to their lawful mandates;" citing also with approbation the language of the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts in Cartwright's Case, 114 Mass. 280, 288, that "the summary power to commit and punish for contempts tending to obstruct or degrade the administration of justice is inherent in courts of chancery and other superior courts, as essential to the execution of their powers and to the maintenance of their authority, and is part of the law of the land, within the meaning of Magna Charta and of the twelfth article of our Declaration of Rights."

And this court, in Terry's Case, held that a summary proceeding of the circuit court of the United States without a jury, imposing upon Terry imprisonment for the term of six months, was a valid exercise of the powers of the court, and that the action of the circuit court was also without error in refusing to grant him a writ of habeas corpus. The case of Terry came into this court upon application for a writ of habeas corpus, and presented, as the case now before us does, the question of the authority of the circuit court to impose this imprisonment on a summary hearing without those regular proceedings which include a trial by jury, which was affirmed. The still more recent cases of Ex parte Savin, 131 U. S. 287 [38: 150], and Ex parte Cuddy, 131 U. S. 280 [38: 154], assert very strongly the same principle. In Ex parte Robinson, 86 U. S. 19 Wall. 505 [22: 205], this court speaks in the following language:

"The power to punish for contempts is inherent in all courts. Its existence is essential to the preservation of order in judicial proceedings, and the enforcement of the judgments, orders and writs of the courts, and consequently to the due administration of justice. The moment the courts of the United States were called into existence and invested with jurisdiction over any subject, they became possessed of this power. But the power has been limited and defined by the Act of Congress of March 2d, 1831. (4 Stat. 487.)"

The Statute, now embodied in § 725 of the Revised Statutes, reads as follows:

"The power of the several courts of the United States to issue attachments and inflict summary punishments for contempts of court shall not be construed to extend to any cases except the misbehavior of any person or persons in the presence of the said courts or so near thereto as to obstruct the administration of justice, the misbehavior of any of the officers of the said courts in their official transactions, and the disobedience or resistance by any officer of the said courts, party, juror, witness or any other person or persons to any lawful writ, process, order, rule, decree or command of the said courts."

It will thus be seen that even in the Act of Congress, intended to limit the power of the courts to punish for contempts of its authority by summary proceedings, there is expressly left the power to punish in this summary manner the disobedience of any party to any lawful writ, process, order, rule, decree or command of said court. This Statute was only designed for the government of the courts of the United States, and the opinions of this court in the cases we have already referred to show conclusively what was the nature and extent of the power inherent in the courts of the States by virtue of their organization, and that the punishments which they were authorized to inflict for a disobedience to their writs and orders was ample and summary, and did not require the interposition of a jury to find the facts or assess the punishment. This, then, is due process of law in regard to contempts of courts, was due process of law at the time the Fourteenth Amendment of the Federal Constitution was adopted, and nothing has ever changed it except such statutes as Congress may have enacted for the courts of the United States, and as each State may have enacted for the government of its own courts.

So far from any statute on this subject limiting the power of the courts of Iowa, the Act of the Legislature of that State, authorizing the injunction which these parties are charged with violating, expressly declares that for violating such injunction a person doing so shall be punished for the contempt by a fine of not less than five hundred or more than a thousand dollars, or by imprisonment in the county jail not more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court. So that the proceeding by which the fine and imprisonment imposed upon these parties for contempt in violating the injunction of the court, regularly issued in a suit to which they were parties, is due process of law, and always has been due process of law, and is the process or proceeding by which courts have from time immemorial enforced the execution of their orders and decrees, and cannot be said to deprive the parties of their liberty or property without due process of law.

The counsel for plaintiffs in error seek to evade the force of this reasoning by the proposition that the entire Statute under which this injunction was issued is in the nature of a criminal proceeding, and that the contempt of court of which these parties have been found guilty is a crime for the punishment of which they have a right to trial by jury.

We cannot accede to this view of the subject. Whether an attachment for a contempt of court, and the judgment of the court punishing the party for such contempt, is in itself essentially a criminal proceeding or not, we do not find it necessary to decide. We simply hold that, whatever its nature may be, it is an offense against the court and against the administration of justice, for which courts have always had the right to punish the party by summary proceeding and without trial by jury; and that in that sense it is due process of law within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution. We do not suppose that that provision of the Constitution was ever intended to interfere with or abolish the powers of the courts in proceedings for contempt, whether this contempt occurred in the course of a criminal proceeding or of a civil suit.

We might rest the case here; but the plaintiffs in error fall back upon the proposition that the Statute of the Iowa Legislature concerning the sale of liquors, under which this injunction was issued, is itself void, as depriving the parties of their property and of their liberty without due process of law. We are not prepared to say that this question arises in the present case. The principal suit in which the injunction was issued, for the contempt of which these parties have been sentenced to imprisonment and to pay a fine, has never been tried so far as this record shows. We do not know whether the parties demanded a trial by jury on the question of their guilty violation of that Statute. We do not know that they would have been refused a trial by jury if they had demanded it. Until the trial of that case has been had they are not injured by a refusal to grant them a jury trial. It is the well-settled doctrine of this court that a part of a statute may be void and the remainder may be valid. That part of this Statute which declares that no person shall own or keep, or be in any way concerned, engaged or employed in owning or keeping, any intoxicating liquors with intent to sell the same within this State, and all the prohibitory clauses of the Statute, have been held by this court to be within the constitutional powers of the State Legislature, in the cases of Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623 [81: 205], and Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678 [32: 258].

If the objection to the Statute is that it authorizes a proceeding in the nature of a suit in equity to suppress the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors which are by law prohibited, and to abate the nuisance which the Statute declares such acts to be, wherever carried on, we respond that, so far as at present advised, it appears to us that all the powers of a court, whether at common law or in chancery, may be called into operation by a legislative body for the purpose of suppressing this objectionable traffic; and we know of no hindrance in the Constitution of the United States to the form of proceedings, or to the court in which this remedy shall be had. Certainly it seems to us to be quite as wise to use the processes of the law and the powers of the court to prevent the evil as to punish the offense as a crime after it has been committed.

We think it was within the power of the Court of Plymouth County to issue the writs of injunction in these cases, and that the disobedience to them by the plaintiffs in error subjected them to the proceedings for contempt which were had before that court.

The judgment of the Supreme Court of Iowa is affirmed.

WILLIAM B. WEBB ET AL.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 47-68.)

Jurisdiction to review judgment of Supreme Court of District of Columbia, probating a will—final judgment—case—questions reviewable—exceptions—writ of error proper—evidence—knowledge of will—instruction.

1. This court has jurisdiction to re-examine and reverse or affirm the final judgment of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, affirming an order of the same court, in special term, admitting a will to probate and record, where such final judgment and order affects the ownership or disposition of property of a greater value than $5,000.
2. An order in the Supreme Court of the District, at special term, admitting a will to probate and record, is a final judgment reviewable by the general term.
3. A proceeding in the Supreme Court of the District involving the validity, as a last will and testament, of an instrument offered for probate, and its admission to probate, is a "case," the final judgment in which can be here reviewed, when the value of the matter in dispute is sufficient.
4. An appeal to the general term from the final order of probate made in the special term, based upon the finding of a jury, upon issues tried by them, brings into review before the general term all the questions of law that are properly presented by the bill of exceptions taken at the trial.
5. An appeal to this court from the final judgment of the Supreme Court of the District, affirming the order of probate, brings here for re-examination all the questions properly arising upon those bills of exceptions.
6. A proceeding involving the original probate of a last will and testament is not strictly a proceeding in equity and may be brought to this court upon writ of error.
7. Evidence that the decedent received the bulk of his estate by breaking the will of his grandfather is immaterial upon the issue as to whether the paper in question was or was not valid as his last will and testament.
8. Testimony that one of the legatees, about the date of the will, had knowledge of its provisions, is not competent upon the trial of the issue as to competency to make a will.
9. It was not error to refuse an instruction requested, where the court had already fully instructed the jury upon the subject.

Layman v. Conrey, 60 Md. 286; 1 Redf. Wills, 524, 534; Eckert v. Flowery, 43 Pa. 46.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

This writ of error brings up for review a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in general term, which affirmed a final order of the same court, in special term, admitting to probate and record a certain writing as the last will and testament of Levin M. Powell, who died in the City of Washington on the 15th day of January, 1885. That instrument provided for the disposition of property of the value of more than one hundred thousand dollars.

At October Term, 1886, of this court a motion was made that the writ of error be dismissed for want of jurisdiction, "because the judgment of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to which said writ of error was directed is not a final judgment;" and, in the alternative, that the judgment be affirmed because the writ of error was sued out merely for delay. That motion was overruled. Ormsby v. Webb, 122 U. S. 630 [80: 1249]. At the present term a second motion to dismiss was made; this time, upon the ground that the case is one of equity jurisdiction, and could be brought here only by appeal.

The history of this litigation, as disclosed by the record, is as follows:

Sarah C. Colmesnil, one of the heirs-at-law of the deceased, presented to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, holding a special term for probate business, a petition alleging that the above writing—previously presented to that court for probate by the persons named therein as executors—was not the last will and testament of Levin M. Powell; that by reason of his physical and mental condition he was incompetent to make a will; and that if his name was placed to that writing it was not done by his will, but by the procurement, undue influence and fraud of Harriet C. Stewart, one of the persons named therein as a legatee.

It was thereupon ordered that the following issues be transmitted to be tried in the circuit court before a jury:

"First. Whether the said paper-writing purporting to be the last will and testament of the said Levin M. Powell, bearing date on the 134 U. S.

27th of October, 1884, was executed and attested in due form of law.

"Second. Whether the contents of said paper-writing were read to or by the said Levin M. Powell at or before the alleged execution thereof by him.

"Third. Whether the said Levin M. Powell at the time of the alleged signing of said paper-writing was of sound and disposing mind and capable of executing a valid deed or contract.

"Fourth. Whether the said writing was executed by the said Levin M. Powell under the influence of suggestions, importunities and undue persuasion of the said Harriet C. Stewart, or any other person or persons, when his mind, from its disordered, diseased and enfeebled state, was unable to resist the same.

"Fifth. Whether the execution of said paper-writing was procured by fraud, misrepresentation or undue influence or persuasion of the said Harriet C. Stewart, or any other person or persons acting of their own volition or under the direction of the said Stewart."

Subsequently, in the Supreme Court of the District, holding a circuit court, an order was made that upon the trial of the above issues before a jury, Mrs. Colmesnil and others who had filed caveats should be plaintiffs, and Charles D. Drake and William B. Webb, as the proponents of the last will and testament of the deceased, and who were named as his executors, should be defendants.

The verdict of the jury consisted of answers to the above questions. The first, second and third were answered in the affirmative; the fourth and fifth in the negative. A motion for a new trial having been overruled, the caveators prosecuted an appeal to the general term, which affirmed the action of the special term.

At a subsequent date the caveators filed in the Supreme Court of the District, holding a special term for what is called orphans' court business, the record of the trial of the issues submitted to the jury, and moved that the verdict be set aside upon the ground that the court trying those issues erred in rejecting competent testimony, in its instructions to the jury, in refusing to instruct the jury as requested by the caveators, and in rulings during the trial to which they took exceptions. This motion was overruled, and an order was made admitting the writing in question to probate and record as the will of Levin M. Powell, and directing letters testamentary to issue to the persons named therein as executors. From this last order an appeal was taken to the general term, which affirmed the order of the special term overruling the motion to set aside the verdict of the jury, as well as the order admitting the above writing to probate as the last will of the deceased.

The question raised by the first motion to dismiss for want of jurisdiction in this court, having been re-argued, will be again examined in connection with the motion to dismiss, upon the ground that the case, in any event, is one of equity cognizance to be brought here only by appeal. We do this because no opinion was delivered when this motion was overruled at a former term.

The defendants in error contend, in effect, that this court is without jurisdiction to review an order of the Supreme Court of the District, by virtue of which a writing is finally admitted to probate as the last will and testament of the person signing it, whatever may be the value of the matter in dispute. This, it is argued, results from the statutes regulating the jurisdiction of the courts of the District, and the decisions of this court declaring their scope and effect.

The Act of February 27, 1801, concerning the District of Columbia (2 Stat. 108), created the Circuit Court of the District, with all the powers in such court and the judges thereof that were vested by law in the circuit courts and judges of the circuit courts of the United States, and with jurisdiction of all crimes and offenses committed in the District, and of all cases in law and equity between parties, both or either of which shall be residents thereof. The eighth section of the Act provided that "any final judgment, order or decree in said circuit court, wherein the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, shall exceed the value of one hundred dollars, may be re-examined and reversed or affirmed in the Supreme Court of the United States, by writ of error or appeal, which shall be prosecuted in the same manner, under the same regulations, and the same proceedings shall be had therein, as is or shall be provided in the case of writs of error on judgments, or appeals upon orders or decrees, rendered in the circuit court of the United States." The same Act created an orphans' court in each of the Counties of Washington and Alexandria, that should have the powers and perform the duties prescribed in reference to such courts in Maryland, appeals therefrom to be to the Circuit Court of the District, which should therein have all the powers of the chancellor of that State. § 12.

Among the statutes of Maryland then in force was the Act of 1798, which authorized the orphans' court, whenever required by either party to a contest therein, to direct a plenary proceeding by bill or petition, to which there should be an answer on oath or affirmation, and which made it the duty of the court, when either party required it, to direct an issue or issues to be made up and sent to the court of law most convenient for trying the same. The Act provided that such courts of law "shall have power to direct the jury, and grant a new trial, as if the issue or issues were in a suit therein instituted, and a certificate from such court, or any judge thereof, of the verdict or finding of the jury, under the seal thereof, shall be admitted by the orphans' court to establish or destroy the claim or any part thereof;" also, that "the orphans' court shall give judgment or decree upon the bill and answer, or upon bill, answer, deposition or finding of the jury." 2 Kilty's Laws Md. chap. 101, sub. chap. 8, § 20; Dennis' Probate Laws D. C. 67.

By the Act of March 3, 1863 (12 Stat. 762), the Circuit, District and Criminal Courts of the District were abolished, and the Supreme Court of the District was established with general jurisdiction in law and equity, and with the powers and jurisdiction then possessed and exercised by the circuit court. That Act provided that one of the justices might hold a District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia in the same manner and with the same powers and jurisdiction possessed and exercised by other district courts of the United States, and a criminal court with the same powers as were exercised by the Criminal Court of the District; that special terms of such supreme court should be held by one of the justices, at such time as the court in general term should direct, and by which non-enumerated motions in suits and proceedings at law and in equity, and suits in equity, not triable by jury, should be heard and determined, such justice, however, having the power to order any such motion or suit to be heard, in the first instance, at the general term; and that "any party aggrieved by any order, judgment or decree, made or pronounced at any such special term, may, if the same involve the merits of the action or proceeding, appeal therefrom to the general term of said supreme court, and upon such appeal the general term shall review such order, judgment or decree, and affirm, reverse or modify the same, as shall be just." § 5. It also provided that "all issues of fact triable by a jury or by the court shall be tried before a single justice; when the trial is by a jury, at a circuit court; and when the trial is without a jury, at a circuit court or special term." § 7.

The eighth and ninth sections of the Act are as follows:

"Sec. 8. If, upon the trial of a cause, an exception be taken, it may be reduced to writing at the time, or it may be entered on the minutes of the justice, and afterwards settled in such manner as may be provided by the rules of the court, and then stated in writing in a case or bill of exceptions, with so much of the evidence as may be material to the questions to be raised, but such case or bill of exceptions need not be sealed or signed. The justice who tries the cause may, in his discretion, entertain a motion, to be made on his minutes, to set aside a verdict and grant a new trial upon exceptions, or for insufficient evidence, or for excessive damages: Provided, That such motion be made at the same term or circuit at which the trial was had. When such motion is made and heard upon the minutes, an appeal to the general term may be taken from the decision, in which case a bill of exceptions or case shall be settled in the usual manner.

"Sec. 9. A motion for a new trial on a case or bill of exceptions, and an application for judgment on a special verdict or a verdict taken subject to the opinion of the court, shall be heard in the first instance at a general term."

The next Act of Congress having any bearing upon the question before us is that of June 21, 1870, which provides that the several general and special terms authorized by the Act of March 3, 1863, "which have been or may be held, shall be, and are declared to be, severally, terms of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia; and the judgments, decrees, sentences, orders, proceedings and acts of said general terms, special terms, circuit courts, district courts and criminal courts, heretofore or hereafter rendered, made or had, shall be deemed judgments, decrees, sentences, orders, proceedings and acts of said supreme court:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall affect the right of appeal as provided by law."

The same Act abolished the orphans' court and invested the justice holding the special term of the supreme court for that purpose with the powers and jurisdiction then held and exercised by the former court, subject, however, to the provisions of the fifth section of the Act of March 3, 1868, giving an appeal to the general term from any order involving the merits. 16 Stat. 180.

The provisions of the Acts of 1868 and 1870, so far as they regulate the jurisdiction and practice in the courts of this District, are embodied in chapter 23 of the Revised Statutes of the District, without any material change.

When the Revised Statutes of 1874 were enacted, the jurisdiction of this court as to judgments or decrees of the Supreme Court of the District was thus defined: "The final judgment or decree of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in any case where the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, exceeds the value of one thousand dollars, may be re-examined and reversed or affirmed in the Supreme Court of the United States, upon writ of error or appeal, in the same manner and under the same regulations as are provided in cases of writs of error on judgments, or appeals from decrees rendered in a circuit court." Rev. Stat. § 705. But by an Act approved February 25, 1879 (20 Stat. 320), such power of review was extended to cases where the matter in dispute exceeded the value of $2,500, exclusive of costs; and by an Act passed March 3, 1885, the amount was increased to $5,000, with the reservation of the right of appeal or writ of error, without regard to the sum or value in dispute, in cases involving the validity of any patent or copyright, or in which is drawn in question the validity of a treaty or statute of, or an authority exercised under, the United States. 23 Stat. 443.

It is contended on behalf of the appellees, that, although this court has jurisdiction to re-examine and reverse or affirm the final judgment or decree of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in any case where the value of the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, exceeds $5,000, it has not jurisdiction to re-examine the final judgment of that court, in general term, affirming an order of the same court, in special term, admitting a will to probate and record, although such final judgment and order, unless reversed, may affect the ownership or disposition of property of a greater value than that amount. And this view, it is argued, is sustained by the decisions in Van Ness v. Van Ness, 47 U. S. 6 How. 62, 67 [12: 344, 345], and Brown v. Wiley, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 165 [18: 384]. We are of opinion that this point was neither involved nor decided in those cases.

Before examining those cases our attention will be first given to that of Carter v. Cutting, 12 U. S. 8 Cranch, 251 [3: 553]. That was an appeal, under the Act of 1801, from a judgment of the Circuit Court of this District, affirming a judgment of the Orphans' Court of Alexandria County (which court had the same jurisdiction, and was created by the same Act, as the Orphans' Court of Washington County), dismissing a petition filed for the revocation and repeal of the probate of a will. Two objections to the appeal were urged in this court: (1) that by the Act of 1801 the circuit court had only the power of the chancellor of Maryland, and that by the laws of Maryland the decree of the chancellor was final; (2) that the decree of dismissal was not a final judgment, order or decree of the circuit court wherein the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, exceeded $100. Mr. Justice Story, speaking for the court, said as to the first objection: "We are of opinion that the conclusiveness of its sentence forms no part of the essence of the powers of the court. Its powers to act are as ample independent of their final quality as with it. Besides, the Act of February 27, 1801, has expressly allowed an appeal from 'all final judgments, orders and decrees of the circuit courts,' where the matter in dispute exceeds the limited value, and there is nothing in the context to narrow the ordinary import of the language. We cannot admit that construction to be a sound one which seeks by remote inferences to withdraw a case from the general provisions of a statute, which is clearly within its words and perfectly consistent with its intent. The case of Young v. Bank of Alexandria, 8 U. S. 4 Cranch, 384 [2: 655], is, in our judgment, decisive against this objection." In reference to the second objection, it was said: "It is conceded by both parties that the estate devised to the respondent, Sally C. Cutting, is worth several thousand dollars. If, then, the probate of the will had any legal operation and was not merely void, the controversy as to the validity of that probate was a matter in dispute equal to the value of the estate devised away from the heirs." The decree of the circuit court in that case, dismissing the petition, was reversed, and the cause remanded to that court with directions to proceed to a hearing upon the merits. The circuit court was thus required to determine, upon its merits, the validity of the probate of a will.

The case of Van Ness v. Van Ness also arose under the Act of 1801. It involved the question whether a particular person was the widow of an intestate, and upon that question depended the right of that person to have letters of administration granted to her. This issue, having been raised in the orphans' court, by petition, was, pursuant to the Maryland Statute of 1798, sent to the circuit court, as originally established, for trial by jury. Under the instructions of that court a verdict was returned against the petitioner; and by its order the finding of the jury was certified, under seal, to the orphans' court, where the petition was dismissed. From that order a writ of error was brought, raising the question whether this court could take cognizance of the case, and inquire whether the circuit court erred in its instruction to the jury. Chief Justice Taney, speaking for the court, said: "It is true the orphans' court has no power to grant a new trial, and is bound to consider the fact to be as found by the jury; and consequently the judgment of that court must be against the plaintiff. But the matter in contest in the orphans' court is the right to the letters of administration. And it is the province of that court to apply the law upon that subject to the fact, as established by the verdict of the jury, and to make their decree accordingly, refusing to revoke the letters granted to the defendant, and dismissing the petition of the plaintiff. The suit between the parties must remain still pending until that decree is pronounced. The certificate of the circuit court is nothing more than evidence of the finding of the jury upon the trial of the issue. It merely certifies a fact, that is to say, that the jury had so found. And the order of the circuit court, directing a fact to be certified to another court to enable it to proceed to judgment, can hardly be regarded as a judgment, order or decree, in the legal sense of these terms as used in the Act of Congress. Certainly it is not a final judgment or order. For it does not put an end to the suit in the orphans' court, as that court alone can dismiss the petition of the plaintiff which is there pending; and no other court has the power to pass a judgment upon it. A verdict in any court of common law, if not set aside, is in all cases conclusive as to the fact found by the jury, and the judgment of the court must follow it, as the orphans' court must follow the verdict in this case. Yet a writ of error will not lie upon the verdict."

The case of Brown v. Wiley is to the same effect. That case arose upon a petition filed in the orphans' court before the Act of 1863 was passed, raising the question whether the petitioner was a child of the intestate, and as such entitled to a certain fund in the hands of an administratrix. After that Act was in force the issues were submitted to a jury empaneled in the Supreme Court of the District, at special term, and was determined in favor of the petitioner. A motion for a new trial, on exceptions duly taken, was heard at general term and overruled. The cause was then remanded with direction to proceed according to law. Thereupon an order was made that the finding of the jury be certified by the clerk to the orphans' court, which was still in existence. From that order a writ of error was brought, and this court, holding that it was not a final order, dismissed the writ. That this was the utmost extent of the decision is manifest from the following extracts from the opinion delivered by Chief Justice Chase:

"The case, in almost every particular, is identical with that of Van Ness v. Van Ness. In that case, as in this, an issue of fact was sent out of the orphans' court to the circuit court to be tried by a jury; was tried and found in the negative. Exceptions were taken to the rulings upon the trial, and an order was made certifying the finding to the orphans' court. The proceeding was brought into this court by writ of error, which was dismissed for want of jurisdiction. . . . The order certifying the finding to the orphans' court, in the case of Van Ness, was identical in effect with the two orders overruling the motion for new trial, and certifying the finding in the case before us. In each case the exceptions taken at the trial before the jury were overruled, and nothing was left for action in the court before which the issues were tried; but the case went to the orphans' court for final judgment. In that case it was held that the order was not one which could, under the Act, be re-examined on writ of error, and we see no reason for a different ruling in this."

Neither of the above cases involved the precise question now under examination. The decision in Carter v. Cutting was, that the final order of the orphans' court, dismissing a petition which sought the revocation of the probate of a will, could be reviewed upon its merits in the circuit court, and that the final order of the latter court could be re-examined in this court. The decision in both Van Ness v. Van Ness and Brown v. Wiley was, that an order by the circuit court in the first case, and by the Supreme Court of the District in the other case, which directed the finding of the jury to be certified, simply directed a fact to be certified, and therefore was not a final judgment, reviewable by this court. In none of the above cases did the question arise, whether a final order—made after the trial before the jury of the issue of will or no will—admitting to probate a paper presented as the last will of the decedent, was reviewable upon its merits, by the circuit court while the Act of 1861 was in force, or by the Supreme Court of the District after the passage of the Act of 1863. Nor did either of those cases involve any question as to the jurisdiction of this court to re-examine a final judgment affirming an order of probate. The latter question is now, for the first time, presented for determination.

That an order in the Supreme Court of the District, at special term, admitting a will to probate and record, is a final judgment, cannot, it seems to us, be disputed. It was so declared in Van Ness v. Van Ness and Brown v. Wiley. A will, admitted to probate and record by a court of competent jurisdiction, is a muniment of title for all receiving property under it; and, until the order so admitting it to probate is, by some appropriate proceeding, set aside or reversed, stands in the way of those who may have resisted the probate. In every sense, it is a final adjudication. And that an order of probate made in the Supreme Court of the District, special term, is reviewable by the general term, is made clear by the provision that a party aggrieved by any order, judgment or decree in a special term, involving the merits of the action or proceeding, may appeal to the general term, which "shall review such order, judgment or decree, and affirm, reverse or modify the same, as shall be just." Rev. Stat. D. C. sec. 772; 12 Stat. 763, chap. 91, sec. 5. Clearly, an order of probate, based upon a finding by the jury upon issues as to the competency of the testator to make a will, is one involving the merits. If so, how is it possible, in view of the express words of the Statute, to question the jurisdiction of the general term to review such final order of probate?

In respect to the authority of this court to re-examine the final judgments and decrees of the Supreme Court of this District, the words of the Statute are quite as clear as those defining the jurisdiction of the general term to review the orders and judgments of the special term. It embraces the final judgment or decree of that court "in any case" involving a specified amount. It is true that this re-examination must be upon writ of error or appeal "in the same manner and under the same regulations as are provided in cases of writs of error on judgments, or appeals from decrees rendered in a circuit court." But this language does not determine the nature of the "case" in the Supreme Court of the District, the final judgment in which is subject to re-examination by this court. It only indicates the mode in which a case may be brought here for review. So that the only question is whether issues framed by the Supreme Court of the District, and which involve an inquiry as to whether the decedent was or was not incompetent, from unsoundness of mind or because of undue influence exerted upon him, to make a will—issues to which there are adversary parties—constitutes a "case," within the meaning of the Act of Congress defining the jurisdiction of this court over the final judgments and decrees of the court below. If it does not, then it would follow that a proceeding in the Supreme Court of the District to revoke the probate of a will is a "case," the final judgment in which, as held in Carter v. Cutting, may be re-examined by this court, when the value of the matter in dispute is sufficient, while a proceeding in the same court, involving the validity, as a last will and testament, of an instrument offered for probate, and therefore its admission to probate, is not a "case," the final judgment in which can be here reviewed. We cannot assent to this view. The latter proceeding is as much a "case" as the former. One involves the validity of the probate of a will, the other the validity as a will of a paper offered to probate. Upon the determination of each depend rights of property, and in each are adversary parties. There can be no reason why Congress should extend the jurisdiction of this court to proceedings involving the validity of the probate of wills, and not to proceedings involving the validity of an instrument offered for probate as a will. That the issues in the former may be heard and determined, in the first instance, without a jury, and upon evidence before a court, while the issues in the latter may, and if the parties require, must, be tried, in the first instance, by a jury, with the right in the parties to have bills of exceptions showing the rulings of the court, cannot affect the nature of the "case."

There are other decisions that throw some light upon the inquiry as to the jurisdiction of this court to re-examine the final judgments or decrees of the highest court of this District. In the case of Curtis v. Georgetown and Alexandria Turnp. Co., 10 U. S. 6 Cranch, 288 [8: 209], one of the questions was as to the jurisdiction of this court to review the final order of the Circuit Court for the District of Columbia quashing an inquisition, taken by the marshal, condemning land for a turnpike road. Its jurisdiction was maintained. By the words of the Act constituting the Circuit Court of the District, this court was given the jurisdiction to re-examine "any final judgment, order or decree in said circuit court, wherein the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, shall exceed the value," etc. These words, Chief Justice Marshall said, were "more ample than those employed in the Judicial Act." It will be found upon comparing the Statute defining the jurisdiction of this court over the judgments and decrees of the Supreme Court of this District, with the Statute of 1801 creating the Circuit Court of the District, that the words of the former are as broad and ample as the words of the latter. The jurisdiction of this court extends to "the final judgment or decree of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in any case" etc., while the words in the Act of 1801 were "any final judgment, order or decree in said circuit court, wherein the matter in dispute," etc. In Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Church, 86 U. S. 19 Wall. 62 [22: 97], the jurisdiction of this court to re-examine the final order of the Supreme Court of this District confirming an inquisition of damages returned therein, and which was instituted before the marshal and a jury of the District, was sustained. The court said that its power to review the judgments and final orders of the Supreme Court of the District was as ample as its power over the final judgments, orders and decrees of the circuit court which it superseded. These two adjudications illustrate, to some extent, the nature of the cases from the courts of this District which may be re-examined here, and show that the question now before us is to be determined by the Acts of Congress defining the relations between this court and the highest court of this District, and not by reference to the statutes of Maryland, or to the statutes defining our jurisdiction to review the judgments of the circuit courts of the United States, held in the several States. And we may repeat here what Chief Justice Marshall said in Young v. Bank of Alexandria, 8 U. S. 4 Cranch, 384 [2: 655], in which the main question was as to the power of this court to review the judgments of the Circuit Court of this District in a certain class of cases: "The words of the Act of Congress, being as explicit as language can furnish, must comprehend every case not completely excepted from them."

Whatever difficulties may have arisen, in cases like this, while there existed in this District a separate, distinct tribunal, having original cognizance of the probate of wills and the administration of the estates of deceased persons, cannot arise under existing legislation which brings all such business within the cognizance of the Supreme Court of the District, and makes all orders, whether in its special or general term, the orders of that court. As was said in Metropolitan R. Co. v. Moore, 121 U. S. 558, 571, 573 [30:1022, 1026], the Act of 1863 was the introduction into this District of a new organization of its judicial system, under which all the courts previously existing here as separate and independent tribunals, having special and diverse jurisdictions, were consolidated into the new Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. For this reason, it was said that the new statutory provisions should be construed in the sense of the New York system, from which they were imported, rather than in the light of the jurisprudence of Maryland previously prevailing in this District. Referring to the clause in the Constitution declaring that no fact tried by a jury shall be otherwise re-examined in any court of the United States than according to the rules of the common law, the court, speaking by Mr. Justice Matthews, said: "But that rule is not applicable as between the special and general terms of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia as now organized. The appeal from the special to the general term is not an appeal from one court to another, but is simply a step in the progress of the cause during its pendency in the same court. The Supreme Court sitting at special term, and the Supreme Court sitting in the general term, though the judges may differ, is the same tribunal."

We are of opinion that an appeal to the general term from the final order of probate made in the special term, which is not based upon a judicial determination of facts, but merely upon the finding of a jury, of necessity brings into review before the general term all the questions of law that are properly presented by the bill of exceptions taken at the trial. We say of necessity because: (1) The Statute requires the Supreme Court of the District, at general term, to review, upon appeal, any order, judgment or decree of the special term, involving the merits of the action or proceeding. (2) The judgment of the special term admitting a will to probate and record, pursuant to the verdict of the jury upon issues relating to the competency of the deceased to make a will, clearly involves the merits of the controversy, because it establishes the validity as a will of the writing offered for probate. (3) The right of appeal to the general term from such a judgment of the special term would be of no value whatever, in most cases, unless the former could, upon such appeal, determine the questions of law properly presented in the bill of exceptions taken at the trial before the jury. It could not have been intended that an appeal to the general term from the order of probate should only involve an inquiry as to whether that order was in conformity with the verdict of the jury.

So, an appeal to this court from the final judgment of the Supreme Court of the District, affirming the order of probate, of necessity brings here for re-examination all the questions properly arising upon those bills of exceptions. The presentation of the instrument in question for probate as the last will of the deceased, the division of the adversary parties into plaintiffs and defendants, the framing of the issues to be tried by the jury, the trial before the jury, the allowance of bills of exception, the motion for a new trial and the overruling of that motion, the admission of the will to probate and the affirmance of the order of probate, all occurred, not, as under the old system, in different courts but in the same court—the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. If this proceeding, in which there are adversary parties, and the issues in which involve rights of property exceeding in value the jurisdictional amount, be, within the meaning of the Statute, as we hold it is, "a case" which has been finally determined by the Supreme Court of the District, our authority to determine the questions of law, properly raised, and which in the court below, in any of its divisions, controlled the right to have the will probated, cannot be affected by the circumstance that the original order of probate simply followed the finding of the jury, and was made by the court below, held by a single justice, not by the court in general term.

Nor is the question before us affected by the consideration that an order of the general term, merely affirming an order of the special term which overruled a motion for a new trial, where the finding of the jury is favorable to the caveatees, is not itself a final judgment. Such an order is, in legal effect, a direction that a judgment of probate be entered by the same court which denied the new trial. It is only when that judgment is entered in special term, and is followed by judgment of affirmance in general term, to review which a writ of error is sued out, that the jurisdiction of this court attaches. And in exercising this jurisdiction, this court will not, as it was asked to do in Van Ness v. Van Ness and in Brown v. Wiley, review simply the order directing the finding of the jury to be certified; but it will inquire whether the facts embraced in that finding were ascertained in conformity with law. If that inquiry is not to be fruitless we must regard the court, in which the facts have been found and certified, as a unit for the purposes of the writ of error. And when that court makes an order, in general term, which, under the Statute, may be re-examined here, the appeal therefrom brings up for review the questions upon which the final judgment really depends, namely, those presented by the bills of exception taken at the trial of the issues submitted to the jury. It would be strange, indeed, if our re-examination of the final judgment of the Supreme Court of the District could not reach the errors of law which it may have committed in the conduct of that trial and upon which that judgment is based.

For the reasons which have been stated we are of opinion that the motion to dismiss the writ of error for the want of jurisdiction in this court to review the judgment in question was properly overruled at a former term.

And we are of opinion that the last motion to dismiss, which proceeds upon the ground that this case is one of equitable cognizance to be reviewed here, if at all, only upon appeal, must also be overruled. It is, of course, undisputed that a final decree in equity, in the court below, cannot be reviewed here by means of a writ of error. But a proceeding involving the original probate of a last will and testament is not strictly a proceeding in equity, although rights arising out of, or dependent upon, such probate have often been determined by suits in equity. In determining the question of the competency of the deceased to make a will, the parties have an absolute right to a trial by jury, and to bills of exceptions covering all the rulings of the court during the progress of such trial. These are not the ordinary features of a suit in equity. A proceeding in this District for the probate of a will, although of a peculiar character, is nevertheless a case in which there may be adversary parties, and in which there may be a final judgment affecting rights of property. It comes within the very terms of the Act of Congress defining the cases in the Supreme Court of this District, the final judgments in which may be re-examined here. If it be not a case in equity, it is to be brought to this court upon writ of error, although the proceeding may not be technically one at law, as distinguished from equity. The last motion to dismiss must, consequently, be denied.

We come now to consider the merits of the case as disclosed by the bills of exceptions taken by the caveators at the trial. The principal questions before the jury related to the alleged undue influence exerted upon the testator in the execution of the will, and to his capacity to make a disposition of his property according to a fixed purpose. Upon these points the instructions given, at the instance of the caveators, were certainly as full as they could have desired.

The first exception taken by them relates to the exclusion of evidence tending to prove that the decedent said to the witness that he received the bulk of his estate by breaking the will of his grandfather, who was also the ancestor of the caveators, and that his estate consisted, in a great degree, of that property with its accumulations. Argument is not needed to show that the manner in which the decedent acquired his estate was wholly immaterial upon the issue as to whether the paper in question was or not valid as his last will and testament.

The second and third exceptions refer to the exclusion of testimony tending to show, by the declarations of Mrs. Stewart, one of the principal legatees, made about or after the date of the execution of the will, that she had knowledge at that time of the execution of the will and of its provisions. The exclusion of this evidence was right. The proper foundation being laid, the declarations of Mrs. Stewart could have been proved for the purpose of impeaching or discrediting her testimony as a witness for the caveatees. But such declarations, not under oath, whenever made, were not competent for any other purpose upon the trial of the issue as to competency to make a will. She was not the only legatee who was interested in the issues to be tried.

The fourth exception is based upon the refusal of the court to give this instruction: "In order to establish undue influence it is not necessary to prove the influence to have been exercised at the time of the execution of the will or with reference to that act; but if the jury believe from the evidence that the undue influence existed prior to and near the time of the execution of the will, they may infer that the will was executed under the continuance of such influence." It was not error to the prejudice of the caveators to refuse this instruction, for the reason, if there was no other, that the court had already, at their instance, fully instructed the jury upon the subject of undue influence. Upon the motion of the caveators the jury were instructed that if the alleged will or any part of it was obtained by undue influence they should find in their verdict that it was so obtained; that it was not necessary, in order to prove that he was unduly influenced in the execution of the will, that the mind of the deceased be shown to be so weak as to render him incapable of attending to ordinary business; that it was material to inquire not only whether the will expressed his intention at the time of its execution, but how that intention was produced; that influence obtained by flattery, importunity, threats, superiority of will, mind or character, or by what art soever that human thought, ingenuity or cunning might employ, which would give dominion over the will of the deceased to such an extent as to destroy free agency or constrain him against his will to do what he was unable to refuse, was such influence as the law condemned as undue, when exercised by anyone immediately over the testamentary act, whether by direction or indirection, or obtained at one time or another; and that if they believed, from all the facts and circumstances in evidence, that the alleged will was the result of an unsound mind or of the undue influence or importunities of the person or persons surrounding the alleged testator at the time of the execution thereof, or both, they should so say in their verdict.

Under these instructions the jury were at liberty to determine from all the evidence—that bearing directly on the execution of the will as well as that showing that the testator was, in respect to his affairs, generally under the control of others—whether in the execution of the will he was a free agent. This view disposes of the sixth exception, relating to the refusal of the court to instruct the jury that evidence that the legatee, Harriet C. Stewart, improperly influenced the testator as to other important matters and things than the execution of this will was proper to be considered as tending to show that she could and did improperly influence him to make the bequests in her favor or to exclude others of his next of kin and heirs-at-law from a participation in his estate. The evidence upon this subject was before the jury, and under the instructions given, in determining the question whether the undue influence exercised by Mrs. Stewart in respect to other matters extended to or controlled the execution of the will, they could give it such weight as they deemed proper.

The instruction set out in the fifth exception was so manifestly wrong that it is unnecessary to give it special consideration.

The instructions contained in the seventh and eighth exceptions were properly refused upon the ground that the jury had already been instructed that it was both their right and duty to consider all the proof before them, and make such answer to the questions as the whole evidence justified.

The only remaining assignment of error to be noticed is that referring to the following instruction given by the court: "If the jury shall believe the evidence of Mrs. Harriet C. Stewart upon the subject of undue influence, given by her in this case, then the verdict must be in favor of the defendants and in support of the will." It is clear from the record that if Mrs. Stewart did not exercise undue influence over the testator there was no ground to suppose that anyone else did, or to doubt the validity of the paper in question as a last will and testament. Her evidence covered the whole case so completely that if the jury believed what she said they were bound to sustain that paper as a valid will. With her evidence, taking it to be true, the caveators had no ground upon which to contest the probate of the will. While this instruction is apparently liable to the objection that it gave undue prominence to the testimony of a single witness, we are not satisfied, looking at all the evidence, that the court erred in saying to the jury that if Mrs. Stewart told the truth, the case was for the propounders of the will.

Upon the whole case we do not perceive any ground upon which to disturb the finding of the jury.

The judgment of the Supreme Court of the District, in general term, which affirmed the judgment in special term, admitting the paper in question to probate and record as the last will and testament of Levin M. Powell, must be affirmed.

It is so ordered.

Mr. Justice Gray, not having heard the whole argument, took no part in the decision.

v.
CHARLES MORAN ET AL.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 150-180.)

Railroad bonds—agreement as to issue—priority in payment—notice to subsequent holders—holders for value without notice—pre-existing debts—jurisdictional amount—separate holders of bonds.

1. Where a railroad company issued certain of its bonds under an agreement with the person to whom they were issued that it would issue no more of its bonds, the holder of such bonds has a right of priority in payment from the proceeds of a foreclosure sale of the railroad under the mortgage securing the bonds, over holders of other subsequently issued bonds of the company secured by the same mortgage, who took their bonds with actual notice of the agreement.
2. No one receiving the bonds, thus improperly issued, who had notice of the restriction which the company, by such agreement, imposed upon its authority, can be deemed a bona fide holder for value, although they were used in payment of the company's debts and obligations and in discharge of obligations assumed by some of its officers.
3. If any of the holders paid value for them without actual notice of the restriction imposed by the company upon its authority to issue them, they would be deemed bona fide holders for value, unaffected by the said agreement and entitled to share in the proceeds of the sale upon terms of equality with the person holding the bonds issued under the agreement.
4. And they would be deemed holders for value, even if they took the bonds in payment of, or as security for, the company's pre-existing debts.
5. Where the amount of bonds at par value, held by any one of the respective appellants owning them, is not sufficient to give this court jurisdiction to review the decree below, so far as it affects him, the appeal will be dismissed as to him.

6. Each claim is distinct and separate from the claims of all other appellants; and the right of each claimant to be regarded as a bona fide holder for value depends upon the special circumstances under which he took the bonds now held by him.

Argued Jan. 30, 1890. Decided March 3, 1890.

APPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Nevada that the complainants were entitled to payment of their bonds first out of the proceeds of the mortgaged premises and that after such payment the defendants were entitled to participate equally in a surplus remaining, each in proportion to the amount of his bond. Decree affirmed as to certain of the defendants and reversed as to others, and appeal dismissed as to others.

Opinion below, 20 Fed. Rep. 80.

Statement by Mr. Justice Harlan:

The "Nevada and Oregon Railroad Company," a corporation of the State of Nevada, by its mortgage or deed of trust, executed April 25, 1881, bargained, sold and conveyed to the Union Trust Company of New York all of the property, franchises and estate, real and personal, then existing and to be acquired, including its line of road constructed or to be constructed or completed, to secure the payment of three thousand bonds of one thousand dollars each, to be issued by the mortgagor, and made payable on the first day of June, 1890, at the City of New York, with interest, semi-annually, at the rate of eight per cent per annum. Each bond contained an agreement that if there was a continuous default for six months in the payment of interest, the principal and all arrearages of interest thereon should, at the option of the holder, become immediately due and payable.

Of the three thousand bonds authorized to be executed by the railroad company, only six hundred were issued and certified by the trustee. The appellees, Moran Brothers, became the holders for value of 810 of the bonds so certified, paying therefor $248,000. In respect to those bonds, there was such default in meeting the interest thereon that appellees became entitled to declare the principal due and payable. And having so declared, the Union Trust Company brought suit in the court below for the foreclosure of the mortgage or deed of trust, the sale of the mortgaged property, and the application of the proceeds of sale in payment of the bonds held by Moran Brothers, and of such other bonds as were entitled to share in the proceeds.

The present suit was brought by Moran Brothers against the appellants as the holders of 147 of the 600 bonds certified by the trustees. It proceeds upon the theory that as between the appellees holding the 310 bonds first issued, and the appellants holding the 147 subsequently issued, the former were entitled to priority in the distribution of the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property.

It appears from the evidence that "The Nevada and Oregon Railroad Company," a Nevada corporation, entered into a written contract, of date August 26, 1880, with one Thomas Moore, for the construction by him of certain divisions of its road, whose aggregate length was one hundred and eighty-five miles. A part of the consideration for Moore's undertaking this work was the representation of the company, embodied in the contract, that "fifty-year eight per cent first-mortgage bonds, to the extent only of ten thousand dollars per mile, and capital stock to the extent only of twenty thousand dollars per mile for the first one hundred and eighty-five miles will be issued, making a total of eighteen hundred and fifty thousand dollars in first-mortgage bonds, and thirty-seven hundred thousand dollars, par value in stock, upon the entire one hundred and eighty-five miles." The contract further provided for the payment to Moore of $100,000 in lawful money, $310,000 in first-mortgage bonds, and $450,000 in the stock of the railroad company, at par, for the Reno division as far as Beckwith Pass. The contractor was to have all the first-mortgage bonds as the work of construction progressed.

This contract was supplemented by another one, executed December 4, 1880, whereby the time and order of performance as well as of payments were changed. It provided that the Reno division, from Reno to Beckwith Pass, should be first constructed; that "upon the shipment of 1,000 tons of rails and splices the company should pay to the contractor $200,000 in cash, and upon arrival of same at Reno $150,000 in first-mortgage bonds and $300,000 in stock, and upon shipment of balance of rails for the present work $160,000 in first-mortgage bonds and $150,000 in stock;" that "the company shall deposit with the trustee in New York, on or before January 10, 1881, $10,000 in cash, and the $450,000 in stock, and, on or before January 25, 1881, the $310,000 in the first-mortgage bonds;" that this contract should not be "construed as abating or impairing any portion of the contract of August 26, 1880;" and that "the entire stock to be issued upon the line from Reno to the temporary terminus as herein stated [Beckwith Pass] shall be limited to $600,000, without reference to any excess in distance over thirty miles, and the first-mortgage bonds upon the same to $310,000."

A separate contract was made on the same day with reference to the construction of the road from Beckwith Pass to the Oregon line.

The company having failed to make payments to Moore, as it had agreed to do, on account of work done on the Reno division, another contract was made February 1, 1881, by which the company stipulated to deliver to the contractor the $450,000 of stock and the $310,000 first-mortgage bonds as soon as the certificates and bonds could be engrossed and signed. It was provided that this contract should not impair the contracts previously made between the parties.

On the 25th of April, 1881, the "Nevada and Oregon Railroad Company," the company first above named, was organized. It was the successor, and acquired all the rights, franchises and property of "The Nevada and Oregon Railroad Company" of 1880, and assumed to meet all the contract obligations, and to pay all the debts, of the old company. The mortgage, heretofore referred to, of April 25, 1881, was executed by the new company.

By contract, of date April 26, 1881, the new company adopted, confirmed and renewed Moore's contracts with the old company, and, subsequently, May 24, 1881, the contract for the construction of the road from Beckwith Pass to the Oregon line was extended one year.

Between the last two dates, namely, on March 28, 1881, the appellees, Moran Bros., and Moore entered into a contract, by which the former agreed to pay the latter the sum of $248,000, in specified installments, upon completion, within certain periods named, of five, ten, twenty-one, twenty-six and thirty-one miles of Reno division against the delivery of the first-mortgage eight per cent bonds of the "Nevada and Oregon Railroad Company." By that contract Moran Bros. became entitled to receive the bonds on installments, as the above number of miles were constructed.

Subsequent transactions between the parties are so clearly and succinctly stated in the opinion delivered in this cause by Judge Sabin (20 Fed. Rep. 80), that the following extract is made from it:

"Moore went on under these various contracts and graded 32 miles on the first section north from Reno and commenced grading on the 170 miles running north from Beckwith Pass. He also laid about 17 miles of track from Reno northerly, and provided certain rolling stock and other materials. Moore became embarrassed, and on about November 16, 1881, abandoned his contracts and left the State. From that time forward the company assumed the management of the road and conducted its future operations as best it could. The company was in a very embarrassed condition. It was largely in debt and without money or resources of any kind to meet its liabilities. It had attempted to build and equip a railroad without first having provided any adequate means for so doing.

"On the twenty-fifth of March, 1882, Moore, as party of the first part, the railroad company, defendant, of the second part, D. W. Balch, H. J. McMurray, A. H. Manning, W. F. Berry and C. A. Bragg, of the third part, and Alvin Burt, as trustee, of the fourth part, entered into an agreement, the object of which was to adjust, as therein provided, the then unsettled business matters between Moore and the railroad company. This contract recognizes the fact that the railroad company had issued to Moore these 310 first mortgage bonds; that he had negotiated them with Moran Bros., complainants in the second above-entitled suit; that he had been paid for 210 of said bonds by Moran Bros. and that they held the remainder of said bonds subject to contract with Moore, to be paid for as the road was completed. By this contract Moore surrendered his rights in these bonds for the benefit of the railroad company, which subsequently drew the money due upon them. Section 11 of this contract is as follows:

"The parties of the second and third part hereby covenant and agree for themselves and the other stockholders, and for the creditors of the party of the first part as follows, viz.: . . . (b) That no second mortgage shall be made, issued or recorded upon said railroad or any portion thereof.

"That the issue of first-mortgage bonds thereon shall be limited to $10,000 per mile of completed road, or such an amount that the annual interest charge thereon shall not exceed $300 per mile of completed road, and also that the issue of capital stock of said company shall be limited to $20,000 per mile of said railroad."

"Pursuant to this contract, on the twenty-sixth of April following, Moore and Moran Bros. join in a communication to Balch, as president of said railroad company, informing him of the terms upon which he can, as the road is completed, draw upon complainants for $75,000, the balance due upon these 100 bonds. These funds were so drawn and with them the road was completed the 81 miles. It should be noted that this contract of March 25, 1882, was entered into by Balch as president of, and on behalf of, said railroad company, pursuant to a resolution of the board of directors of said company adopted January 13, 1882, prior to his departure from Reno to New York for the purpose of endeavoring to effect a settlement of the business of the company. And this contract, if not formally ratified by the directors of the company by resolution adopted to that effect, was actually ratified by the company by its acting upon it, carrying out to some extent, at least, its provisions, and accepting the benefits arising therefrom, and especially in drawing and using the balance due upon the 100 bonds paid by Moran Bros. after its execution. Now, all of these various contracts conclusively show this: that this railroad company, defendant, and its predecessor had repeatedly contracted with Moore and promised and held out to the public that upon no part of the line of its road should there be issued more than $10,000 in first-mortgage bonds for each mile of completed road. It was upon this condition and agreement that Moran Bros. purchased these bonds. Charles Moran, one of the complainants, testifies that the railroad company issued its circulars to that effect; that he saw them; that this limitation was the condition in the purchase of the bonds; that they would not have advanced $11,000 per mile upon the road. He is supported in this by the testimony of Moore, Fowler and Balch, and by every contract in evidence executed either by the railroad company, defendant, or by its predecessor, and subsequently ratified by the Nevada and Oregon Railroad Company; and this testimony is wholly uncontradicted."

The decree below was accompanied with a finding of facts. Among the facts so found were the following:

"That before and at the time the 810 bonds were sold the railroad company, in consideration of their purchase, obligated itself in writing that it would not issue or sell any more than ten of said bonds, or $10,000 worth, for each mile of completed road, and no more than 310 for or upon the Reno division, the defendants and each of them having notice of such agreement;

"That while these agreements were in force, and after Moran Bros. had purchased and paid for the 810 bonds now held by them, the company, by and through its then officers and trustees, defendant Balch, trustee and president; King, trustee and secretary; Bragg, Manning and Berry, trustees; McMurray, stockholder; and Deal and Webster, attorneys, issued and advised, caused and procured to be issued the bonds mentioned in the answer, 147 in number, the defendants and each of them well knowing at the time the terms and conditions of the contracts limiting the issue of bonds, and that complainants had purchased for value the 810 bonds mentioned in the bill of complaint;

"That the 147 bonds, and each of them, were procured from the Union Trust Company of New York by defendant Balch, under and in pursuance of a resolution of the board of trustees of the railroad company, adopted by Balch, Bragg, Manning, Berry and King, acting as such board, and for the purpose expressed in the resolution, and represented to the Union Trust Company, of negotiating them for value, and after said bonds were so procured the board delivered them to the original holders thereof without payment therefor of any sum of money whatever;

"That, except the 10 bonds issued to the defendants Webster and Deal, the remaining 137 of the 147 bonds were delivered for and in consideration of pre-existing debts, and principally for debts owing by Moore and not debts owing by the company, and in large part for claims that Balch, McMurray, Manning, Berry and Bragg had assumed and agreed to pay; the bonds issued to Webster and Deal having been delivered in consideration of professional legal services to be rendered by them as solicitors for the defendants, and not delivered until after this suit was commenced; and,

"That the defendants, who in the answer are alleged to hold a portion of the 147 bonds, and each of them, received such bonds and hold the same as security for debts which existed at and before the time the bonds were acquired by them, and none of such persons are bona fide purchasers of said bonds for value."

Upon this state of facts it was decreed that the complainants were entitled to have the amount of their bonds, principal and interest, paid out of the proceeds of the mortgaged premises, and that none of the defendants were entitled to participate in or share such proceeds until after the payment in full of the principal and interest of the 310 bonds, nor unless there should be a surplus remaining; and if there should be such surplus, then the defendants were entitled to participate in the distribution, each in proportion to the amount of the bonds held by him.

Stanton v. Alabama & C. R. Co. 2 Woods, 523, 528.

Mr. Wheeler H. Peckham for appellees.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

It appears satisfactorily from the evidence that when appellees purchased the 310 bonds from Moore, the latter had contracts with the railroad company, by which it was restricted in issuing bonds to $10,000, par value, for each mile of completed road. It was that feature of the several contracts between the company and Moore that gave value, in the commercial world, to the bonds delivered to him. And the benefit of that restriction upon the issuing of bonds necessarily passed to those who purchased them from Moore. The issuing of bonds in excess of those delivered to Moore, and by him sold to Moran Bros., was in palpable violation of the company's agreement with him; for, as is conceded, the 310 bonds, held by appellees, represented, on the above basis, all of the completed road. No one receiving the bonds, thus improperly issued, who had notice of the restriction which the company, by the contracts with Moore, imposed upon its authority, could be deemed a bona fide holder for value. The circumstances under which the 147 bonds were obtained by the railroad company from the trustee, the Union Trust Company, are stated, with substantial accuracy, in the finding of facts made by the court below. Those who procured those bonds to be issued by the railroad company had knowledge of the want of authority in the company to put them on the market to the prejudice of the rights of the appellees as the holders of the 310 bonds. They were used in payment of the company's debts and obligations and in discharge of obligations assumed by some of its officers. The purpose for which they were issued and used, however meritorious in itself, as between the company and those who originally took them, cannot affect the rights of the appellees arising under the company's contracts with Moore, as the original owner of the 310 bonds.

We do not mean to say that the 147 bonds and each of them are absolutely void for every purpose and by whomsoever held. If the present holders paid value for them without actual notice of the restriction imposed by the company upon its authority to issue them, they would be deemed bona fide holders for value, unaffected by the agreements between Moore and the railroad company. And they would be deemed holders for value, even if they took the bonds in payment of, or as security for, the company's pre-existing debts. Brooklyn City & N. R. Co. v. National Bank of the Republic, 102 U. S. 14 [26: 61].

The mortgage of 1881 does not contain any provision that gives priority to some of the holders of the bonds secured by it over other bonds of the same issue. If it did, all holders of the bonds so secured would be bound to take notice of such provisions, the mortgage having been duly recorded in Nevada. Nor is notice of the rights secured to Moore, as the holder of the 310 bonds, to be imputed to the defendants because the contracts between him and the company, or some of them, were put upon record. We do not understand that, by the law of Nevada, such instruments were required to be recorded, or that the record of them carries with it notice to all the world of their contents. Gen. Stat. Nev. 1883, chap. 18, §§ 2571, 2593. The question, therefore, is one of actual notice upon the part of the defendants when they took the bonds held by them respectively, of the limitation upon the company's authority to issue bonds in excess of the $10. We thus limit the inquiry as to notice, because it is clear that the defendants must have known, when they took the bonds, that the $10 had been previously issued, and that that amount more than represented completed road, on the basis of $10,000 a mile.

Upon a close scrutiny of the evidence we are of opinion that the decree below is correct as to the 56 bonds held by McMurray, the 28 bonds held by the First National Bank of Reno or by Bender for Manning & Berry, and the fraction of a bond held by Bender for the last-named firm. They were received by McMurray and Manning & Berry, respectively, with actual notice, derived from their relations with the railroad company, of its agreement not to issue on the Reno division more than $10 bonds, or $10,000 of bonds for each mile of completed road, and with knowledge, when they took the bonds, that the number thus limited had been previously issued to the contractor Moore. In respect to the 13 bonds held by Wright, the like number held by Watkins, and the 5 bonds held by Schooling, the evidence shows that the present holders took them for value from the first holders, without notice as to the restriction which the company, by its agreements with Moore, had imposed upon its authority to issue bonds on the Reno division. They were entitled to share in the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property, in proportion to the amount of bonds held by them respectively, and upon terms of equality with Moran Bros.

As to the remaining bonds, the appeal must be dismissed, because the amount, at par value, held by each of the respective appellants owning them, is not sufficient to give this court jurisdiction to review the decree below, so far as it affects them. No one of those claims, principal and interest, exceeded, at the time of the decree below, the sum of five thousand dollars. Each claim is distinct and separate from the claims of all other appellants; and the right of each claimant to be regarded as a bona fide holder for value depends upon the special circumstances under which he took the bonds now held by him. Gibson v. Shufeldt, 122 U. S. 27 [30:1089]; Jewell v. Knight, 123 U. S. 426, 432 [31:190, 192].

The decree below as to H. J. McMurray, A. H. Manning and W. F. Berry, partners as Manning & Berry; Charles T. Bender, trustee for Manning & Berry, and the First National Bank of Reno, as trustee for Manning & Berry, must be affirmed; and reversed as to the appellants William Wright, A. A. Watkins and Jerry Schooling, and the cause, as to those parties, must be remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion. The appeal by all the other appellants must be dismissed. The appellants Wright, Watkins and Schooling will recover against the appellees their costs in this court.

It is so ordered.

Specific performance, when granted or refused.

Specific performance is not an absolute right. It rests in judicial discretion,—exercised according to the principles of equity and with reference to the facts of the case. Hennessey v. Woolworth, 128 U. S. 438 (32:500); Nickerson v. Nickerson, 127 U. S. 668 (32:314); Love v. Welch, 97 N. C. 200; Barrett v. Foreney, 82 Va. 269; Ramsey v. Gheen, 99 N. C. 215; King v. Gsantner, 23 Neb. 795; Kelly v. Cent. Pac. R. Co. 74 Cal. 557; Simon v. Wildt, 84 Ky. 157; Knott v. Shepherdstown Mfg. Co. 30 W. Va. 790; Minneapolis & St. Louis R. Co. v. Cox, 76 Iowa, 308.

A court of chancery will not undertake to compel the specific performance of an agreement to take care of and provide for the complainant in case of her general debility or sickness. Mowers v. Fogg, 45 N. J. Eq. 120.

Equity will not intervene to compel specific performance of contracts for personal services, involving the exercise of special skill, judgment and discretion, which are continuous in their nature, them is to make a contract which the parties have not made for themselves.

3. Even where time is made material, by express stipulation, the failure of one of the parties to perform a condition within the particular time limited will not defeat his right to specific performance, if the condition be subsequently performed without unreasonable delay, and no circumstances have intervened that would render it unjust or inequitable to give such relief.
4. The discretion which a court of equity has to grant or refuse specific performance is always exercised with reference to the circumstances of the case and is often controlled by the conduct of the party who bases his refusal to perform the contract upon the failure of the other party to strictly comply with its conditions.
5. Where a contract is payable in money, the acceptance of numerous payments in current funds justifies the inference that current funds will be accepted for subsequent payments and calls for a notice of intention to only receive coin or legal-tender paper for subsequent payments, and without such notice excuses failure to pay coin or legal-tender on the very day the money is due.
6. To permit the enforcement of a forfeiture of the contract under such circumstances for want of payment of subsequent installments in coin or legal-tender notes, where current funds were offered, and, on refusal to receive them, legal-tender notes and coin were tendered soon afterwards, in payment, would enable the creditor to take advantage of his own wrong.
7. The provision in the contract forbidding its modification or change, "except by entry thereon in writing signed by both parties," coupled with the provision that no court should relieve plaintiff from a failure to comply strictly and literally with the contract, cannot be applied where the efficient cause of his failure to comply strictly and literally with the contract was the conduct of the other party.
8. Under such circumstances, the failure of the plaintiff to pay in coin or legal-tender paper did not work a forfeiture of the contract, and does not stand in the way of a decree for specific performance.
9. After the surrender by defendant of the notes due and his formal notification to plaintiff that he regarded the contract as forfeited and would not receive any money from him, plaintiff was not bound, as a condition of his right to claim specific performance, to go through the useless ceremony of tendering payment of the note.
10. Bankers are not agents of the owner to receive payment of notes by reason simply of the fact that the notes were made payable at their bank, running through an indefinite period of time. Iron Age Pub. Co. v. West. U. Teleg. Co. 83 Ala. 498.

Equity is never bound to decree specific performance unless the justice of the case, as drawn from all the facts, requires it. Ford v. Euker (Va.) 13 Va. L. J. 370; Ramsey v. Gheen, 99 N. C. 215; Buckley v. Patterson, 39 Minn. 250; Eaton v. Eaton, 6 New Eng. Rep. 815, 64 N. H. 493; Duncan v. Cent. Pass. R. Co. 85 Ky. 525; Mansfield v. Sherman, 81 Me. 365.

Fraudulent misrepresentations by which the defendant was induced to enter into a contract constitute a defense to a suit for specific performance. Kelly v. Cent. Pac. R. Co. 74 Cal. 567.

Specific performance of a contract of sale will not be enforced where it is shown that there was a mutual mistake as to the thing sold. Fort Smith v. Brogan, 49 Ark. 306.

A contract to convey real estate, entered into by defendant under a mistake, will not be specifically enforced. Buckley v. Patterson, 39 Minn. 250; Hess v. Evans (N. J.) 13 Cent. Rep. 373; Rushton v. Thompson, 35 Fed. Rep. 635; Wilson v. McLaughlin, 11 Colo. 465; Mansfield v. Sherman, 81 Me. 365.

A court of chancery cannot decree specific performance of an agreement to convey property which has no existence, or to which the defendant has no title, although the want of title is caused by the defendant's own act,—as by his conveyance to a bona fide purchaser. Kennedy v. Hazelton, 128 U. S. 667 (32: 576).

Specific performance should never be granted unless the terms of the agreement sought to be enforced are clearly proved. Hennessey v. Woolworth, 128 U. S. 438 (32: 500); Nickerson v. Nickerson, 127 U. S. 668 (32: 314); Prater v. Sears, 77 Ga. 28.

Specific performance of a contract will not be enforced, unless the remedy as well as the obligation is mutual, and alike attainable by both parties to the agreement. Iron Age Pub. Co. v. West. U. Teleg. Co. 83 Ala. 498; Anson v. Townsend, 73 Cal. 415; Simon v. Wildt, 84 Ky. 157.

This rule does not not apply where the condition originally lacking has been supplied by filing a bill for specific performance by the party not bound. Woodruff v. Woodruff, 1 L. R. A. 380, 44 N. J. Eq. 349.

When time is not of the essence of the contract, it may be specifically enforced by the purchaser after the time agreed. Day v. Hunt, 112 N. Y. 191; Cannfield v. Tillotson, 25 Neb. 357.

Specific performance will not be granted after an unreasonable delay. Nickerson v. Nickerson, 127 U. S. 668 (32: 314); Requa v. Snow, 76 Cal. 590; Simpson v. Atkinson, 39 Minn. 238; Love v. Welch, 97 N. C. 200; Northrup v. Stevens, 39 Minn. 105.

Specific performance is not barred by delay of complainant occasioned by defendants tendering a deed defectively acknowledged by one of them and not joined in by the wife of another. Johnston v. Jones, 85 Ala. 286.

A purchaser cannot specifically enforce an agreement to sell which was upon a condition that has never been performed. Wainman v. Hampton, 110 N. Y. 429; Butler v. Archer, 78 Iowa, 551.

A demand for a deed need not be made as a condition of specific performance, where the party bound to give the deed has repudiated the contract or denied the right of the other to receive the deed. Harshman v. Mitchell, 117 Ind. 312.

A formal tender of the purchase money before commencing a suit to specifically enforce a contract for the sale of land is rendered unnecessary by a refusal to consider the question of sale under the contract, and a denial of liability thereon. Bradford v. Foster, 87 Tenn. 4.

and moneys left with them to be used as payment are not thereby the moneys of the owner of the notes.

11. Under the circumstances it was not absolutely necessary that plaintiff should have brought the money into court for the defendant at the time he filed his bill; his offer in the bill to perform all the conditions and stipulations of the contract was sufficient to give him a standing in court.
12. But the decree of specific performance ought not to become operative until he brings into court for the defendant the full amount necessary to pay off the notes for principal and interest.
13. The defendant is not entitled to interest after the respective tenders were made, because it does not appear that the plaintiff has, since the tenders, realized any interest upon the moneys left by him for defendant at the bank.

Submitted Dec. 4, 1889. Decided March 3, 1890.

APPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Nebraska in favor of plaintiff in a suit to compel specific performance of a contract for the sale of lands. Affirmed, but the decree suspended and not to become operative until plaintiff pays into court the amount of the notes given for the unpaid portion of the purchase money.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Samuel P. Davidson, for appellee:

A forfeiture is not warranted by the proofs.

Robinson v. Cheney, 17 Neb. 680, 681.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit to compel the specific performance by the appellant, Cheney, of a written agreement entered into May 28, 1880, between him and the appellee, Libby, whereby the former demised and let to the latter the possession and use of, and contracted, bargained and agreed to sell to him, two sections of unimproved land in Gage County, Nebraska. The defendant claimed that the contract was forfeited, long before this suit was brought, by Libby's failure to comply with its stipulations. Upon that ground he resists the granting of the relief asked. The circuit court adjudged that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree.

The question to be determined is, whether there was any such default upon the part of the plaintiff, Libby, as deprived him of the right to specific performance.

The sum agreed upon for the possession, use, occupancy and control of the land was $1,361.00 yearly, represented in Libby's notes, and in the taxes, assessed and to be assessed against the land. The price for the land was $8,960, of which $1,600 was paid at the date of the contract. The balance was to be paid, "without notice or demand therefor," in annual installments at the times specified in promissory notes, of even date with the contract, which were executed by Libby to Cheney, at Tecumseh, Nebraska. The notes were made payable to the order of Cheney, at the office of Russell & Holmes, private bankers in that city. Eight of the notes represented the balance of the principal debt—each one being for $920—and were payable respectively in three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine and ten years after date. The remaining ten notes represented the annual interest.

Libby agreed to meet the notes as they respectively matured, pay the taxes on the land for 1880 and subsequent years, and, during that year (the weather permitting), break two hundred acres, and build on the land a frame barn of sixteen feet by twenty, and a frame dwelling-house of a story and a half. Cheney undertook to pay the taxes of 1879 and previous years, and bound himself to convey the land, in fee simple, with the ordinary covenants of warranty (reserving the right of way that might be demanded for public use for railways and common roads), upon the payment by Libby of the several sums of money aforesaid at the times limited, and the strict performance of all and singular the conditions of the contract.

It was further stipulated between the parties:

That "time and punctuality are material and essential ingredients in this contract;"

That if Libby failed to perform and complete all and each of the payments, agreements and stipulations in the agreement mentioned, "strictly and literally," the contract should become void, in which event all the interests created by the contract in favor of Libby, or derived from him, should immediately cease and determine, and revert to and revest in Cheney, without any declaration of forfeiture, or re-entry, and without any right in Libby of reclamation or compensation for moneys paid or services performed;

That in case the contract was forfeited, Cheney could take immediate possession of the land, with all the crops, improvements, fixtures, privileges and appurtenances thereon or appertaining thereto, Libby to remain bound for all taxes then assessed against the premises, and all installments of principal or interest then due on the contract to be regarded as rent;

That whenever one half of the purchase price was paid, with all accrued interest and taxes, Cheney should execute a deed, as provided for in the contract, and take notes and a mortgage for the remaining payments to run the unexpired time; and

That when Libby's right to purchase the land terminated by reason of nonperformance of his covenants, or his failure to make the payments, or any of them, at the time specified, he should be deemed to have only the rights of a tenant, and to hold the land under the contract as a lease, subject to the statute regulating the relation of landlord and tenant, with the right in Cheney to enforce the provisions of the contract, and recover possession of the land, with all the fixtures, privileges, crops and appurtenances thereon, as if the same was held by forcible detainer.

The agreement also contained these stringent provisions: That no court should relieve Libby from a failure to comply strictly and literally with the contract; that no modification or change of the contract could be made except by entry thereon in writing signed by both parties; and that no oversight or omission to take notice of any default by Libby should be deemed a waiver by Cheney of the right to do so at any time.

Libby went into possession under the contract. He and those in possession under him had, prior to the commencement of this suit on the 26th of February, 1887, broken up and cultivated most of the land, and made improvements thereon of a permanent and substantial character. Nearly all of these improvements were made prior to the first of January, 1885. He met all the obligations imposed upon him with respect to the breaking up of the land and its improvement by the erection thereon of buildings. His evidence, which is uncontradicted, was: "We have broken up and cultivated about 1,200 acres; built five houses and stable and outbuildings to each house; made wells to each house; erected two wind-mills; fenced one whole section with wire and posts and fenced half of other section with hedge; we have set out some fruit trees and shrubbery, all to the value of about ten thousand dollars; all was done under and in pursuance of this contract."

He also met promptly all the notes given for principal and interest maturing prior to 1885. The total amount paid by him prior to that date, including $1,600 paid at the execution of the contract, was in excess of $5,000.

But the defendant insists that there was such default upon the part of the plaintiff with respect to the notes maturing May 28, 1885, as worked a forfeiture of the contract, and, consequently, that specific performance cannot be decreed. The precise grounds upon which this contention rests, as well as those upon which the plaintiff relies in support of his claim for relief, cannot be clearly understood without a careful scrutiny of all that passed between the parties in reference to the lands in question.

184 U. S.

The plaintiff resided in Iowa, while the defendant resided at Jerseyville, Illinois. The notes given by the former were upon blanks furnished by the latter's agent, who caused them to be made payable in Tecumseh, Nebraska, at the private bank of Russell & Holmes, through whom the defendant had, for many years prior to 1880, made collections, and with whom he had kept an account. The first payment under the contract was made in bank drafts delivered to the defendant's agent in Tecumseh. All the other notes falling due in 1880 to 1884, inclusive (except the interest note maturing in 1882), were paid by bank drafts sent to Russell & Holmes, who placed the proceeds to the credit of Cheney in their bank. The checks of the latter upon that bank, on account of those deposits, were always paid in current funds. The draft to pay the interest note for 1882 was also sent to Russell & Holmes, but as Cheney had not transmitted that note to them, the draft was forwarded to him. He received it and sent the note to Libby. In no single instance prior to 1885 did he make objection to the particular mode in which Libby provided for the payment of his notes, or intimate his purpose to demand coin or legal-tender notes in payment. In every instance, except as to the interest note for 1882, the notes were paid at the banking house of Russell & Holmes, and by drafts sent to and used by them for that purpose.

But it is quite apparent from the evidence that Cheney, in 1885, indulged the hope that he could bring about a forfeiture of the contract for noncompliance upon the part of Libby with its provisions, and that he would, in that or some other way, get the land back. It is proper to advert to the circumstances justifying that conclusion.

On the 4th of March, 1885,—all previous installments having been punctually met—Libby offered, in writing, to pay all the principal notes mentioned in the contract, as well as the interest note due May 28, 1885, if a deed was made to him. To this offer Cheney replied, under date of March 19, 1885: "Your letter of the 4th has just reached me. I have no papers with me and cannot attend to the matter as you request. I expect to go to New Orleans to the Exposition and to be at home in time to see to it properly. If I am behind time no harm will come to you." Libby wrote again, under date of May 20, 1885, renewing the offer contained in his letter of March 4. Under date of May 28, 1885—only five days before the notes for 1885 matured—Cheney replied: "Yours of 20th is received. I think it probable that I can do as you suggest, but I will be in Beatrice [the county seat of Gage County, where the lands are] between the 1st and 10th of June on other business, and will then make inquiries and see if I can lend the money to good hands, and will then let you know more certainly."

On the 26th of May, 1885, Libby sent to Russell & Holmes a draft upon the First National Bank of Omaha, Nebraska, made by one Stuart, a private banker doing business at Madison, in the same State, for $1,251.20, which was the amount of Libby's two notes for principal and interest that matured May 28, 1885. It was sent in payment of those notes, and was received for that purpose by Russell & Holmes. They accepted it for the amount of money named in it, and were, therefore, ready to take up Libby's two notes when presented for payment at their office.

On the 28th of May, 1885, A. W. Cross, of the First National Bank of Jerseyville, Illinois—where Cheney resided—appeared at the banking-house of Russell & Holmes, and made a deposit of $5,000, all in current funds, and a good portion of it in bills of his own bank. While there he inquired of Russell & Holmes (without disclosing the reason for his inquiry) whether they kept "a legal-tender revenue [reserve], as national banks were required to do." He was told that they did not, but that a supply of legal-tender was on hand. About two o'clock of the 1st of June—which, as May 31 fell on Sunday, was the last day of grace for Libby's two notes due in 1885 (Neb. Stat. chap. 41, § 8)—one of Cheney's attorneys went into the bank of Russell & Holmes, and asked if he could be given $5,000 in legal-tender notes in exchange for other currency. His request was complied with. At a later hour of the same day Cheney appeared in the bank, without having responded to Libby's offer, twice made, to pay all the notes for the principal debt, and the interest note maturing in 1885. He came there with checks, drawn by Cross, to be cashed, and asked as an accommodation to him that they be paid in legal-tender notes. He was promptly accommodated to the extent of $2,500. But when he asked for $2,500 more in legal-tender notes, Holmes suspected there was a scheme to exhaust his bank of legal-tender notes, and refused to comply with this request. After Russell & Holmes had thus, by way of accommodation, paid to Cheney and his attorney seven thousand five hundred dollars in legal-tender notes—but not until the hour for closing the bank, on that day, against the public had passed—Libby's two notes were presented by Cheney, and payment thereof demanded in coin or legal-tender notes. The bank offered to pay in current funds, as they had previously done in respect to Libby's notes, but Cheney declined to take in payment anything except coin or legal-tender notes. The notes were then placed by him in the hands of a notary, who was conveniently present, and the latter presented them for payment, announcing that he would not receive anything except United States notes or legal-tender funds. Payment in such funds was refused by the bank and the usual protest was made. The notary and Cheney then left the room, the latter saying, before leaving, that he would "call in the morning." But he did not call the next or upon any subsequent day.

Within fifteen or twenty minutes after Cheney and his notary left the bank, Holmes, of the firm of Russell & Holmes, went to the office of the notary to find Cheney and pay the notes in the funds demanded. But Cheney was not there, and the notes were in his hands. Inquiry was made at the principal hotel and at other places, but he could not be found. Holmes was informed that he had left town.

Libby having been notified of the protest of the notes, notwithstanding he had, in due time, sent a bank draft to Russell & Holmes to be used in paying them, directed Stuart, the banker at Madison, Nebraska, to go immediately to Tecumseh. The latter arrived there on the 9th of June, and, having learned what passed between Cheney and Russell & Holmes, determined to pay off the notes in such funds as Cheney demanded. He informed the notary, who had protested the notes for nonpayment, that he was then ready, in behalf of Libby, to pay them in gold. The latter did not have the notes, did not know where Cheney had gone, and said that the latter "did not want the money, but that he wanted the land back."

Stuart having knowledge of Cheney's letter, in which he notified Libby of his purpose to visit Beatrice between the 1st and 10th of June, went to that place in search of Cheney, but could not find him.

Libby wrote to Cheney, under date of June 12, 1885, informing him that gold was deposited at Russell & Holmes' office to pay the two notes due May 28, 1885. This letter was received by Cheney in due course of mail. On the 20th of June, 1885, the latter inclosed to Libby twelve unpaid notes (including the two due May 28, 1885), saying that the contract of May 28, 1880, was "terminated and ended by your failure to pay the two notes due May 28, 1885, and otherwise to comply with the contract, which is now null and void." How Libby had "otherwise" failed to meet his obligations under the contract does not appear. Under date of June 23, 1885, Russell & Holmes advised Cheney by letter of the fact that they were authorized by Libby to pay, and they were ready to pay, the notes due May 28, including protest fees, in legal-tender notes or coin. Libby, under date of June 25, 1885, replied to Cheney's letter, saying: "I refuse to accept said notes, excepting the two which were paid, and have this day sent them to your bankers, Messrs. Russell & Holmes, of Tecumseh, Neb., for your use and benefit and subject to your order. I shall make payments as fast as they become due, and shall require you to execute a conveyance of the land in accordance with the terms of the contract. It will be useless for you to send me any of these notes, except you send them for payment." Under date of June 29, 1885, Russell & Holmes advised Cheney that they had received from Libby his notes, amounting to $6,679.20, subject to his, Cheney's, order. The latter wrote, July 9, 1885, in reply to Libby's letter of June 25th, that he did not recognize the notes placed with Russell & Holmes as being subject to his order.

On the 20th of August, 1885, Libby, by his attorney, made a tender to Russell & Holmes of $120 in gold coin as a balance of one half of the purchase money, and offered to surrender the contract and execute a mortgage and notes for the balance of the purchase money, as stipulated in the contract, and demanded a deed; of all which Cheney was notified. The latter replied, under date of August 22, 1885, that he would not receive any money from Libby, and refused to make a deed.

It further appears that the plaintiff punctually paid into the bank of Russell & Holmes the amounts of the notes due in 1886 and 1887. The funds remained in that bank and are now there, subject to Cheney's order, on presenting the notes. Of these payments he was promptly informed.

Shortly before the commencement of this suit Libby again offered to Cheney to pay in cash all the unpaid portion of the principal debt named in the contract, and all interest due at that date. He also renewed his offer to execute a mortgage on the land to secure all unpaid installments not due, and demanded a deed. But those offers being declined, the present suit was brought.

The peculiar wording of the written contract renders it somewhat doubtful whether there was a sale of the lands to the appellee to be made complete by a conveyance of the legal title or defeated altogether, according to his performance or failure to perform the conditions upon which he was to receive a deed; or whether he was simply given possession, paying a fixed amount annually, for use and occupancy, with the privilege of purchasing and with the right to demand a conveyance in fee simple, upon the performance of those conditions. Taking the whole contract together, we incline to adopt the former as the true interpretation. Such was the view taken by the Supreme Court of Nebraska of a similar contract as to land between Cheney and one Robinson. Robinson v. Cheney, 17 Neb. 673, 679. But it is not necessary to express any decided opinion upon this question; for, in any view, it is clear from the contract, not only that appellant could retain the legal title until the appellee's obligations under it had all been performed, but that he could resume possession immediately upon the failure of the appellee to meet, punctually, any of the conditions to be performed by him. Time may be made of the essence of the contract "by the express stipulations of the parties, or it may arise by implication from the very nature of the property, or the avowed objects of the seller or the purchaser." Taylor v. Longworth, 89 U. S. 14 Pet. 172, 174 [10: 405, 406]; Secombe v. Steele, 61 U. S. 20 How. 94, 104 [15: 883, 886]; Holgate v. Eaton, 116 U. S. 88, 40 [29: 538, 540]; Brown v. Guarantee Trust Co. 128 U. S. 408, 414 [32: 468, 472]. The parties in this case, in words too distinct to leave room for construction, not only specify the time when each condition is to be performed, but declare that "time and punctuality are material and essential ingredients" in the contract; and that it must be "strictly and literally" executed. However harsh or exacting its terms may be, as to the appellee, they do not contravene public policy; and therefore a refusal of the court to give effect to them, according to the real intention of the parties, is to make a contract for them which they have not chosen to make for themselves. 1 Sugd. Vendors (8th Am. ed.) 410 [268]; Barnard v. Lee, 97 Mass. 92, 94; Hipwell v. Knight, 1 Younge & C. 401, 415. These observations are made because counsel for the appellant insists, with some confidence, that an affirmance of the decree below will necessarily be a departure from the general principles just stated.

But there are other principles, founded in justice, that must control the decision of the present case. Even where time is made material, by express stipulation, the failure of one of the parties to perform a condition within the particular time limited will not in every case defeat his right to specific performance, if the condition be subsequently performed, without unreasonable delay, and no circumstances have intervened that would render it unjust or inequitable to give such relief. The discretion which a court of equity has to grant or refuse specific performance, and which is always exercised with reference to the circumstances of the particular case before it (Hennessey v. Woolworth, 128 U. S. 438, 442 [32: 500, 501]), may, and of necessity must, often be controlled by the conduct of the party who bases his refusal to perform the contract upon the failure of the other party to strictly comply with its conditions. Selon v. Slade, 7 Ves. Jr. 265, 279; Levy v. Lindo, 3 Meriv. 81, 84; Hudson v. Bartram, 8 Madd. 440, 447; Lilley v. Fifty Associates, 101 Mass. 482, 485; Potter v. Tuttle, 22 Conn. 512, 519. See also Ahl v. Johnson, 61 U. S. 20 How. 511, 518 [15: 1005, 1008].

To this class belongs, in our judgment, the case before us. Although the contract between Cheney and Libby called for payment in dollars, the latter might well have supposed, unless distinctly informed to the contrary, that the former would be willing to receive current funds, that is, such as are ordinarily received by men of business or by banks. And such funds were received in payment of all of Libby's notes falling due in 1880 to 1884, inclusive. While this course of business was not an absolute waiver by Cheney of his right to demand coin or legal-tender paper in payment of notes subsequently falling due, such conduct, during a period of several years, was calculated to produce the impression upon Libby's mind that current or bankable funds would be received in payment of any of his notes. And therefore upon every principle of fair dealing Cheney was bound to give reasonable notice of his purpose, after 1884, to accept only such funds as under the contract, strictly interpreted, he was entitled to demand. No such notice was given. On the contrary, the just inference from the testimony is that Cheney designed to throw Libby off his guard, and render it impossible for the latter, or for the bankers to whom he sent drafts to be used in paying his notes, to supply the requisite amount of coin or legal-tender paper, on the very day the notes matured, and at the moment of their presentation for payment. The efforts of Russell & Holmes, within a few moments after Cheney left their bank on the 1st of June, to find him, and to pay off the notes in legal-tender paper, and the efforts of Libby, by his agent, as soon as he was informed of Cheney's demand for payment in coin or legal-tender paper, to reach him, and to pay off the notes maturing in 1885, in lawful money, and his repeated offers subsequently to pay them in such money, showed the utmost diligence, and sufficiently excuse his failure to pay in coin or legal-tender paper on the very day his notes matured. To permit Cheney, under the circumstances disclosed, to enforce a forfeiture of the contract, would enable him to take advantage of his own wrong, and to reap the fruits of a scheme formed for the very purpose of bringing about the nonperformance of the contract.

But it is contended that the provision in the contract forbidding its modification or change, "except by entry thereon in writing signed by both parties," coupled with the provision that no court should relieve Libby from a failure to comply strictly and literally with the contract, stands in the way of a decree for specific performance. It is sufficient, upon this point, to say that such provisions—if they could in any case fetter the power of the court to do justice according to the settled principles of law—cannot be applied where the efficient cause of the failure of the party seeking specific performance to comply strictly and literally with the contract was the conduct of the other party. If the defendant had agreed, in writing, signed by himself alone, to accept current funds and not to demand coin or legal-tender notes, and, notwithstanding such agreement, he had demanded coin or legal-tender notes, under circumstances rendering it impossible for the plaintiff to meet the demand on the day limited by the contract, would he be permitted to say that the contract was forfeited for the failure to make payment according to its provisions? We suppose not, although, according to his argument, such an agreement, not having been signed by both parties and indorsed on the contract, would not estop him from insisting upon a strict and literal compliance with its terms.

It results from what has been said that the failure of the plaintiff, Libby, in person or by agent, to pay the notes maturing in 1885 in coin or legal-tender paper at the time they were presented by Cheney for payment at the banking-house of Russell & Holmes did not work a forfeiture of the contract, and does not stand in the way of a decree for specific performance.

In respect to the notes falling due in 1886 and 1887, the evidence satisfactorily shows that the plaintiff, at the times and place appointed for their payment, offered, and was then and there ready, to pay them in lawful money, but the notes not being on either occasion in the hands of Russell & Holmes for collection, he could not make actual payment, but left the money at their bank to be paid over to Cheney whenever the notes were presented at that place. The notes due in those years were, it is true, in the manual possession of Russell & Holmes, but they were not in their custody by direction of Cheney for collection or for any other purpose. Libby did all that he could do with respect to the notes falling due in those years in order to comply "strictly and literally" with the contract. Indeed, after the surrender by Cheney in 1885, of the notes due in that and subsequent years, and his formal notification to Libby that he regarded the contract as forfeited and would not receive any money from him, Libby was not bound, as a condition of his right to claim specific performance, to go through the useless ceremony of tendering payment at the banking house of Russell & Holmes of the notes maturing in 1886 and 1887. Brook v. Hidy, 13 Ohio St. 306; Deichmann v. Deichmann, 49 Mo. 107, 109; Crary v. Smith, 2 N. Y. 60. In Hunter v. Daniel, 4 Hare, 420, 423, it was said: "The only remaining point insisted upon was that the making of every payment was a condition precedent to the right of the plaintiff to call for the execution of the agreement, or, in fact, to call for the benefit of it; and it was argued that the bill could not properly be filed before the plaintiff had, out of court, fully performed his agreement. The general rule in equity certainly is not of that strict character. A party filing a bill submits to do everything that is required of him; and the practice of the court is not to require the party to make a formal tender where, as in this case, from the facts stated in the bill, or from the evidence, it appears that the tender would have been a mere form, and that the party to whom it was made would have refused to accept the money." Whether that be a sound view or not, with reference to the particular contract here in question, Libby did, in fact, make a proper tender of payment as to these notes. Before the bringing of this suit he had paid, and offered to pay, more than one half of the price for the land and all accrued interest and taxes, and therefore was entitled by the terms of the contract to a deed, he executing notes and a mortgage for the remaining payments to run the unexpired time, as stipulated in the agreement.

The court below found that the notes falling due in 1885, 1886 and 1887 were paid; that the plaintiff had deposited with the clerk for the defendant a mortgage on the land to secure the payments due eight, nine and ten years after the date of the contract; and that he had fully done and performed every obligation imposed upon him to entitle him to a deed. It was adjudged that the defendant, within forty days from the decree, execute, acknowledge and deliver to the plaintiff a good and sufficient deed, with the usual covenants of warranty (excepting the right of way that may be demanded for public use for railways or common roads), conveying to him the land in question, and in default of which it was adjudged that the decree itself should operate, and have the same force and effect, as a deed of the above description.

We are not able to concur in the finding that the notes falling due in 1885, 1886 and 1887 had been paid when this decree was passed. If those notes had been placed by Cheney with Russell & Holmes for collection, and the latter had collected the amounts due on them, then they would have been paid; for, in such case, that firm would have been the agent of the payee to collect the notes, and the money received by them would have belonged to him.

In Ward v. Smith, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 447, 450 [19: 207, 209], the question arose as to whether a bank at which certain bonds were made payable was the agent of the holder to receive payment. The court said: "It is undoubtedly true that the designation of the place of payment in the bonds imported a stipulation that their holder should have them at the bank, when due, to receive payment, and that the obligors would produce there the funds to pay them. It was inserted for the mutual convenience of the parties. And it is the general usage in such cases for the holder of the instrument to lodge it with the bank for collection, and the party bound for its payment can call there and take it up. If the instrument be not there lodged, and the obligor is there at its maturity with the necessary funds to pay it, he so far satisfies the contract that he cannot be made responsible for any future damages, either as costs of suit or interest, for delay. When the instrument is lodged with the bank for collection, the bank becomes the agent of the payee or obligee to receive payment. The agency extends no further, and without special authority an agent can only receive payment of the debt due his principal in the legal currency of the country, or in bills which pass as money at their par value by the common consent of the community. In the case at bar only one bond was deposited with the Farmers' Bank. That institution, therefore, was only agent of the payee for its collection. It had no authority to receive payment of the other bonds for him or on his account. Whatever it may have received from the obligors to be applied on the other bonds, it received as their agent, not as the agent of the obligee. If the notes have depreciated since in its possession, the loss must be adjusted between the bank and the depositors; it cannot fall upon the holder of the bonds." See also Adams v. Hackensack, 44 N. J. L. 638, where this question is elaborately examined; Hills v. Place, 48 N. Y. 520; Williamsport Gas Co. v. Pinkerton, 95 Pa. 62, 64; Wood v. Merchants Saving, L. & T. Co. 41 Ill. 267.

Russell & Holmes, then, did not become the agent of Cheney to receive the amount of the notes by reason simply of the fact that the notes were made payable at their bank. The funds left by Libby with them to be applied in payment of the notes of 1885, 1886 and 1887 are, therefore, his property, not the property of Cheney. The utmost effect of Libby's offer, within a reasonable time after June 1, 1885, to pay the note of that year in lawful money, and of his offers, at the appointed times and place, to pay the notes of 1886 and 1887, was to prevent the forfeiture of the contract, and to save his right to have it specifically performed, so far as that right depended upon his paying those notes. But they must be actually paid by him before he is entitled to a deed, or to a decree that will have the force and effect of a conveyance. Under the circumstances it was not absolutely necessary that he should have brought the money into court for the defendant at the time he filed his bill. His offer in the bill to perform all the conditions and stipulations of the contract was sufficient to give him a standing in court. Irvin v. Gregory, 13 Gray, 215, 218; Hunter v. Bales, 24 Ind. 299, 308; Fall v. Hazelrigg, 45 Ind. 576, 579. But the decree of specific performance ought not to become operative until he brings into court for the defendant the full amount necessary to pay off the notes for principal and interest falling due in 1885, 1886 and 1887. Caldwell v. Cassidy, 8 Cow. 271; Hartun v. Bishop, 8 Wend. 13, 21; Hills v. Place, supra; Wood v. Merchants Saving Co. supra; Webster v. French, 11 Ill. 254, 278; Carley v. Vance, 17 Mass. 389, 391; Doyle v. Teas, 4 Scam. 202, 261, 267; McDaniel v. Kimbrell, 3 Greene (Iowa) 335. The defendant is not entitled to interest after the respective tenders were made, because it does not appear that the plaintiff has, since the tenders, realized any interest upon the moneys left by him for Cheney at the bank of Russell & Holmes. Davis v. Parker, 14 Allen, 94, 104; January v. Martin, 1 Bibb, 586, 590; Hart v.

The decree below is affirmed. But it is adjudged and ordered that the said decree be and is hereby suspended, and shall not become operative until the plaintiff brings into the court below for the defendant the full amount of the notes for principal and interest executed by him to the defendant and made payable on the 28th days of May, 1885, 1886 and 1887, without interest upon any note after its maturity.

JAMES D. CRENSHAW, Appl.,
v.
UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 99-110.)

Officer's vested right to office—tenure of office and right to salary not a contract—office revocable by Legislature—secs. 1229, 1624, Rev. Stat.—midshipman in U. S. navy—Act of 1862.

1. An officer of the navy, appointed for a definite time or during good behavior, has no vested interest or contract right in his office, of which Congress cannot deprive him.
2. The appointment to and the tenure of an office created for the public use, and the regulation of the salary affixed to such an office, do not come within the import of the term "contracts" intended to be protected by the U. S. Constitution.
3. Whatever the form of the statute, the officer under it does not hold by contract. He enjoys a privilege revocable by the sovereignty at will; and one Legislature cannot deprive its successor of the power of revocation.
4. By section 1229 and art. 36 of section 1624 of the Revised Statutes, it was not intended to place an officer beyond the power of Congress to make provision for his removal even by the executive who appointed him.
5. The term of office of a midshipman in the United States navy is not a term for life.
6. In enacting the Statute of 1862, Congress did not assume the power of appointment which belongs to the executive; the appellant came within the terms of that Act.

Argued Jan. 6, 1890. Decided March 3, 1890.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Court of Claims dismissing claimant's petition to recover an alleged balance due him for salary as a midshipman in the United States navy. Affirmed.

Opinion below, 24 Ct. Cl. 57.

Statement by Mr. Justice Lamar:

This is an action brought by the appellant, James D. Crenshaw, in the Court of Claims, for the purpose of recovering an alleged balance of $3,763.66 due him on account of salary as a midshipman in the United States navy. The Court of Claims dismissed the appellant's petition (24 Ct. Cl. 57); and an appeal from that judgment brings the case here.

The material facts in the case are as follows:

NOTE.—As to extra pay or compensation to officers, see note to U. S. v. Macdaniel, Bk. 8, p. 587.

In September, 1877, the appellant was appointed a cadet midshipman at the Naval Academy. At that time the provisions of the Revised Statutes in force and pertinent to this inquiry were as follows:

"Sec. 1520. The academic course of cadet midshipmen shall be six years.

"Sec. 1521. When cadet midshipmen shall have passed successfully the graduating examination at the Academy, they shall receive appointments as midshipmen and shall take rank according to their proficiency as shown by the order of their merit at date of graduation."

"Sec. 1556. The commissioned officers and warrant officers on the active list of the navy of the United States, and the petty officers, seamen, etc., . . . shall be entitled to receive annual pay at the rates herein stated after their respective designations: . . . Midshipmen, after graduation, when at sea, one thousand dollars; on shore duty, eight hundred dollars; on leave, or waiting orders, six hundred dollars. Cadet midshipmen, five hundred dollars."

"Sec. 1229. The President is authorized to drop from the rolls of the army for desertion any officer who is absent from duty three months without leave; and no officer so dropped shall be eligible for re-appointment. And no officer in the military or naval service shall in time of peace be dismissed from service except upon and in pursuance of the sentence of a court-martial to that effect, or in commutation thereof."

The appellant accepted the appointment and entered on his studies at the Academy. He completed the course of four years, and after passing a successful examination received a certificate from the academic board in the following words, to wit:

"This certifies that Cadet Midshipman James D. Crenshaw has completed the prescribed course of study at the United States Naval Academy, and has successfully passed the required examination before the academic board preparatory to the two years' course afloat.

"June 10, 1881."

On the 25th of August following, appellant was ordered to sea by the Navy Department, and directed to report for duty on board the steamer "Pensacola." This he did. While he was serving on that steamer, under the aforesaid order, Congress passed an Act, approved August 5, 1882, being the Naval Appropriation Act, in which occurs this proviso:

"That hereafter there shall be no appointments of cadet midshipmen or cadet engineers at the Naval Academy, but in lieu thereof naval cadets shall be appointed from each congressional district and at large, as now provided by law for cadet midshipmen, and all the undergraduates at the Naval Academy shall hereafter be designated and called 'naval cadets;' and from those who successfully complete the six years' course, appointments shall hereafter be made as it is necessary to fill vacancies in the lower grades of the line and engineer corps of the navy and of the marine corps: And provided further, That no greater number of appointments into these grades shall be made each year than shall equal the number of vacancies which has occurred in the same grades during the preceding year; such appointments to be made from the graduates of the year, at the conclusion of their six years' course, in the order of merit, as determined by the academic board of the Naval Academy; the assignment to the various corps to be made by the Secretary of the Navy upon the recommendation of the academic board. But nothing herein contained shall reduce the number of appointments from such graduates below ten in each year, nor deprive of such appointment any graduate who may complete the six years' course during the year eighteen hundred and eighty-two. And if there be a surplus of graduates, those who do not receive such appointment shall be given a certificate of graduation, an honorable discharge, and one year's sea pay, as now provided by law for cadet midshipmen," etc., etc. 22 Stat. 284, 285.

As stated above, this Statute was passed while appellant was engaged in his service on the "Pensacola." He continued on that vessel until the 14th of March, 1883, when he was ordered to report to the superintendent of the Naval Academy for examination. He proceeded to the Academy, passed his final examination successfully, and, on the 15th of June, 1883, received from the academic board his certificate of graduation, reciting that, "We, the academic board of the United States Naval Academy, having thoroughly examined Naval Cadet James D. Crenshaw on all subjects, theoretical and practical, taught at this institution, and having found him proficient in each, do hereby, in conformity with the law, grant to him this certificate of graduation. June 15, 1883."

On the 23d of June following he received this order:

"Navy Department, Bureau of Navigation and Office of Detail,

"Washington, June 23, 1883.

"Sir: You are hereby detached from the Naval Academy; proceed home and regard yourself waiting orders.

"By direction of the Secretary of the Navy.
"Respectfully, J. E. Waller, Chief of Bureau."

On the 26th of the same month, an order, as follows, was issued:

"Sir: "Having successfully completed your six years' course at the United States Naval Academy, and having been given a certificate of graduation by the academic board, but not being required to fill any vacancy in the service happening during the year preceding your graduation, you are hereby discharged from the 30th of June, 1883, with one year's sea pay, as prescribed by law for cadet midshipmen, in accordance with the provisions of the Act approved August 5, 1882.

"Respectfully, W. E. Chandler,
"Secretary of the Navy.

"Naval Cadet James D. Crenshaw, U. S. Navy."

Since the date of that order appellant has not been called on to do duty, and has not received any pay except that credited on his claim. In this state of the case he claims that he is still a midshipman in the naval service, and, as such, entitled to pay. This claim is based upon the following propositions

(1) That when he accepted the appointment of cadet midshipman he became an officer of the navy, and, as such, entitled to the benefits of sec. 1229 and art. 36 of sec. 1624 (which is to the same effect), of the Revised Statutes; that such acceptance constituted a statutory contract with the United States based on a valuable consideration, under which he is entitled to hold the office for life, unless removed by sentence of a court-martial or in commutation thereof;

(2) That he was not, therefore, discharged by competent authority—because, first, since the re-enactment by Congress in 1874 of section 1229 and art. 36 of section 1624 of the Revised Statutes, neither Congress, the Secretary of the Navy nor any department of the government is competent in time of peace to discharge an officer from the naval service;

(3) That, independently of the Act of July 18, 1866 (14 Stat. 92), section 1229 and art. 36 of section 1624 aforesaid, the Act of 1882 is unconstitutional, as applied to him, for the reason that he held an office by contract with the United States, and was entitled on graduation to be a midshipman to serve for life or during good behavior;

(4) That not only was the Act of August 5, 1882, inoperative, as to him, for the reason stated, but also for the further reason that to apply it to his class would be to make Congress appoint to the office of naval cadet all such students as were in his situation; but that while Congress had the power, under the Constitution, to create the office, it did not have the power to designate the officers, that being the constitutional duty of the executive; and

(5) That the case of appellant did not fall within the terms of the Act of 1882; that he was not at the date of its passage an undergraduate of the Academy, but had graduated; and that therefore his discharge was not authorized by that Act.

Messrs. H. O. Claughton and Rodolphe Claughton, for appellant:

The question as to whether a right has vested or not is in its nature judicial, and must be tried by judicial authority.

The government can contract by a legislative Act, and such contracts are governed by the rules of ordinary contracts.

Mr. Wm. A. Maury, Assistant Atty-Gen., for appellee.

Mr. Justice Lamar delivered the opinion of the court:

The primary question in this case, one which underlies the first, second and third of appellant's propositions stated above, is whether an officer appointed for a definite time or during good behavior had any vested interest or contract right in his office of which Congress could not deprive him? The question is not novel. There seems to be but little difficulty in deciding that there was no such interest or right. The question was before this court in Butler v. Pennsylvania, 51 U. S. 10 How. 402 [18: 472]. In that case, Butler and others, by virtue of a statute of the State of Pennsylvania, had been appointed canal commissioners for a term of one year, with compensation at four dollars per diem; but during their incumbency another statute was passed, whereby the compensation was reduced to three dollars; and it was claimed their contract rights were thereby infringed. The court drew a distinction between such a situation and that of a contract, by which "perfect rights, certain, definite, fixed private rights of property, are vested." It said: "These are clearly distinguishable from measures or engagements adopted or undertaken by the body politic or state government for the benefit of all, and from the necessity of the case, and according to universal understanding, to be varied or discontinued as the public good shall require. The selection of officers, who are nothing more than agents for the effectuating of such public purposes, is matter of public convenience or necessity, and so, too, are the periods for the appointment of such agents; but neither the one nor the other of these arrangements can constitute any obligation to continue such agents, or to reappoint them, after the measures which brought them into being shall have been found useless, shall have been fulfilled, or shall have been abrogated as even detrimental to the well-being of the public. The promised compensation for services actually performed and accepted, during the continuance of the particular agency, may undoubtedly be claimed, both upon principles of compact and of equity; but to insist beyond this on the perpetuation of a public policy either useless or detrimental, and upon a reward for acts neither desired nor performed, would appear to be reconcilable with neither common justice nor common sense. The establishment of such a principle would arrest necessarily everything like progress or improvement in government; or if changes should be ventured upon, the government would have to become one great pension establishment on which to quarter a host of sinecures. . . . It follows, then, upon principle, that, in every perfect or competent government, there must exist a general power to enact and to repeal laws; and to create, and change or discontinue, the agents designated for the execution of those laws. Such a power is indispensable for the preservation of the body politic, and for the safety of the individuals of the community. It is true that this power, or the extent of its exercise, may be controlled by the higher Organic Law or Constitution of the State, as is the case in some instances in the State Constitutions, and as is exemplified in the provision of the Federal Constitution relied on in this case by the plaintiffs in error, and in some other clauses of the same instrument; but where no such restriction is imposed, the power must rest in the discretion of the government alone. . . . We have already shown that the appointment to and the tenure of an office created for the public use, and the regulation of the salary affixed to such an office, do not fall within the meaning of the section of the Constitution relied on by the plaintiffs in error; do not come within the import of the term 'contracts,' or, in other words, the vested, private, personal rights thereby intended to be protected. They are functions appropriate to that class of powers and obligations by which governments are enabled, and are called upon, to foster and promote the general good; functions, therefore, which governments cannot be presumed to have surrendered, if indeed they can under any circumstances be justified in surrendering them."

The case of Newton v. Mahoning County Comrs., 100 U. S. 548 [25: 710], is in point. That was a controversy over the projected removal of a county seat; and the statute relied on by the objectors provided that before the seat of justice should be considered as permanently established at the Town of Canfield, the citizens thereof should do certain things, all of which were admitted to have been duly done. The objectors, therefore, claimed a contract right that the county seat should remain at Canfield. This court said: "The legislative power of a State, except so far as restrained by its own Constitution, is at all times absolute with respect to all offices within its reach. It may at pleasure create or abolish them, or modify their duties. It may also shorten or lengthen the term of service. And it may increase or diminish the salary or change the mode of compensation. The police power of the States, and that with respect to municipal corporations, and to many other things that might be named, are of the same absolute character;" citing Cooley, Const. Lim. pp. 232, 242; The Regents v. Williams, *4 Gill & J. (Md.) 321. "In all these cases there can be no contract and no irrepealable law, because they are 'governmental subjects,' and hence within the category before stated. They involve public interests, and Legislative Acts concerning them are necessarily public laws. Every succeeding Legislature possesses the same jurisdiction and power with respect to them as its predecessors. The latter have the same power of repeal and modification which the former had of enactment, neither more nor less. All occupy, in this respect, a footing of perfect equality. This must necessarily be so in the nature of things. It is vital to the public welfare that each one should be able at all times to do whatever the varying circumstances and present exigencies touching the subject involved may require. A different result would be fraught with evil."

In Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U. S. 814, 820 [25: 1079, 1080], considering the power of a Legislature to grant an irrepealable charter, for a consideration, to a lottery company, the court said: "The power of governing is a trust committed by the people to the government, no part of which can be granted away. The people, in their sovereign capacity, have established their agencies for the preservation of the public health and the public morals, and the protection of public and private rights. These several agencies can govern according to their discretion, if within the scope of their general authority, while in power; but they cannot give away nor sell the discretion of those that are to come after them, in respect to matters the government of which, from the very nature of things, must vary with varying circumstances." See also Hall v. Wisconsin, 108 U. S. 5 [26: 302]; United States v. Fisher, 109 U. S. 143 [27: 885]. Nor is the holding of this court singular. Numerous decisions to the same effect are to be found in the state courts. People v. Morris, 13 Wend. 325; Com. v. Bacon, 6 Serg. & R. 322; Com. v. Mann, 5 Watts & S. 418; Hyde v. State, 52 Miss. 665; State v. Smedes, 26 Miss. 47; Turpen v. Tipton County, 7 Ind. 172; Haynes v. State, 3 Humph. 490; Benford v. Gibson, 15 Ala. 521.

In Blake v. United States, 108 U. S. 227 [26: 462], the fact is adverted to, and the opinion of the Attorney-General in Lansing's Case, 6 Ops. Atty-Gen. 4, quoted approvingly, to the effect that in this respect of official tenure there is no difference in law between officers in the army and other officers of the government.

Applying the above principles, it remains to say that we know of no instance in which their assertion is more imperatively demanded by the public welfare than in this case, and such others as this. If the position taken by the appellant is correct, then a logical and unavoidable result is, that our country, if ever we are so unfortunate as to be again involved in war, will be compelled, after the treaty of peace, to maintain the entire official force of the army and navy, and a host of sinecurists, in full pay so long as they shall live; either that, or to disband the army and navy before the peace shall be made, even this wholly inadmissible alternative being legally possible from one of appellant's positions. It is impossible to believe that such a condition of affairs was ever contemplated by the framers of our Organic or Statute Law.

The effect of the authorities cited above is in no respect modified by section 1229 or by art. 36 of section 1624 of the Revised Statutes. In the first place, if it were granted that those sections mean what appellant claims for them—if they mean beyond question that one appointed as a cadet shall never be dismissed by authority of either the executive or the Legislature, or by both in conjunction—yet that fact would make no difference. The great question of protection to contract rights and vested interests, which forms such an interesting and important feature of our constitutional law, is not dominated by the turn of a phrase.

*Citation correct in this edition, Bk. 25, p. 710, as The Regents v. Williams, 9 Gill & J. 365, as it should be here. [Ed.]

Our courts, both state and national, look on these questions through the form to the substance of things; and, in substance, a statute under which one takes office, and which fixes the term of office at one year, or during good behavior, is the same as one which adds to those provisions the declaration that the incumbent shall not be dismissed therefrom. Whatever the form of the statute, the officer under it does not hold by contract. He enjoys a privilege revocable by the sovereignty at will; and one Legislature cannot deprive its successor of the power of revocation. Butler v. Pennsylvania, supra; Stone v. Mississippi, supra; Cooley, Const. Lim. 283; United States v. McDonald, 128 U. S. 471, 478 [33: 506, 507].

In the second place, section 1229 and art. 36 of section 1624 of the Revised Statutes are a reproduction in the Revision of the Act of July 18, 1866, section 5, supra; and in Blake v. United States, supra, the court decided that that Act only operated to withdraw from the President the power previously existing in him of removing officers at will, and without the concurrence of the Senate; and that there was no intention to withdraw from him the power to remove with the advice and concurrence of the Senate. If that construction of the Statute be correct (and we see no cause for altering our view) it necessarily follows that it was not intended to place an officer where he never before had been—beyond the power of Congress to make any provision for his removal even by the Executive who appointed him.

It is claimed, however, that the construction so given to the Act of 1866 was induced by the consideration of certain other statutes in pari materia, and that the reintroduction of it in the Revision, unaccompanied by those other statutes, would render that construction inapplicable now. We do not think so. We have already considered the Act of 1866 in its historical relations, and from the circumstances of its enactment deduced its meaning. When it was re-enacted with all other statutes of general interest, the political exigency which furnished the primary motive for its re-enactment had drifted away with the lapse of time; but we do not think it can avail to give to a statute which, after all, is but a re-enactment in the exact language of the original Act, a meaning almost directly the reverse of that given to the original Act. To give such effect to the action of Congress in codifying the statutes would go far to subvert all decisions and introduce chaos into our jurisprudence.

Thus far we have preferred to decide the case upon the broad grounds above stated, and therefore considered it as if the term of office enjoyed by the appellant was what he claims it to have been—a term for life. In fact, however, even if that were true as to other officers, it was not true as to him. The Statute applicable to his case is section 1520 of the Revised Statutes, which fixes the academic course at six years; and when he entered the service under the regulations in such cases provided he executed a bond to serve for 8 years, unless discharged by competent authority, thus recognizing his liability to be discharged.

As to the fourth proposition of appellant, that in enacting the Statute of 1882 Congress assumed the power of appointment which belongs to the executive, we do not so regard the Act. Congress did not thereby undertake to name the incumbent of any office. It simply changed the name, and modified the scope of the duties. This we think it had the power to do.

We think, too, that the appellant came within the terms of the Act of 1882. There is a very plain distinction between this case and that of a cadet engineer fully explained in United States v. Redgrave, 116 U. S. 474 [29: 607]. The Statute in express terms provides that "the academic course of cadet midshipmen shall be six years." If the Navy Department had assumed to make any regulations by which the final graduation shall take place in less time, such regulations would have been void. But it did not so assume. It arranged for a two years' course afloat as a part of the academic course, and exacted a preliminary examination to test the cadet's qualifications therefor. But the cadet afloat was a member of the Academy. He still was subject to a final examination at that institution, and without such examination successfully sustained never became a graduate. He was not so denominated until then, either in the Naval Register or elsewhere; and it was not until that final test had been sustained that either by the practice of the Academy or by the provision of the Statute he did or could receive his certificate of graduation.

The judgment of the Court of Claims is affirmed.

APPEAL from a decree of the Supreme Court of the Territory of Arizona affirming a judgment of the District Court of the Second Judicial District of that Territory sustaining a demurrer and dismissing a suit in an action to set aside deeds and recover real property. Reversed.

Statement by Mr. Justice Harlan :

This suit was brought by the appellant on the 18th of July, 1887, in the District Court of the Second Judicial District of Arizona, and was there heard upon demurrer to the complaint. The demurrer was sustained, and, the plaintiff refusing to amend, the suit was dismissed. That judgment having been affirmed by the Supreme Court of the Territory, the only question is whether the facts alleged in the complaint—assuming, as we must, that they are true—set forth a cause of action entitling the plaintiff to relief.

The case made by the complaint is as follows: Jonathan M. Bryan was the owner at the time of his death on the 29th of August, 1883, (1) of the southeast quarter section number thirty-three, in township two north, of range three east, of the district of lands subject to sale at the land office of the United States at Tucson, Arizona, and of the Gila and Salt River meridian; (2) the northeast quarter of section five, in township one north, of range three east, of the same district and meridian, and lying one half mile north of the City of Phoenix, in Maricopa County, Arizona, such piece of land being once called the "Shortle Ranch," but now commonly known as "Central Place;" (3) the southeast quarter of section nine, in township one north, of range three east, of the same meridian and district; and (4) all of block ninety-eight in the City of Phoenix, according to a map or plat of that city, made by William A. Hancock, surveyor of the town site of such city, and on file in the office of the county recorder of Maricopa County.

On or about the 24th of September, 1883, letters of administration upon his estate were issued by the Probate Court of Maricopa County to M. W. Kales, who immediately qualified and entered upon his duties as administrator, continuing to be and to act as such until December 6, 1884, when he was discharged. Since that date there has been no administrator of the decedent's estate.

While Bryan was the owner and in possession of the above-described real estate, he executed to Kales four promissory notes for the amounts, respectively, of $1,200, $2,500, $1,500 and $500, dated December 11, 1882, February 23, 1883, February 26, 1883, and March 14, 1883, and payable, respectively, December 11, 1883, February 23, 1884, October 26, 1883, and September 14, 1883,—each note calling for interest payable every three months, at the rate of one and a half per cent per month, and, if not so paid, the note to become due and payable. At the date of each note he executed, acknowledged and delivered to Kales a mortgage upon real estate to secure its payment; upon the first of the above-described pieces of real estate, to secure the note for $1,200; upon the second, to secure the note for $2,500; upon the third, to secure the note for $1,500; and upon the fourth, to secure the note for $500. These mortgages were all duly recorded.

Before the notes fell due, and before they were presented for allowance against the estate of Bryan, in the probate court having jurisdiction thereof, and without application to any court for an order to pay the notes or any of them, or to sell any property of the estate to pay them, and "while holding in his hands as administrator sufficient money to pay all the principal and interest which might become due on said notes or any of them," Kales, on the 28th of September, 1883, instituted, in the District Court of the Second Judicial District of Arizona, in and for Maricopa County, in his individual name, an action against himself as administrator. He declared, in that action, upon the notes and mortgages, and prayed judgment against himself as administrator for the sum of fifty-seven hundred dollars, with interest on twelve hundred dollars of [that] sum from the 11th day of June, 1883, on twenty-five hundred dollars from the 23d day of May, 1883, on fifteen hundred dollars from the 26th day of May, 1883, and on five hundred dollars from June 14, 1883, the interest on each sum to be at the rate of one and a half per cent per month; with a like rate of interest upon the principal sum named in any judgment or decree that may be obtained from the date thereof until the same shall be fully paid and satisfied; and for ten per cent for attorneys' fees upon forty-two hundred dollars of the principal sum, and five per cent for attorneys' fees upon twenty-five hundred dollars of the principal sum, and for costs of suit.

He also prayed that the usual decree be made for the sale of the premises by the sheriff according to law and the practice of the court; that the proceeds of sale be applied in payment of the amount due the plaintiff; that the defendant and all persons claiming under him or his decedent subsequent to the execution of the mortgages upon the premises, either as purchasers, incumbrancers or otherwise, be barred and foreclosed of all right, claim or equity of redemption in the premises and every part thereof, and that the plaintiff have judgment against the defendant, as administrator of the estate of J. M. Bryan, deceased, for any deficiency remaining after applying the proceeds of the sale of the premises properly applicable to the satisfaction of the judgment, and that such deficiency be made a claim against the estate of the said J. M. Bryan, deceased, to be paid as other claims against said estate.

He further prayed that the plaintiff or any other party to the suit might become a purchaser at the sale; that the sheriff execute a deed to the purchaser; that the latter be let into the possession of the premises on production of the sheriff's deed therefor; and that the plaintiff have such other or further relief in the premises as to the court seemed meet and equitable.

A summons was sued out by M. W. Kales as an individual against himself as administrator, requiring the latter to appear and answer the complaint. It was personally served on the day it was issued, and, on the succeeding day, October 6, 1883, in his capacity of administrator, he made the following answer to the complaint filed by himself in his individual capacity:

"The defendant, M. W. Kales, administrator of the estate of J. M. Bryan, deceased, answering the complaint on file in this action, admits each and every material allegation in the said complaint, and consents that judgment and decree be entered in accordance with the prayer thereof."

In other words, M. W. Kales consented that he might as an individual take judgment against himself as administrator.

On the 16th of October, 1883, the court, D. H. Pinney being the judge thereof, rendered a decree of foreclosure and sale, finding, upon the complaint, answer and proofs heard, that there was due to the plaintiff, M. W. Kales, from the defendant, M. W. Kales, administrator, the sums, with interest, specified in the several mortgages, with the attorneys' fee provided for in the mortgages and claimed in the complaint, and directing the proceeds of the sale of each parcel to be applied to the debt secured by the mortgage on that parcel.

The decree further provided:

"That the defendant, M. W. Kales, as administrator as aforesaid, and all persons claiming or to claim from or under him or from or under the said J. M. Bryan, deceased, and all persons having liens subsequent to said mortgages by judgment, decree or otherwise upon the lands described in said mortgages or either of them, and they or their personal representatives, and all persons having any lien or claim by or under such subsequent judgment or decree, and their personal representatives, and all persons claiming under them, be forever barred and foreclosed of and from all equity of redemption and claim in, of and to said mortgaged premises and every part and parcel thereof from and after the delivery of said sheriff's deed. . . .

"And it is further adjudged and decreed that if the moneys arising from said sale of any of the separate parcels of said lands described in either of the respective mortgages shall be insufficient to pay the amount so found due to the plaintiff, as above stated, upon each of the respective mortgages, with interest and costs and expenses of sale as aforesaid, the sheriff specify the amount of such deficiency and balance due the plaintiff upon each of the respective mortgages separately in his return of sale, and that on the coming in and filing of said returns of deficiency the same shall become a claim against the estate of J. M. Bryan, deceased, to be paid as other claims are paid."

The remainder of the decree contains a description of the property or parcels of land covered by the respective mortgages.

On the 8th of November, 1883, the district court made an order commanding the sheriff to sell upon notice all the property described in the mortgages and make return thereof. Pursuant to that order, the sheriff, L. H. Orme, advertised, and, on the 15th of December, 1883, sold, the property in parcels, as follows: The first parcel to Robert Garside for $1,500; the second to M. W. Kales for $2,975; the third to William Gilson for $1,850; and the fourth to

M. W. Kales for $600. The amount bid for each parcel was much less than such parcel was worth in open market, or than it would have brought at the usual sheriff's sale. The sheriff delivered to each purchaser a certificate of sale. He made his return of sales on the 26th of December, 1883, but the sales have never been confirmed by the district court.

After the sales and before the making of any deeds, Kales assigned to J. T. Simms the certificate of sale for the second parcel, and to D. H. Pinney the certificate of sale for the fourth parcel. On the 16th of June, 1884, the sheriff executed a deed for the first parcel to Garside, who, by deed of May 20, 1887, sold and conveyed to J. DeBarth Shorb. Simms, having received from the sheriff, June 10, 1884, a deed for the second parcel, sold and conveyed, by deed of February 28, 1887, to George T. Brasius, who subdivided it into blocks and lots as "Central Place;" and, subsequently, May 3, 1887, sold and conveyed one lot to John W. Jeffries, and, May 5, 1887, another lot to Henry W. Ryder. Gilson received a sheriff's deed for the third parcel, June 19, 1884, and April 6, 1886, sold and conveyed to Cordelia L. Beckett, wife of C. G. Beckett. The fourth parcel was conveyed by the sheriff, June 16, 1884, to D. H. Pinney, who, September 10, 1886, sold and conveyed a portion thereof to the Bank of Napa, a corporation existing under the laws of California. Another portion of the fourth parcel was conveyed by Pinney, November 18, 1886, to F. Q. Story, who sold and conveyed to M. H. Sherman.

Bryan left no descendants. His wife, Vina Bryan, survived him. All the property in question was acquired by him during marriage, and, at the time of his death,—the complaint alleges,—was the common property of himself and wife, and, upon his death, she became and was his sole heir, and to her all of the common property descended, and in her remained until June 29, 1887, when, by deeds of conveyance, she granted, released and conveyed to the present plaintiff all of these lands, together with all her estate, right, interest and claim in the same and every part thereof.

The complaint makes all of the persons hereinbefore named as having purchased at sheriff's sale or received conveyances for these parcels of land defendants to this suit. It alleges that of "all the facts herein alleged, the defendants and each of them, at all the times herein mentioned, had full notice; that the defendant, D. H. Pinney, was the judge of the said district court, and acted as such in all the proceedings had in the said action, wherein said defendant, M. W. Kales, was plaintiff, and said M. W. Kales, as administrator of the estate of J. M. Bryan, deceased, was defendant; and said defendant, D. H. Pinney, rendered and made the said decree of foreclosure and order of sale therein and was so the judge of said District Court at the time of the assignment to him by said defendant, M. W. Kales, of the sheriff's certificate of sale of said block number 98, in said City of Phoenix, and also at the time of the execution and delivery to him by the said sheriff of the said sheriff's deed thereof."

The plaintiff, after alleging that the premises described in the complaint are of the value of $125,000, prayed—

That the proceedings, judgment, decree and order of sale had, made, rendered or entered in the action brought by Kales be annulled, set aside and declared void;

That the sale of the property, and the certificate of sale and deeds made to Kales, Garside, Gilson, Pinney and Simms, be set aside and declared void, and the parts and portions of the property conveyed to the several defendants be decreed to have been received by them and each of them with notice and in trust for Vina Bryan and her grantee, the plaintiff herein;

That the defendants and each of them, now pretending to claim or own the above property or any part thereof, be decreed to hold the same and each part claimed by them in trust for the plaintiff, and required to convey to him upon his doing whatever the court adjudged should be equitably done by him;

That the defendants and each of them be enjoined from selling, conveying, mortgaging or in any way interfering with the premises; and

That the plaintiff have such other and further relief as may be just and equitable.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

The grounds upon which the district court sustained the demurrer to the complaint are not shown by the record otherwise than from the statement in the opinion of the Supreme Court of the Territory that it was because of laches in bringing suit. The latter court said: "It appears that the grantor of the plaintiff stood by and saw all this property sold, and had a right to redeem the same in six months after the sale; that her residence was Maricopa County at the death of her husband, and its continuance will be presumed to be there, the contrary not having been alleged; that there was no action brought to set aside the judgment; that from the 8th day of November, 1883, till the [2] 9th day of June, 1887—nearly four years—she saw the property greatly enhancing in value, saw it sold time and again, then sells it to the plaintiff, who now comes into a court of equity and asks a cancellation of all those sales. If the bill had shown, and which plaintiff was allowed to show, that any disability existed on the part of anyone having an interest in the property at the time of sale, we would grant the prayer of the bill. No such disability being shown, can we think of allowing the party who has so long slept upon her rights to divest the present owners of their valuable property?"

The difficulty with this view is that it has no foundation in the allegations of the complaint. From the mere fact that Mrs. Bryan's residence at the time of her husband's death was in Maricopa County, where the real estate in question is situated, the court below presumed not only that it continued there, but that she "stood by" for nearly four years, forbearing to exercise her right to redeem, and "saw the property enhancing in value—saw it sold time and again"—without asserting any interest in it. No such presumption was justified by the allegations of the complaint. The case made by those allegations is that of an administrator, who, having claims against the estate he represented, which were secured by mortgage upon real property of which his intestate died seised, and having in his hands money sufficient to discharge those claims, yet resorted to the expedient of taking judgment in his individual name against himself in his fiduciary capacity, for the amount of the claims and for attorneys' fees, and caused the property to be sold. And of all those facts—the demurrer admits—the defendants and each of them had full notice when they made their respective purchases. Referring to the allegation in the complaint, that the administrator, at the time he sued himself, had in his hands sufficient money to pay off his claims, the counsel for the defendants suggest that this might well be, if those moneys had been applied to the debts in question without providing for the payment of other debts against the estate, the expenses of administration, or preferred claims; and that for aught appearing in the complaint, it may have been the duty of the administrator to apply the moneys in his hands to other debts and claims. A sufficient answer to this suggestion is, that the allegation in the complaint upon this point imports a failure of the administrator to use the moneys in his hands to discharge the debts held by him, when he could properly have so used them.

It is true, as contended, that where the bill shows such laches upon the part of the plaintiff that a court of equity ought not to give relief, the defendant need not interpose a plea or answer, but may demur upon the ground of want of equity apparent on the bill itself. Lonsdale v. Smith, 106 U. S. 398 [27: 220]; Speidel v. Henri, 120 U. S. 877, 887 [30: 718, 719]. But no such case is made by the bill. The limitation prescribed by the Statutes of Arizona for the commencement of an action to recover real property, or the possession thereof, is five years. If this Statute governs courts of equity as well as courts of law—and such is the plaintiff's contention—the present action is not barred by limitation. If, as contended by the defendants, a court of equity may deny relief because of laches in suing, although the plaintiff commenced his action within the period limited by the Statute for actions at law, still the granting or refusing relief, upon that ground, must depend upon the special circumstances of each case. Harwood v. R. Co. 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 78 [21: 558]; Brown v. Buena Vista County, 95 U. S. 160 [24: 428]; Hayward v. Eliot Nat. Bank, 96 U. S. 617 [24: 857]. The case made by the complaint in this suit is one of fraud upon the part of the administrator, and in that fraud—if the allegations of the complaint are sustained by proof—the defendants and each of them must be held to have participated. The circumstances as detailed in the complaint are so peculiar in their character that a court of equity should be slow in denying relief upon the mere ground of laches in bringing suit.

Other questions arise upon the face of the complaint, namely, as to whether Mrs. Bryan had such interest in the property as made her a necessary party to the suit of foreclosure instituted by Kales in his individual capacity, and as to how far the validity of the decree of foreclosure and sale was affected by the very unusual fact that the same person was both plaintiff and defendant in that suit. Perkins v. Se Ipeam, 11 R. I. 270; McElhanon v. McElhanon, 68 Ill. 457; Hoag v. Hoag, 55 N. H. 172. But as these questions were not considered by the court below, and as their correct determination can be best made when all the facts are disclosed, we express at this time no opinion upon them, and place our decision upon the ground that the Supreme Court of the Territory erred in holding that the complaint failed to show that the plaintiff was entitled to relief from a court of equity. The defendants should be required to meet the case upon its merits.

The decree is reversed with directions that the demurrer to the complaint be overruled, and for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Field, J.:

I concur in the judgment of this court for the reasons stated; but I wish to add that in my opinion the judgment recovered by Kales against himself as administrator is an absolute nullity.

Jurisdiction as to parties, of circuit court—citizens of different States—residence of plaintiff.

1. Under section one of the Act of March 3, 1887 (24 Stat. 552), as corrected by the Act of August 13, 1888 (25 Stat. 438), to amend the Act of March 3, 1875, where the jurisdiction of the circuit court is founded upon any of the causes mentioned in this section, except the citizenship of the parties, suit must be brought in the district of which the defendant is an inhabitant.
2. But where the jurisdiction of such court is founded solely upon the fact that the parties are citizens of different States, the suit may be brought in the district in which either the plaintiff or the defendant resides.
3. Where the plaintiff is a citizen and inhabitant of Nebraska and defendant is a citizen and resident of Illinois, the latter may be sued by the former in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Nebraska.

Submitted Jan. 27, 1890. Decided March 3, 1890.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Nebraska to review a judgment for plaintiff in an action for falsely and maliciously and without probable cause suing out attachments against him. On motion to dismiss or affirm. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

NOTE.—As to jurisdiction of United States circuit court depending on parties and residence, see note to Emory v. Greenough, Bk. 1, p. 640.

Messrs. N. S. Harwood and John H. Ames, for defendant in error, in support of motion.

Messrs. Walter J. Lamb, Arnott C. Ricketts and Henry H. Wilson, for plaintiff in error, in opposition.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

Walters brought his action on the 21st day of July, 1887, in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Nebraska, against The McCormick Harvesting Machine Company, alleging that he was a citizen and resident of the State of Nebraska, and that the defendant was a corporation duly incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, "but having a local habitation and managing agent in Nebraska," for falsely and maliciously, and without probable or reasonable cause, suing out two attachments against him, and placed his damages at $10,500, for which he asked judgment and costs. The defendant answered, justifying the issuing of the writs of attachment and denying any liability by reason thereof; and also pleaded in set-off and counterclaim two judgments against Walters, one for $957.98 and $28 costs, and one for $2,394.01 and $26 costs, both bearing interest at ten per centum per annum from June, 1887; and prayed judgment against the plaintiff for said several sums and for interest and costs. Subsequently leave was granted to the McCormick Company to withdraw its answer and to file a plea, which averred "that now and at the commencement of this action the said Charles W. Walters was a citizen and inhabitant of the State of Nebraska, and this defendant was a corporation duly organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, and was and is a citizen, resident and inhabitant of the State of Illinois, and was not and is not a citizen, resident or inhabitant of the State or District of Nebraska; that a summons in this action was served on this defendant's agent in the State of Nebraska, where this defendant has an office, said agent being only its local managing agent for its business in Nebraska; and this defendant says that this action was brought since the 15th day of March, 1887, and this defendant says that it is not subject to be sued or to be summoned by original process out of this court in this cause in this judicial district;" and defendant prayed judgment that the action might be abated.

This plea was upon hearing overruled, and the defendant ruled to answer in thirty days, and plaintiff to reply in forty-five days, and a reply in general denial of the answer was filed, the answer being treated as if still a pending pleading. The case came on for trial and resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff, assessing his damages in the sum of $1,358.57, upon which judgment was entered. A motion for new trial was made and denied, and a writ of error sued out from this court, which the defendant in error now moves to dismiss, uniting with that motion a motion to affirm.

No bill of exceptions was taken, and the denial of the jurisdiction of the circuit court is the only question which can be raised upon the record. And this has no relation to the mode of service. The defendant was a foreign corporation, and the Statute of Nebraska provided that "when the defendant is a foreign corporation, having a managing agent in this State, the service may be upon such agent." (Code Civ. Proc. § 75; Comp. Stat. Neb. 1885, p. 687.) The plea admits service upon the Company's local managing agent, and as the defendant entered full appearance and answer, and, after the withdrawal of the answer and the filing of the plea and its disposition, went to trial on the merits upon issue joined on that answer, the objection to the jurisdiction, if it can be urged at all, must be confined to want of power to entertain the suit outside of defendant's own district.

By section 1 of the Act of March 3, 1887 (24 Stat. 552), as corrected by the Act of August 13, 1888 (25 Stat. 438), to amend the Act of March 3, 1875, determining the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States, and regulating the removal of causes from the state courts and for other purposes, it was provided: "But no person shall be arrested in one district for trial in another in any civil action before a circuit or district court; and no civil suit shall be brought before either of said courts against any person by any original process or proceeding in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant; but where the jurisdiction is founded only on the fact that the action is between citizens of different States, suit shall be brought only in the district of the residence of either the plaintiff or the defendant." The jurisdiction common to all the circuit courts of the United States in respect to the subject matter of the suit and the character of the parties who might sustain suits in those courts, is described in the section, while the foregoing clause relates to the district in which a suit may be originally brought. Where the jurisdiction is founded upon any of the causes mentioned in this section, except the citizenship of the parties, it must be brought in the district of which the defendant is an inhabitant, but where the jurisdiction is founded solely upon the fact that the parties are citizens of different States, the suit may be brought in the district in which either the plaintiff or the defendant resides. "The concluding lines," said Mr. Justice Field in Wilson v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 34 Fed. Rep. 561, "are to be read as a proviso to the general provision that no civil suit shall be brought except in the district whereof the defendant is an inhabitant." This conclusion was reached and announced by many of the circuit courts, and there can be no doubt of its correctness. Fales v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 32 Fed. Rep. 678; St. Louis, V. & T. H. R. Co. v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. 33 Fed. Rep. 885; Loomis v. N. Y. & C. Gas Co. Id. 358; Gavin v. Vance, Id. 84; Swayne v. Boyleston Ins. Co. 35 Fed. Rep. 1.

The Judiciary Act of 1789 provided that no civil suit should be brought before the circuit or district courts against an inhabitant of the United States by any original process in any other district than that whereof he was an inhabitant or in which he should be found at the time of serving the writ (1 Stat. 79), and the Act of 1875 (18 Stat. 470) contained a similar provision. This liability of the defendant to be sued in a district where he might be found at the time of serving process was omitted in the Act of 1887, but he still remained liable to suit in the district of the residence of the plaintiff as well as in his own district; and as he could not be sued anywhere else, we held in Smith v. Lyon, 138 U. S. 315 [88: 685], that where there were two plaintiffs, citizens of different States, the defendant, being a citizen of another State, could not be sued in the State of either of the plaintiffs. Mr. Justice Miller points out, in delivering the opinion of the court, that the evident purpose of Congress in the Act of 1887 was to restrict rather than enlarge the jurisdiction of the circuit court, "while," he says, "at the same time a suit is permitted to be brought in any district where either plaintiff or defendant resides."

The defendant answered to the merits in this case, and was then permitted to file the plea in question for the purpose of insisting that it was not subject to suit in a United States court in the district of the plaintiff's residence. Upon the overruling of this plea, the cause proceeded to trial on the merits upon the issues made up on the complaint, answer and replication, the trial continuing for several days, both parties appearing by their attorneys, adding testimony and arguing the case to the jury. Under these circumstances, there being no question whatever presented by the record, except whether the defendant was liable to be sued in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Nebraska, and it being clear that it was, and there being color for the motion to dismiss, we sustain the motion to affirm, as we do not need further argument on that question.

Judgment affirmed.

In the Matter of JAMES J. MEDLEY, Petitioner.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 160-176.)

Colorado Statute as to murder, ex post facto law—greater punishment—law passed after offense—solitary confinement—secrecy as to time—discharge by habeas corpus—notice—repeal of former law.

1. The Colorado Act of April 9, 1889, prescribing the punishment for murder, which became operative on the 19th day of July, 1890, is an ex post facto law, and is void under the Constitution of the United States as to a murder committed May 13, 1889.

2. Any law which is passed after the commission of the offense for which the party is being tried is an ex post facto law, when it inflicts a greater punishment than the law annexed to the crime at the time it was committed, or which alters the situation of the accused to his disadvantage.
3. No one can be criminally punished in this country except according to the law prescribed for his government by the sovereign authority before the imputed offense was committed, or by some law passed afterwards by which the punishment is not increased.
4. The solitary confinement to which the prisoner is subjected by the said Statute of Colorado of 1889 is an additional punishment of the most important and painful character, and is therefore forbidden by this provision of the Constitution of the United States.
5. The new power of fixing any day and hour during a period of a week for the execution, given by said Act to the warden of the penitentiary, is a new and important power and is a departure from the law as it existed before, and, with its secrecy causing increased mental anxiety to the prisoner, amounts to an increase of punishment and renders the law ex post facto and void.
6. Under the writ of habeas corpus, this court orders the discharge of the prisoner from imprisonment in the penitentiary, under the Statute of Colorado invalid as to this case; but directs that the attorney-general of the State be given ten days' prior notice of such discharge.
7. This court does not remand the prisoner to be proceeded against in the court which condemned him, because, while the Statute under which he is now held in custody is an ex post facto law, it repeals the former law.

[No. 5, Original.]

Argued Jan. 15, 1890. Decided March 3, 1890.

PETITION for a writ of habeas corpus to relieve petitioner from imprisonment under sentence of death in the State of Colorado. Granted, and prisoner discharged from imprisonment.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. A. T. Britton, Henry Wise Garrett and W. V. R. Berry, for petitioner:

Every law that changes the punishment and inflicts a greater punishment than the law annexed to the crime when committed is an ex post facto law.

NOTE.—Retrospective statutes, when valid, see note to Otoe County v. Baldwin, 28: 331.

As to constitutionality of ex post facto laws, see notes to Calder v. Bull, 1: 643, and Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4: 529.

Ex post facto and retrospective laws.

An ex post facto law is one which imposes a punishment for an act which was not punishable at the time it was committed, or imposes additional punishment to that then prescribed. Smith v. Cockrill, 73 U. S. 6 Wall. 756 (18: 973); Calder v. Bull, 3 U. S. 3 Dall. 386 (1: 643).

Ex post facto laws relate to penal and criminal proceedings and not to civil proceedings which affect private rights. Baltimore & S. R. Co. v. Nesbit, 61 U. S. 10 How. 395 (18: 469); Carpenter v. Penn. 53 U. S. 17 How. 456 (15: 127); Looke v. New Orleans, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 172 (18: 334); Watson v. Mercer, 33 U. S. 3 Pet. 88 (3: 876).

134 U. S.

Any law passed after the commission of an offense, which, in relation to that offense or its consequences, alters the situation of a party to his disadvantage, is an ex post facto law. Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 221 (27: 506).

A state law changing the place of trial to another county from that in which the offense was committed or the indictment found, is not an ex post facto law. Gut v. Minnesota, 78 U. S. 9 Wall. 35 (19: 573).

A statute which deprives a man of his estate, or any part of it, for a crime which was not declared to be an offense by any previous law, is void as an ex post facto law. Fletcher v. Peck, 10 U. S. 6 Cranch, 87 (3: 132).

A test oath required of a priest as a condition for exercising the functions of his office, to the effect that he had always been loyal, is unconstitutional as an ex post facto law. Cummings v. Missouri, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 277 (18: 356).

Calder v. Bull, 8 U. S. 3 Dall. 390 (1: 649); Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 221 (27: 506); Cummings v. Missouri, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 320 (18: 362); Shepherd v. People, 25 N. Y. 416.

Solitary confinement was a punishment distinctly inflicted as a "further terror," and meant to be a peculiar hardship and pain to the condemned.

Hartung v. People, 22 N. Y. 106; Russell, Crimes, vol. 1, p. 104, vol. 2, pp. 67, 849, 1022; articles on Prisons in the Encyclopedia Britannica and American Cyclopaedia.

The Statute of 1889 removes absolutely from the court any and all discretion to prolong the time within which the sentence shall be executed.

Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 230 (27: 509); Rez v. Hensey, 1 Burr. 650.

The Act of 1889 renders an act punishable in a manner in which it was not punishable when committed, inflicts a greater punishment than the law annexed to the crime when committed, alters the situation of the accused to their disadvantage and is ex post facto and void.

Donough, 18 Allen, 581; Shepherd v. People, 25 N. Y. 406; Hirschburg v. People, 6 Colo. 145.

Messrs. Sam. W. Jones, Atty. Gen. of State of Colorado, H. Riddell and H. M. Teller, for respondent:

The Statute does not change the punishment for the offense to the disadvantage of the defendant.

A statute which simply enlarges the class of persons who may be competent to testify is not ex post facto in its application to offenses previously committed. Hopt v. Utah, 100 U. S. 574 (23: 262).

There is no inhibition in the Constitution of Indiana against the passage of retrospective statutes. Johnson v. Wells County, 5 West. Rep. 240, 107 Ind. 15.

A State Constitution is not a contract, the obligation of which the State is prohibited by the Federal Constitution from impairing. Church v. Kelsey, 121 U. S. 332 (30: 960).

The constitutional provision that "no State shall pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts," does not apply to a statute in respect to contracts after its passage. Lehigh Water Co. v. Borough of Easton, 121 U. S. 388 (30: 1059).

A state law so affecting the remedy which existed when a contract was made as substantially to impair and lessen the value of the contract is void as impairing its obligation. Seibert v. Lewis, 122 U. S. 234 (30: 1161).

A law changing procedure and manner of enforcing punishment after the commission of the offense is not void ex post facto. Marion v. State, 20 Neb. 233.

A statute cannot affect a title which became vested before the statute was passed, by force of a conveyance previously made. Zornlein v. Bram, 1 Cent. Rep. 66, 100 N. Y. 12.

A general law for the punishment of offenses, which endeavors to reach, by its retroactive operation, acts previously committed, as well as to prescribe a rule of conduct for the citizen in future, is void in so far as it is retrospective; but such invalidity will not affect its operation in regard to future cases. Jaehne v. People, 123 U. S. 189 (32: 306).

An ex post facto law is one which, in its operation, makes that criminal or penal which was not so at the time the act was performed, or which increases the punishment, or, in short, which, in relation to the offense or its consequences, alters the situation of the party to his disadvantage. Lindzey v. State, 65 Miss. 542.

A law taking away the right to defend against the carrying of concealed weapons on the ground of good cause to apprehend an attack, and changing the penalty by fixing a minimum fine and period of hard labor, is in both particulars an ex post facto law. Id.

A mere change in the mode of trial without altering the punishment, is not an ex post facto law. Anderson v. O'Donnell, 1 L. R. A. 632, 29 S. C. 355.

Iowa Laws of 1886, chap. 66, providing for the closing for one year of a building found to be kept as a liquor nuisance, and for the taxing of an attorney's fee to defendant, does not become an ex post facto law when applied to a case begun before its enactment; nor can it be an ex post facto law, because an action to abate a liquor nuisance is not a criminal proceeding. Drake v. Jordan, 73 Iowa, 707; Campbell v. Manderscheid, 74 Iowa, 708.

An ordinance passed and promulgated subsequent to the issuance of a license to a retailer of spirituous liquors, denouncing a penalty of fine against its violation by such person as shall keep his saloon open after 10 o'clock P. M., is not an ex post facto law as to acts committed after its passage. State v. Isabel, 40 La. Ann. 340.

A statute transferring jurisdiction from one court to another is not such an ex post facto law as will forbid the new tribunal from taking jurisdiction of an offense committed prior to the statute. State v. Cooler, 3 L. R. A. 181, 30 S. C. 105.

The Alabama Act of 1887 reducing the number of peremptory challenges allowed to defendant in felony cases is not ex post facto. South v. State, 36 Ala. 517.

The New York Statute of 1888, providing for the infliction of the death penalty by means of electricity, does not apply to a crime committed before it takes effect, and therefore is not ex post facto as to crimes committed before it takes effect. People v. Nolan, 24 N. Y. S. R. 586, 115 N. Y. 660.

The provision of the Constitution of the United States prohibiting the passage of ex post facto state laws applies only to legislation concerning crimes. Ex parte Sawyer, 124 U. S. 200 (31: 402).

A law affecting the right to maintain a civil action to recover damages for a tort, or taking the right away, neither impairs the obligation of a contract nor partakes of the character of an ex post facto law. Eastman v. Clackamas County, 32 Fed. Rep. 24.

The Legislature may pass retrospective laws unless prohibited by the Constitution, or unless they are violative of vested rights affecting substantial equities. Smith v. Hard, 4 New Eng. Rep. 113, 59 Vt. 13; State v. Skinkle, 8 Cent. Rep. 321, 49 N. J. L. 641.

State v. Johnson, 12 Minn. 476; State v. Williams, 2 Rich. L. (S. C.) 418; Ex parte Karstendick, 93 U. S. 896 (28: 889).

But should the court consider the Law of 1889 ex post facto, as to these petitioners, they should be considered as never having been in jeopardy, and they can be recommitted to the custody of the sheriff to be proceeded with under the same indictments for manslaughter or other offense less than murder.

Packer v. People, 8 Colo. 361; Garvey's Case, 7 Colo. 384.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an application to this court by James J. Medley for a writ of habeas corpus, the object of which is to relieve him from the imprisonment in which he is held by J. A. Lamping, warden of the state penitentiary of the State of Colorado.

The petitioner is held a prisoner under sentence of death pronounced by the District Court of the Second District of the State of Colorado for the County of Arapahoe. The petition of the prisoner sets forth that an indictment for the murder of Ellen Medley was found against him by the grand jury of Arapahoe County on the 5th day of June, 1889; that the indictment charges petitioner with this murder, which took place on the 13th day of May of that year; that he was tried in said district court on the 24th day of September thereafter and found guilty by the jury of murder in the first degree; that on the 29th day of November he was sentenced to be remanded to the custody of the sheriff of Arapahoe County, and within twenty-four hours to be taken by said sheriff and delivered to the warden of the state penitentiary, to be kept in solitary confinement until the fourth week of the month of December thereafter, and that then, upon a day and hour to be designated by the warden, he should be taken from said place of confinement to the place of execution, within the confines of the penitentiary, and there be hanged by the neck until he was dead.

Copies of the indictment, of the verdict of the jury and of the sentence of the court are annexed to the petition, as exhibits.

The petitioner then sets forth that he was sentenced under the Statute of Colorado, approved April 19th, 1889, and which went into effect July 19th, 1889, and repealed all Acts and parts of former Acts inconsistent therewith, without any saving clause, and that the crime on account of which the sentence was passed was charged to be and was actually committed on the 13th day of May of the same year.

The petitioner enumerates some twenty variances between the Statute in force at the time the crime was committed and that under which he was sentenced to punishment in the present case, all of which are claimed to be changes to his prejudice and injury, and therefore ex post facto within the meaning of section 10, article I., of the Constitution of the United States, which declares that no State shall pass any bill of attainder or ex post facto law.

The petitioner applies directly to this court for the writ of habeas corpus instead of to the circuit court of the United States, because, he alleges, that court has in a similar case, involving the same points, decided adversely to the petitioner.

Upon examining the petition and the accompanying exhibits an order was made that the writ should issue and be returnable forthwith. By an arrangement between the parties and the counsel, it was agreed that the prisoner need not, in person, be brought to Washington. The case was therefore heard on the documents and transcripts of record presented to the court, and the only question argued before us was whether the Act of April 19, 1889, which, by the Constitution of the State of Colorado, became operative on the 19th day of July thereafter, and under which the sentence complained of was imposed by the district court, is an ex post facto law, so as to be void under the provision of the Constitution of the United States on that subject, and, if so, in what respect it is in violation of that constitutional provision.

This Statute will be found in the Session Laws of the State of Colorado of 1887, page 118, and is as follows:

"An Act relative to the time, place and manner of infliction of the death penalty, and to provide means for the infliction of such penalty; and making it a misdemeanor, punishable by fine or imprisonment, to disclose or publish proceedings in relation thereto.

"Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Colorado:

Sec. 1. The commissioners of the state penitentiary, at the expense of the State of Colorado, shall provide a suitable room or place inclosed from public view within the walls of the penitentiary, and therein erect and construct, and at all times have in preparation, all necessary scaffolding, drops and appliances requisite for carrying into execution the death penalty; and the punishment of death must, in each and every case of death sentence pronounced in this State, be inflicted by the warden of the said state penitentiary in the room or place and with the appliances provided as aforesaid, by hanging such convict by the neck until he shall be dead.

"Sec. 2. Whenever a person [is] convicted of a crime, the punishment whereof is death, and such convicted person be sentenced to suffer the penalty of death, the judge passing such sentence shall appoint and designate in the warrant of conviction a week of time within which such sentence must be executed; such week, so appointed, shall be not less than two nor more than four weeks from the day of passing such sentence. Said warrant shall be directed to the warden of the state penitentiary of this State, commanding said warden to do execution of the sentence imposed as aforesaid, upon some day within the week of time designated in said warrant, and shall be delivered to the sheriff of the county wherein such conviction is had, who shall within twenty-four hours thereafter proceed to the said penitentiary and deliver such convicted person, together with the warrant as aforesaid, to the said warden, who shall keep such convict in solitary confinement until infliction of the death penalty; and no person shall be allowed access to said convict, except his attendants, counsel, physician, a spiritual adviser of his own selection, and members of his family, and then only in accordance with prison regulations.

"Sec. 3. The particular day and hour of the execution of said sentence, within the week specified in said warrant, shall be fixed by said warden, and he shall invite to be present thereat the sheriff of the county wherein the conviction was had, the chaplain and physician of the penitentiary, one practicing surgeon resident in the State, the spiritual adviser of the convict, if any, and six reputable citizens of the State of full age. Said warden may also appoint three deputies or guards to assist him in executing said sentence, and said warden shall permit no person or persons to be present at such execution except those provided for in this section. The time fixed by said warden for said execution shall be by him kept secret and in no manner divulged, except privately to the persons by him invited to be present as aforesaid; and such persons so invited shall not divulge such invitation to any person or persons whomsoever nor in any manner disclose the time of such execution. All persons present at such execution shall keep whatever may transpire thereat secret and inviolate, save and except the facts certified to by them as hereinafter provided. No account of the details of any such execution, beyond the statement of the fact that such convict was on the day in question duly executed according to law at the state penitentiary, shall in any manner be published in this State.

"Sec. 4. Upon receiving notice from said warden of such execution, it shall be the duty of said sheriff to be present and witness such execution; and shall receive and cause the certified transcript of record of said execution, hereinafter specified, to be filed within ten days after said execution, in the office of the clerk of the court in which said conviction was had; and the said clerk shall record said transcript at length in the records of the said case. In case of the disability, from illness, or other sufficient cause, of said warden or said sheriff to be present at such execution it shall be the duty of their respective deputies, acting in their place and stead, to execute said warrant, and to perform all other duties in connection therewith and by this Act imposed upon their principals.

"Sec. 5. Said warden shall keep a book of record, to be known as 'Record of Executions,' in which shall be entered at length the reports hereinafter specified. Immediately after said execution a post mortem examination of the body of the convict shall be made by the attending physician and surgeon, and they shall enter in said book of record the nature and extent of such examination, and sign and certify to the same. Said warden shall also immediately make and enter in said book a report setting forth the time of such execution, and that the convict (naming him) was then and there executed in conformity to the sentence specified in the warrant of the court (naming such court) to him directed, and in accordance with the provisions of this Act; and shall insert in said report the names of all the persons who were present and witnessed said execution, and shall procure each and every of such persons to sign said report with their full name and place of residence before leaving the place of execution; and said warden shall thereupon attach his certificate to said report, certifying to the truth and correctness thereof, and shall immediately deliver a certified transcript of said record entry to said sheriff.

"Sec. 6. Any person who shall violate or omit to comply with section 3 of this Act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof be punished by a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $500, or by imprisonment in the county jail for not less than thirty days nor more than six months.

"Sec. 7. The warden or other person acting in his stead who performs the duties imposed upon him by this Act shall be paid for his services out of the moneys provided for the maintenance of said state penitentiary the sum of fifty (50) dollars; and the said sheriff shall be paid for his services by the county where such conviction was had the sum of twenty-five (25) dollars, together with his mileage fees as provided by law.

"Sec. 8. All Acts and parts of Acts inconsistent with the provisions of this Act are hereby repealed.

"Approved April 19, 1889."

Section 19 of article V. of the Constitution of the State of Colorado, as amended November 4, 1884, is as follows:

"No Act of the General Assembly shall take effect until ninety days after its passage, unless in case of emergency (which shall be expressed in the preamble or body of the Act) the General Assembly shall, by vote of two thirds of all the members elected to each house, otherwise direct. No bill except the general appropriation for the expenses of the government only, introduced in either house of the General Assembly after the first thirty days of the session, shall become a law."

We think it follows from this provision that neither the repealing clause nor any other part of this Act was in force prior to the 19th of July, 1889, and that the crime, having been committed in May of that year, was to be governed in all particulars, of trial and punishment, by the law then in force, except so far as the Legislature had power to apply other principles to the trial and punishment of the crime. If these were conducted and administered under the Law of 1889, which became a law after the commission of the offense, and its provisions, so far as applied by the court to the case of the prisoner, were such invasions of his rights as to properly be called ex post facto laws, they were void.

It is unnecessary to examine all the points in which, according to the argument for plaintiff, the new Statute was ex post facto; therefore we shall notice only a few of those which appear to us most deserving of attention, and in doing this we shall compare the new Statute with the one which it superseded and repealed.

The first of these, and perhaps the most important, is that which declares that the warden shall keep such convict in solitary confinement until the infliction of the death penalty. The former law, the Act of 1883, contained no such provision. It declared that every person convicted of murder in the first degree should suffer death, and every person convicted of murder of the second degree should suffer imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term of not less than ten years, which might extend to life; and it declared that the manner of inflicting the punishment of death should be by hanging the person convicted by the neck until death, at such time as the court should direct, not less than fifteen nor more than twenty-five days from the time sentence was pronounced, unless for good cause the court or governor might prolong the time. The prisoner was to be kept in the county jail under the control of the sheriff of the county, who was the officer charged with the execution of the sentence of the court. Solitary confinement was neither authorized by the former Statute, nor was its practice in use in regard to prisoners awaiting the punishment of death.

This matter of solitary confinement, is not, as seems to be supposed by counsel, and as is suggested in an able opinion on this Statute, furnished us by the brief of the counsel for the State, by Judge Hayt (in the case of Henry Tyson), a mere unimportant regulation as to the safe-keeping of the prisoner, and is not relieved of its objectionable features by the qualifying language, that no person shall be allowed access to said convict except his attendants, counsel, physician, a spiritual adviser of his own selection, and members of his family, and then only in accordance with prison regulations.

Solitary confinement, as a punishment for crime, has a very interesting history of its own, in almost all countries where imprisonment is one of the means of punishment. In a very exhaustive article on this subject in the American Encyclopedia, volume XIII., under the word "Prison," this history is given. In that article it is said that the first plan adopted when public attention was called to the evils of congregating persons in masses without employment, was the solitary prison connected with the Hospital San Michele at Rome, in 1708, but little known prior to the experiment in Walnut Street Penitentiary in Philadelphia, in 1787. The peculiarities of this system were the complete isolation of the prisoner from all human society, and his confinement in a cell of considerable size, so arranged that he had no direct intercourse with or sight of any human being, and no employment or instruction. Other prisons on the same plan, which were less liberal in the size of their cells and the perfection of their appliances, were erected in Massachusetts, New Jersey, Maryland and some of the other States. But experience demonstrated that there were serious objections to it. A considerable number of the prisoners fell, after even a short confinement, into a semi-fatuous condition, from which it was next to impossible to arouse them, and others became violently insane; others, still, committed suicide; while those who stood the ordeal better were not generally reformed, and in most cases did not recover sufficient mental activity to be of any subsequent service to the community. It became evident that some changes must be made in the system, and the "separate" system was originated by the Philadelphia Society for Ameliorating the Miseries of Public Prisons, founded in 1787.

The article then gives a great variety of instances in which the system is somewhat modified, and it is within the memory of many persons interested in prison discipline that some thirty or forty years ago the whole subject attracted the general public attention, and its main feature of solitary confinement was found to be too severe.

It is to this mode of imprisonment that the phrase "solitary confinement" has been applied in nearly all instances where it is used, and it means this exclusion from human associations; where it is intended to mitigate it by any statutory enactment or by any regulations of persons having authority to do so, it is by express exceptions and modifications of the original principle of "solitary confinement." The Statute of Colorado is undoubtedly framed on this idea. Instead of confinement in the ordinary county prison of the place where he and his friends reside; where they may, under the control of the sheriff, see him and visit him; where the sheriff and his attendants must see him; where his religious adviser and his legal counsel may often visit him without any hindrance of law on the subject, the convict is transferred to a place where imprisonment always implies disgrace, and which, as this court has judicially decided in Ex parte Wilson, 114 U. S. 417 [29: 89]; Mackin v. United States, 117 U. S. 348 [29: 909]; Parkinson v. United States, 121 U. S. 281 [30: 959], and United States v. De Walt, 128 U. S. 398 [32: 485], is itself an infamous punishment, and is there to be kept in "solitary confinement," the primary meaning of which phrase we have already explained.

The qualifying phrase in this Statute is but a small mitigation of this solitary confinement, for it expressly declares that no one shall be allowed access to the convict except certain persons, and these are not admissible unless their access to the prisoner is in accordance with prison regulations, prescribed by the board of commissioners of the penitentiary under section 2558 of the Laws of Colorado in force since 1877. This section declares that "the board of commissioners of the penitentiary shall make such rules and regulations for the government, discipline and police of the penitentiary, and for the punishment of prisoners confined, not inconsistent with law, as they deem expedient." What these may be at any particular time is unknown. How far they may permit access of counsel, physicians, the spiritual adviser and the members of his family is a matter in their discretion, which they exercise by general rules, which may be altered at any time so as to exclude all these persons, and thus the prisoner be left to the worst form of solitary confinement.

Even the statutory amelioration is a very limited one. By the words "his attendants" in the Statute, is evidently meant the officers of the prison and subordinates, who must necessarily furnish him with his food and his clothing, and make inspection every day that he still exists. They may be forbidden by prison regulations, however, from holding any conversation with him. The attendance of the counsel can only be casual, and a very few interviews, one or two, perhaps, are all that he would have before his death, and that of the physician not at all, unless he was so sick as to require it, and the spiritual adviser of his own selection, and the members of his family, are all dependent for their opportunities of seeing the prisoner upon the regulations of the prison. The solitary confinement, then, which is meant by the Statute, remains of the essential character of that mode of prison life as it originally was prescribed and carried out, to mark them as examples of the just punishment of the worst crimes of the human race.

The brief of counsel for the prisoner furnishes us with the statutory history of solitary confinement in the English law. The Act 25 George II., chapter 37, entitled "An Act for the Better Preventing the Horrid Crime of Murder," is preceded by the following preamble: "Whereas, the horrid crime of murder has of late been more frequently perpetrated than formerly; and whereas it is thereby become necessary that some further terror and peculiar mark of infamy be added to the punishment of death now by law upon such as shall be guilty of the said offense"—then follow certain enactments, the sixth section of which reads as follows: "Be it further enacted, That from and after such conviction and judgment given thereupon, the jailer or keeper to whom such criminal shall be delivered for safe custody shall confine such prisoner to some cell separate and apart from the other prisoners, and that no person or persons whatsoever, except the jailer or keeper, or his servants, shall have access to any such prisoner, without license being first obtained."

This Statute is very pertinent to the case before us, as showing, first, what was understood by solitary confinement at that day, and, second, that it was considered as an additional punishment of such a severe kind that it is spoken of in the preamble as "a further terror and peculiar mark of infamy" to be added to the punishment of death. In Great Britain, as in other countries, public sentiment revolted against this severity, and by the Statute of 6 and 7 William IV., chapter 30, the additional punishment of solitary confinement was repealed.

The term ex post facto law, as found in the provision of the Constitution of the United States, to wit, that "no State shall pass any bill of attainder, ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts," has been held to apply to criminal laws alone, and has been often the subject of construction in this court. Without making extracts from these decisions, it may be said that any law which was passed after the commission of the offense for which the party is being tried is an ex post facto law, when it inflicts a greater punishment than the law annexed to the crime at the time it was committed (Calder v. Bull, 3 U. S. 3 Dall. 386, 390 [1:648,649]; Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 221 [27:506]; Fletcher v. Peck, 10 U. S. 6 Cranch, 87 [3:162]); or which alters the situation of the accused to his disadvantage; and that no one can be criminally punished in this country except according to a law prescribed for his government by the sovereign authority before the imputed offense was committed, or by some law passed afterwards by which the punishment is not increased.

It seems to us that the considerations which we have here suggested show that the solitary confinement to which the prisoner was subjected by the Statute of Colorado of 1889, and by the judgment of the court in pursuance of that Statute, was an additional punishment of the most important and painful character, and is, therefore, forbidden by this provision of the Constitution of the United States.

Another provision of the Statute, which is supposed to be liable to this objection, of its ex post facto character, is found in section 3, in which the particular day and hour of the execution of the sentence within the week specified by the warrant shall be fixed by the warden, and he shall invite to be present certain persons named, to wit, a chaplain, a physician, a surgeon, the spiritual adviser of the convict, and six reputable citizens of the State of full age, and that the time fixed by said warden for such execution shall be by him kept secret, and in no manner divulged except privately to said persons invited by him to be present as aforesaid, and such persons shall not divulge such invitation to any person or persons whomsoever, nor in any manner disclose the time of such execution. And section six provides that any person who shall violate or omit to comply with the requirements of section three of the Act shall be punished by fine or imprisonment. We understand the meaning of this section to be that within the one week mentioned in the judgment of the court the warden is charged with the power of fixing the precise day and hour when the prisoner shall be executed; that he is forbidden to communicate that time to the prisoner; that all persons whom he is directed to invite to be present at the execution are forbidden to communicate that time to him; and that, in fact, the prisoner is to be kept in utter ignorance of the day and hour when his mortal life shall be terminated by hanging, until the moment arrives when this act is to be done.

Objections are made to this provision as being a departure from the law as it stood before, and as being an additional punishment to the prisoner, and therefore ex post facto.

It is obvious that it confers upon the warden of the penitentiary a power which had heretofore been solely confided to the court; and is therefore a departure from the law as it stood when the crime was committed.

Nor can we withhold our conviction of the proposition that when a prisoner sentenced by a court to death is confined in the penitentiary awaiting the execution of the sentence, one of the most horrible feelings to which he can be subjected during that time is the uncertainty during the whole of it, which may exist for the period of four weeks, as to the precise time when his execution shall take place. Notwithstanding the argument that under all former systems of administering capital punishment the officer appointed to execute it had a right to select the time of the day when it should be done, this new power of fixing any day and hour during a period of a week for the execution is a new and important power conferred on that officer, and is a departure from the law as it existed at the time the offense was committed, and with its secrecy must be accompanied by an immense mental anxiety amounting to a great increase of the offender's punishment.

There are other provisions of the Statute pointed out in the argument of counsel, which are alleged to be subject to the same objection, but we think the two we have mentioned are quite sufficient to show that the Constitution of the United States is violated by this Statute as applied to crimes committed before it came into force.

These considerations render it our duty to order the release of the prisoner from the custody of the warden of the penitentiary of Colorado, as he is now held by him under the judgment and order of the court.

A question suggested itself, however, to the court which is not a little embarrassing, and which was not presented by counsel in the argument of the case. This consideration arises from the fact that there does not seem to be in the record before us any error in the proceedings of the court on the trial and the verdict of the jury, by which the party was convicted of murder in the first degree. It is only when the sentence or judgment of the court upon that verdict is entered that the error of the proceedings commences. When, in the language of the judgment of the court, the prisoner was ordered to be "kept by the warden of the penitentiary in solitary confinement until the day of his execution," and when the knowledge of the day and the hour of his execution was by the Statute to be withheld from him, the Constitution of the United States was violated because the additional punishments were inflicted on him by reason of the direction of the Statute, which we have just seen was an ex post facto law, and in those respects void as being forbidden by the Constitution of the United States.

If this were a writ of error to the Supreme Court of Colorado, as Kring's Case was a writ of error to the Supreme Court of Missouri, our duty would be plain, namely, to reverse the judgment for the error found in it and remand the case to the state court for further proceedings. If such were the case before us our duty would be to reverse the judgment and remand the case to the court below to deal with the prisoner in the face of the fact that a verdict of guilty, which was valid and legal, remains unenforced. But under the writ of habeas corpus we cannot do anything else than discharge the prisoner from the wrongful confinement in the penitentiary under the Statute of Colorado invalid as to this case.

The language of the Act of Congress, however, seems to have contemplated some emergency of the kind now before us. Section 761 of the Revised Statutes declares that the court, or justice or judge (before whom the prisoner may be brought by writ of habeas corpus) shall proceed in a summary way to determine the facts of the case by hearing the testimony and argument, and thereupon to dispose of the party as law and justice require.

What disposition shall we now make of the prisoner, who is entitled to his discharge from the custody of the warden of the penitentiary under the order and judgment of the court, because, within the language of section 758, he is in custody in violation of the Constitution of the United States, but who is, nevertheless, guilty, as the record before us shows, of the crime of murder in the first degree? We do not think that we are authorized to remand the prisoner to the custody of the sheriff of the proper county to be proceeded against in the court of Colorado which condemned him, in such a manner as they may think proper, because it is apparent that while the Statute under which he is now held in custody is an ex post facto law in regard to his offense, it repeals the former law, under which he might otherwise have been punished, and we are not advised whether that court possesses any power to deal further with the prisoner or not. Such a question is not before us, because it has not been acted upon by the court below, and it is neither our inclination nor our duty to decide what the court may or what it may not do in regard to the case as it stands. Upon the whole, after due deliberation, we have come to the conclusion that the attorney-general of the State of Colorado shall be notified by the warden of the penitentiary of the precise time when he will release the prisoner from his custody under the present sentence and warrant at least ten days beforehand, and after doing this, and at that time, he shall discharge the prisoner from his custody; and such will be the order of this court.

ORDER.

Per Mr. Justice Miller:

On consideration of the application for the discharge of the petitioner, James J. Medley, the writ of habeas corpus, directing J. A. Lamping, warden of the state penitentiary of the State of Colorado at Cañon City, Fremont County, State of Colorado, to produce the body of the said James J. Medley before this court, and to certify the cause of his detention and imprisonment, having been duly issued and served, and the said J. A. Lamping, warden as aforesaid, having certified that said James J. Medley is detained in his custody under and by virtue of a writ issued out of the District Court of Arapahoe County, State of Colorado, and the cause of said imprisonment having been duly inquired into by this court upon the return of the said writ of habeas corpus heretofore issued herein, and counsel having been heretofore heard and due consideration having been had:

It is now here ordered by this court that the imprisonment of said James J. Medley under said writ issued out of the District Court of Arapahoe County, State of Colorado, is without authority of law and in violation of the Constitution of the United States, and that the said James J. Medley is entitled to have his liberty. Whereupon it is hereby ordered that the said James J. Medley be, and he is hereby, discharged from said imprisonment.

It is further ordered that said J. A. Lamping, warden as aforesaid, do notify the attorney-general of the State of Colorado of the day and the hour of the day when he will discharge the said James J. Medley from imprisonment, and that such notice be given at least ten days before the release of the prisoner.

Mr. Justice Brewer, dissenting:

I dissent from the opinion and judgment as above declared. The substantial punishment imposed by each Statute is death by hanging. The differences between the two, as to the manner in which this sentence of death shall be carried into execution, are trifling. What are they? By the old law, execution must be within twenty-five days from the day of sentence. By the new, within twenty-eight days. By the old, confinement prior to execution was in the county jail. By the new, in the penitentiary. By the old, the sheriff was the hangman. By the new, the warden. Under the old, no one had a right of access to the condemned except his counsel, though the sheriff might, in his discretion, permit anyone to see him. By the new, his attendants, counsel, physician, spiritual adviser and members of his family have a right of access, and no one else is permitted to see him. Under the old, his confinement might be absolutely solitary, at the discretion of the sheriff, with but a single interruption. Under the new, access is given to him as a matter of right, to all who ought to be permitted to see him. True, access is subject to prison regulations; so, in the jail, the single authorized access of counsel was subject to jail regulations. It is not to be assumed that either regulations would be unreasonable, or operate to prevent access at any proper time. Surely, when all who ought to see the condemned have a right of access, subject to the regulations of the prison, it seems a misnomer to call this "solitary confinement," in the harsh sense in which this phrase is sometimes used. All that is meant is, that a condemned murderer shall not be permitted to hold anything like a public reception; and that a gaping crowd shall be excluded from his presence. Again, by the old law, the sheriff fixes the hour within a prescribed day. By the new, the warden fixes the hour and day within a named week. And these are all the differences which the court can find between the two Statutes, worthy of mention.

Was there ever a case in which the maxim, "De minimis non curat lex," had a more just and wholesome application? Yet, on account of these differences, a convicted murderer is to escape the death he deserves and be turned loose on society.

I am authorized to say that Mr. Justice Bradley concurs in this dissent.

PETITION for a writ of habeas corpus to relieve petitioner from imprisonment on a conviction for murder in Colorado. Petitioner discharged.

Same counsel as in Medley's Case, ante, p. 885.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

This case is in every respect the same as that of Ex parte James J. Medley. By petition to us we are advised that Savage was indicted by the grand jury of Arapahoe County for the crime of murder in the first degree, charged to have been committed on the 25th day of June, A. D. 1889, by killing one Emanuel Harbert; and that on the 23d of October thereafter he was found guilty by the jury of murder in the first degree. A similar judgment to that in the case of Medley was passed upon him, and he was remanded to the custody of the warden of the penitentiary of the State of Colorado under an order of precisely the same character as that in the case of Medley. It will thus be seen that the same Statute involved in that case was the authority under which the court of Colorado rendered its judgment and committed the prisoner to the care of the warden of the penitentiary; that this Statute came into force after the commission of the offense of which Savage was convicted, and is therefore ex post facto in its application to his case. The same order, therefore, that we have directed to be entered in Medley's Case will be entered in this case, releasing the prisoner from the custody of the warden, after due notice to the attorney-general of the State of Colorado.

ORDER.

Per Mr. Justice Miller:

On consideration of the application for the discharge of the petitioner, James H. Savage, the writ of habeas corpus, directing J. A. It is now here ordered by this court that the imprisonment of said James H. Savage under said writ issued out of the District Court of Arapahoe County, State of Colorado, is without authority of law and in violation of the Constitution of the United States, and that the said James H. Savage is entitled to have his liberty. Whereupon it is hereby ordered that the said James H. Savage be, and he is hereby, discharged from said imprisonment.

It is further ordered that the said J. A. Lamping, warden as aforesaid, do notify the attorney-general of the State of Colorado of the day and the hour of the day when he will discharge the said James H. Savage from imprisonment, and that such notice be given at least ten days before the release of the prisoner.

Ex parte Ayers, 123 U. S. 443 (31: 216).

Mr. Justice Bradley delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action brought in the circuit court of the United States, in December, 1884, against the State of Louisiana by Hans, a citizen of that State, to recover the amount of certain coupons annexed to bonds of the State, issued under the provisions of an Act of the Legislature approved January 24, 1874. The bonds are known and designated as the "Consolidated Bonds of the State of Louisiana," and the coupons sued on are for interest which accrued January 1, 1880. The grounds of the action are stated in the petition as follows:

"Your petitioner avers that by the issue of said bonds and coupons said State contracted with and agreed to pay the bearer thereof the principal sum of said bonds forty years from the date thereof, to wit, the first day of January, 1874, and to pay the interest thereon represented by coupons as aforesaid, including the coupons held by your petitioner, semi-annually upon the maturity of said coupons; and said Legislature, by an Act approved January 24, 1874, proposed an Amendment to the Constitution of said State, which was afterwards duly adopted, and is as follows, to wit:

"No. 1. The issue of consolidated bonds, authorized by the General Assembly of the State at its regular session in the year 1874, is hereby declared to create a valid contract between the State and each and every holder of said bonds, which the State shall by no means and in no wise impair. The said bonds shall be a valid obligation of the State in favor of any holder thereof, and no court shall enjoin the payment of the principal or interest thereof or the levy and collection of the tax therefor. To secure such levy, collection and payment the judicial power shall be exercised when necessary. The tax required for the payment of the principal and interest of said bonds shall be assessed and collected each and every year until said bonds shall be paid, principal and interest, and the proceeds shall be paid by the treasurer of the State to the holders of said bonds as the principal and interest shall fall due, and no further legislation or appropriation shall be requisite for the said assessment and collection and for such payment from the treasury."

"And petitioner further avers that, notwithstanding said solemn compact with the holders of said bonds, said State hath refused and still refuses to pay said coupons held by petitioner, and by its Constitution, adopted in 1879, ordained as follows:

"That the coupons of said consolidated bonds falling due the first of January, 1880, be, and the same is hereby, remitted, and any interest taxes collected to meet said coupons are hereby transferred to defray the expenses of the state government; and by article 257 of said Constitution also prescribed that 'the Constitution of this State, adopted in 1863, and all amendments thereto, is declared to be superseded by this Constitution; and said State thereby undertook to repudiate her contract obligations aforesaid and to prohibit her officers and agents executing the same, and said State claims that by said provisions of said Constitution she is relieved from the obligations of her aforesaid contract and from the payment of said coupons held by petitioner, and so refuses payment thereof and had prohibited her officers and agents making such payment.

"Petitioner also avers that taxes for the payment of the interest upon said bonds due January 1, 1880, were levied, assessed and collected, but said State unlawfully and wrongfully diverted the money so collected, and appropriated the same to payment of the general expenses of the State, and has made no other provision for the payment of said interest.

"Petitioner also avers that said provisions of said Constitution are in contravention of said contract, and their adoption was an active violation thereof, and that said State thereby sought to impair the validity thereof with your petitioner in violation of article I., section 10, of the Constitution of the United States, and the effect so given to said State Constitution does impair said contract.

"Wherefore petitioner prays that the State of Louisiana be cited to answer this demand, and that after due proceedings she be condemned to pay your petitioner said sum of ($87,500) eight-seven thousand five hundred dollars, with legal interest from January 1, 1880, until paid, and all costs of suit; and petitioner prays for general relief."

A citation being issued, directed to the State, and served upon the governor thereof, the attorney-general of the State filed an exception, of which the following is a copy, to wit:

"Now comes defendant, by the attorney-general, and excepts to plaintiff's suit on the ground that this court is without jurisdiction ratione personae. Plaintiff cannot sue the State without its permission; the Constitution and laws do not give this honorable court jurisdiction of a suit against the State, and its jurisdiction is respectfully declined.

"Wherefore respondent prays to be hence dismissed, with costs, and for general relief."

By the judgment of the court this exception was sustained, and the suit was dismissed. See Hans v. Louisiana, 24 Fed. Rep. 55. To this judgment the present writ of error is brought; and the question is presented, whether a State can be sued in a circuit court of the United States by one of its own citizens upon a suggestion that the case is one that arises under the Constitution or laws of the United States.

The ground taken is that, under the Constitution, as well as under the Act of Congress passed to carry it into effect, a case is within the jurisdiction of the federal courts, without regard to the character of the parties, if it arises under the Constitution or laws of the United States, or, which is the same thing, if it necessarily involves a question under said Constitution or laws. The language relied on is that clause of the 3d article of the Constitution, which declares that "the judicial power of the United States shall extend to all cases in law and equity arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority;" and the corresponding clause of the Act conferring jurisdiction upon the circuit court, which, as found in the Act of March 3, 1875, is as follows, to wit: "That the circuit courts of the United States shall have original cognizance, concurrent with the courts of the several States, of all suits of a civil nature at common law or in equity, . . . arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, or treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority." It is said that these jurisdictional clauses make no exception arising from the character of the parties, and therefore that a State can claim no exemption from suit, if the case is really one arising under the Constitution, laws or treaties of the United States. It is conceded that where the jurisdiction depends alone upon the character of the parties, a controversy between a State and its own citizens is not embraced within it; but it is contended that though jurisdiction does not exist on that ground, it nevertheless does exist if the case itself is one which necessarily involves a federal question; and with regard to ordinary parties this is undoubtedly true. The question now to be decided is, whether it is true where one of the parties is a State, and is sued as a defendant by one of its own citizens.

That a State cannot be sued by a citizen of another State, or of a foreign state, on the mere ground that the case is one arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, is clearly established by the decisions of this court in several recent cases. Louisiana v. Jumel, 107 U. S. 711 [27: 448]; Hagood v. Southern, 117 U. S. 52 [29: 805]; Ex parte Ayers, 123 U. S. 443 [31: 216]. Those were cases arising under the Constitution of the United States, upon laws complained of as impairing the obligation of contracts, one of which was the Constitutional Amendment of Louisiana complained of in the present case. Relief was sought against state officers who professed to act in obedience to those laws. This court held that the suits were virtually against the States themselves and were consequently violative of the 11th Amendment of the Constitution, and could not be maintained. It was not denied that they presented cases arising under the Constitution; but, notwithstanding that, they were held to be prohibited by the Amendment referred to.

In the present case the plaintiff in error contends that he, being a citizen of Louisiana, is not embarrassed by the obstacle of the 11th Amendment, inasmuch as that Amendment only prohibits suits against a State which are brought by the citizens of another State, or by citizens or subjects of a foreign state. It is true, the Amendment does so read; and if there were no other reason or ground for abating his suit, it might be maintainable; and then we should have this anomalous result, that in cases arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, a State may be sued in the federal courts by its own citizens, though it cannot be sued for a like cause of action by the citizens of other States, or of a foreign state; and may be thus sued in the federal courts, although not allowing itself to be sued in its own courts. If this is the necessary consequence of the language of the Constitution and the law, the result is no less startling and unexpected than was the original decision of this court, that under the language of the Constitution and of the Judiciary Act of 1789, a State was liable to be sued by a citizen of another State, or of a foreign country. That decision was made in the case of Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 U. S. 2 Dall. 419 [1: 440], and created such a shock of surprise throughout the country that, at the first meeting of Congress thereafter, the 11th Amendment to the Constitution was almost unanimously proposed, and was in due course adopted by the Legislatures of the States. This Amendment, expressing the will of the ultimate sovereignty of the whole country, superior to all Legislatures and all courts, actually reversed the decision of the supreme court. It did not in terms prohibit suits by individuals against the States, but declared that the Constitution should not be construed to import any power to authorize the bringing of such suits. The language of the Amendment is that "the judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity, commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by citizens of another State, or by citizens or subjects of any foreign state." The supreme court had construed the judicial power as extending to such a suit, and its decision was thus overruled. The court itself so understood the effect of the Amendment, for, after its adoption, Attorney-General Lee, in the case of Hollingsworth v. Virginia, 3 U. S. 3 Dall. 378 [1: 644], submitted this question to the court, "Whether the Amendment did, or did not, supersede all suits depending, as well as prevent the institution of new suits, against any one of the United States, by citizens of another State?" Tilghman and Rawle argued in the negative, contending that the jurisdiction of the court was unimpaired in relation to all suits instituted previously to the adoption of the Amendment. But, on the succeeding day, the court delivered an unanimous opinion, "that the Amendment being constitutionally adopted, there could not be exercised any jurisdiction, in any case, past or future, in which a State was sued by the citizen of another State, or by citizens or subjects of any foreign state."

This view of the force and meaning of the Amendment is important. It shows that, on this question of the suability of the States by individuals, the highest authority of this country was in accord rather with the minority than with the majority of the court in the decision of the case of Chisholm v. Georgia; and this fact lends additional interest to the able opinion of Mr. Justice Iredell on that occasion. The other justices were more swayed by a close observance of the letter of the Constitution, without regard to former experience and usage; and because the letter said that the judicial power shall extend to controversies "between a State and citizens of another State;" and "between a State and foreign states, citizens or subjects," they felt constrained to see in this language a power to enable the individual citizens of one State, or of a foreign state, to sue another State of the Union in the federal courts. Justice Iredell, on the contrary, contended that it was not the intention to create new and unheard of remedies, by subjecting sovereign States to actions at the suit of individuals (which he conclusively showed was never done before), but only, by proper legislation, to invest the federal courts with jurisdiction to hear and determine controversies and cases between the parties designated, that were properly susceptible of litigation in courts.

Looking back from our present standpoint at the decision in Chisholm v. Georgia, we do not greatly wonder at the effect which it had upon the country. Any such power as that of authorizing the federal judiciary to entertain suits by individuals against the States had been expressly disclaimed, and even resented, by the great defenders of the Constitution whilst it was on its trial before the American people. As some of their utterances are directly pertinent to the question now under consideration, we deem it proper to quote them.

The 81st number of the "Federalist," written by Hamilton, has the following profound remarks:

"It has been suggested that an assignment of the public securities of one State to the citizens of another would enable them to prosecute the State in the federal courts for the amount of those securities, a suggestion which the following considerations prove to be without foundation:

"It is inherent in the nature of sovereignty not to be amenable to the suit of an individual without its consent. This is the general sense and the general practice of mankind; and the exemption, as one of the attributes of sovereignty, is now enjoyed by the government of every State in the Union. Unless, therefore, there is a surrender of this immunity in the plan of the convention, it will remain with the States, and the danger intimated must be merely ideal. The circumstances which are necessary to produce an alienation of state sovereignty were discussed in considering the article of taxation, and need not be repeated here. A recurrence to the principles there established will satisfy us that there is no color to pretend that the state governments would, by the adoption of that plan, be divested of the privilege of paying their own debts in their own way, free from any constraint but that which flows from the obligations of good faith. The contracts between a nation and individuals are only binding on the conscience of the sovereign, and have no pretension to a compulsory force. They confer no right of action independent of the sovereign will. To what purpose would it be to authorize suits against States for the debts they owe? How could recoveries be enforced? It is evident that it could not be done without waging war against the contracting State; and to ascribe to the federal courts by mere implication, and in destruction of a pre-existing right of the state governments, a power which would involve such a consequence, would be altogether forced and unwarrantable."

The obnoxious clause to which Hamilton's argument was directed, and which was the ground of the objections which he so forcibly met, was that which declared that "the judicial power shall extend to all . . . controversies between a State and citizens of another State, . . . and between a State and foreign states, citizens or subjects." It was argued by the opponents of the Constitution that this clause would authorize jurisdiction to be given to the federal courts to entertain suits against a State brought by the citizens of another State, or of a foreign state. Adhering to the mere letter, it might be so; and so, in fact, the supreme court held in Chisholm v. Georgia; but looking at the subject as Hamilton did, and as Mr. Justice Iredell did, in the light of history and experience and the established order of things, the views of the latter were clearly right,—as the people of the United States in their sovereign capacity subsequently decided.

But Hamilton was not alone in protesting against the construction put upon the Constitution by its opponents. In the Virginia convention the same objections were raised by George Mason and Patrick Henry, and were met by Madison and Marshall as follows. Madison said: "Its jurisdiction" [the federal jurisdiction] "in controversies between a State and citizens of another State is much objected to, and perhaps without reason. It is not in the power of individuals to call any State into court. The only operation it can have is that, if a State should wish to bring a suit against a citizen, it must be brought before the federal court. This will give satisfaction to individuals, as it will prevent citizens on whom a State may have a claim being dissatisfied with the state courts. . . . It appears to me that this [clause] can have no operation but this—to give a citizen a right to be heard in the federal courts; and if a State should condescend to be a party, this court may take cognizance of it." 3 Elliot's Debates, 533. Marshall, in answer to the same objection, said: "With respect to disputes between a State and the citizens of another State, its jurisdiction has been decreed with unusual vehemence. I hope that no gentleman will think that a State will be called at the bar of the federal court. . . . It is not rational to suppose that the sovereign power should be dragged before a court. The intent is to enable States to recover claims of individuals residing in other States. . . . But, say they, there will be partiality in it if a State cannot be a defendant—if an individual cannot proceed to obtain judgment against a State, though he may be sued by a State. It is necessary to be so, and cannot be avoided. I see a difficulty in making a State defendant which does not prevent its being plaintiff." Id. 555.

It seems to us that these views of those great advocates and defenders of the Constitution were most sensible and just; and they apply equally to the present case as to that then under discussion. The letter is appealed to now, as it was then, as a ground for sustaining a suit brought by an individual against a State. The reason against it is as strong in this case as it was in that. It is an attempt to strain the Constitution and the law to a construction never imagined or dreamed of. Can we suppose that, when the 11th Amendment was adopted, it was understood to be left open for citizens of a State to sue their own State in the federal courts, whilst the idea of suits by citizens of other States, or of foreign states, was indignantly repelled? Suppose that Congress, when proposing the 11th Amendment, had appended to it a proviso that nothing therein contained should prevent a State from being sued by its own citizens in cases arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States: can we imagine that it would have been adopted by the States? The supposition that it would is almost an absurdity on its face.

The truth is, that the cognizance of suits and actions unknown to the law, and forbidden by the law, was not contemplated by the Constitution when establishing the judicial power of the United States. Some things, undoubtedly, were made justiciable which were not known as such at the common law; such, for example, as controversies between States as to boundary lines, and other questions admitting of judicial solution. And yet the case of Penn. v. Lord Baltimore, 1 Ves. Sr. 444, shows that some of these unusual subjects of litigation were not unknown to the courts even in colonial times; and several cases of the same general character arose under the Articles of Confederation, and were brought before the tribunal provided for that purpose in those Articles. 181 U. S. App. 1. The establishment of this new branch of jurisdiction seemed to be necessary from the extinguishment of diplomatic relations between the States. Of other controversies between a State and another State or its citizens, which, on the settled principles of public law, are not subjects of judicial cognizance, this court has often declined to take jurisdiction. See Wisconsin v. Pelican Ins. Co. 127 U. S. 265, 288, 289 [32: 289, 242, 243], and cases there cited.

The suability of a State without its consent was a thing unknown to the law. This has been so often laid down and acknowledged by courts and jurists that it is hardly necessary to be formally asserted. It was fully shown by an exhaustive examination of the old law by Mr. Justice Iredell in his opinion in Chisholm v. Georgia; and it has been conceded in every case since, where the question has, in any way, been presented, even in the cases which have gone farthest in sustaining suits against the officers or agents of States. Osborn v. Bank of United States, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 738 [6: 204]; Davis v. Gray, 83 U. S. 16 Wall. 203 [21: 447]; Board of Liquidation v. McComb, 92 U. S. 581 [23: 623]; United States v. Lee, 106 U. S. 196 [27: 171]; Poindexter v. Greenhow, 109 U. S. 68 [27: 860]; Virginia Coupon Cases, 114 U. S. 269 [29: 185]. In all these cases the effort was to show, and the court held, that the suits were not against the State or the United States, but against the individuals; conceding that if they had been against either the State or the United States, they could not be maintained.

Mr. Webster stated the law with precision in his letter to Baring Brothers & Co. of October 16, 1839. 6 Webster's Works, 537. "The security for state loans," he said, "is the plighted faith of the State as a political community. It rests on the same basis as other contracts with established governments, the same basis, for example, as loans made by the United States under the authority of Congress; that is to say, the good faith of the government making the loan, and its ability to fulfill its engagements."

In Briscoe v. Bank of Kentucky, 36 U. S. 11 Pet. 257, 321 [9: 709, 784], Mr. Justice McLean, delivering the opinion of the court, said: "What means of enforcing payment from the State had the holder of a bill of credit? It is said by the counsel for the plaintiffs that he could have sued the State. But was a State liable to be sued? . . . No sovereign State is liable to be sued without her consent. Under the Articles of Confederation, a State could be sued only in cases of boundary. It is believed that there is no case where a suit has been brought, at any time, on bills of credit against a State; and it is certain that no suit could have been maintained on this ground prior to the Constitution."

"It may be accepted as a point of departure unquestioned," said Mr. Justice Miller, in Cunningham v. Macon & B. R. Co., 109 U. S. 446, 451 [27: 992], "that neither a State nor the United States can be sued as defendant in any court in this country without their consent, except in the limited class of cases in which a State may be made a party in the Supreme Court of the United States by virtue of the original jurisdiction conferred on this court by the Constitution."

Undoubtedly a State may be sued by its own consent, as was the case in Curran v. Arkansas, 56 U. S. 15 How. 304, 309 [14: 705, 706], and in Clark v. Barnard, 108 U. S. 436, 447 [27: 780, 783]. The suit in the former case was prosecuted by virtue of a state law which the Legislature passed in conformity to the Constitution of that State. But this court decided, in Beers v. Arkansas, 61 U. S. 20 How. 527 [15: 991], that the State could repeal that law at any time; that it was not a contract within the terms of the Constitution prohibiting the passage of state laws impairing the obligation of a contract. In that case the law allowing the State to be sued was modified, pending certain suits against the State on its bonds, so as to require the bonds to be filed in court, which was objected to as an unconstitutional change of the law. Chief Justice Taney, delivering the opinion of the court, said: "It is an established principle of jurisprudence in all civilized nations that the sovereign cannot be sued in its own courts, or in any other, without its consent and permission; but it may, if it thinks proper, waive this privilege and permit itself to be made a defendant in a suit by individuals, or by another State. And as this permission is altogether voluntary on the part of the sovereignty, it follows that it may prescribe the terms and conditions on which it consents to be sued, and the manner in which the suit shall be conducted; and may withdraw its consent whenever it may suppose that justice to the public requires it. . . . The prior law was not a contract. It was an ordinary Act of legislation, prescribing the conditions upon which the State consented to waive the privilege of sovereignty. It contained no stipulation that these regulations should not be modified afterwards if, upon experience, it was found that further provisions were necessary to protect the public interest; and no such contract can be implied from the law, nor can this court inquire whether the law operated hardly or unjustly upon the parties whose suits were then pending. That was a question for the consideration of the Legislature. They might have repealed the prior law altogether, and put an end to the jurisdiction of their courts in suits against the State, if they had thought proper to do so, or prescribe new conditions upon which the suits might still be allowed to proceed. In exercising this power the State violated no contract with the parties." The same doctrine was held in Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Tennessee, 101 U. S. 337, 339 [25: 960, 961]; South & N. A. R. Co. v. Alabama, 101 U. S. 582 [25: 873], and Ex parte Ayers, 128 U. S. 443, 505 [31: 216, 229].

But besides the presumption that no anomalous and unheard-of proceedings or suits were intended to be raised up by the Constitution—anomalous and unheard of when the Constitution was adopted—an additional reason why the jurisdiction claimed for the circuit court does not exist is the language of the Act of Congress by which its jurisdiction is conferred. The words are these: "The circuit courts of the United States shall have original cognizance, concurrent with the courts of the several States, of all suits of a civil nature, at common law or in equity, . . . arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, or treaties," etc.—"concurrent with the courts of the several States." Does not this qualification show that Congress, in legislating to carry the Constitution into effect, did not intend to invest its courts with any new and strange jurisdictions? The state courts have no power to entertain suits by individuals against a State without its consent. Then how does the circuit court, having only concurrent jurisdiction, acquire any such power? It is true that the same qualification existed in the Judiciary Act of 1789, which was before the court in Chisholm v. Georgia, and the majority of the court did not think that it was sufficient to limit the jurisdiction of the circuit court. Justice Iredell thought differently. In view of the manner in which that decision was received by the country, the adoption of the 11th Amendment, the light of history and the reason of the thing, we think we are at liberty to prefer Justice Iredell's views in this regard.

Some reliance is placed by the plaintiff upon the observations of Chief Justice Marshall, in Cohens v. Virginia, 19 U. S. 6 Wheat. 264, 410 [5: 257, 292]. The chief justice was there considering the power of review exercisable by this court over the judgments of a state court, wherein it might be necessary to make the State itself a defendant in error. He showed that this power was absolutely necessary in order to enable the judiciary of the United States to take cognizance of all cases arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States. He also showed that making a State a defendant in error was entirely different from suing a State in an original action in prosecution of a demand against it, and was not within the meaning of the 11th Amendment; that the prosecution of a writ of error against a State was not the prosecution of a suit in the sense of that Amendment, which had reference to the prosecution by suit of claims against a State. "Where," said the chief justice, "a State obtains a judgment against an individual, and the court rendering such judgment overrules a defense set up under the Constitution or laws of the United States, the transfer of this record into the supreme court for the sole purpose of inquiring whether the judgment violates the Constitution of the United States can, with no propriety, we think, be denominated a suit commenced or prosecuted against the State whose judgment is so far re-examined. Nothing is demanded from the State. No claim against it of any description is asserted or prosecuted. The party is not to be restored to the possession of anything. . . . He only asserts the constitutional right to have his defense examined by that tribunal whose province it is to construe the Constitution and laws of the Union.

The point of view in which this writ of error, with its citation, has been considered uniformly in the courts of the Union has been well illustrated by a reference to the course of this court in suits instituted by the United States. The universally received opinion is, that no suit can be commenced or prosecuted against the United States; that the Judiciary Act does not authorize such suits. Yet writs of error, accompanied with citations, have uniformly issued for the removal of judgments in favor of the United States into a superior court. . . . It has never been suggested that such writ of error was a suit against the United States, and therefore not within the jurisdiction of the appellate court."

After thus showing by incontestable argument that a writ of error to a judgment recovered by a State, in which the State is necessarily the defendant in error, is not a suit commenced or prosecuted against a State in the sense of the Amendment, he added that if the court were mistaken in this, its error did not affect that case, because the writ of error therein was not prosecuted by "a citizen of another State" or "of any foreign state," and so was not affected by the Amendment; but was governed by the general grant of judicial power, as extending "to all cases arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, without respect to parties." Page 412 [293].

It must be conceded that the last observation of the chief justice does favor the argument of the plaintiff. But the observation was unnecessary to the decision, and in that sense extrajudicial, and, though made by one who seldom used words without due reflection, ought not to outweigh the important considerations referred to which lead to a different conclusion. With regard to the question then before the court, it may be observed that writs of error to judgments in favor of the crown, or of the State, had been known to the law from time immemorial, and had never been considered as exceptions to the rule that an action does not lie against the sovereign.

To avoid misapprehension it may be proper to add that although the obligations of a State rest for their performance upon its honor and good faith, and cannot be made the subjects of judicial cognizance unless the State consents to be sued, or comes itself into court, yet where property or rights are enjoyed under a grant or contract made by a State, they cannot wantonly be invaded. Whilst the State cannot be compelled by suit to perform its contracts, any attempt on its part to violate property or rights acquired under its contracts, may be judicially resisted; and any law impairing the obligation of contracts under which such property or rights are held is void and powerless to affect their enjoyment.

It is not necessary that we should enter upon an examination of the reason or expediency of the rule which exempts a sovereign State from prosecution in a court of justice at the suit of individuals. This is fully discussed by writers on public law. It is enough for us to declare its existence. The legislative department of a State represents its polity and its will, and is called upon by the highest demands of natural and political law to preserve justice and judgment, and to hold inviolate the public obligations. Any departure from this rule, except for reasons most cogent (of which the Legislature, and not the courts, is the judge), never fails in the end to incur the odium of the world, and to bring lasting injury upon the State itself. But to deprive the Legislature of the power of judging what the honor and safety of the State may require, even at the expense of a temporary failure to discharge the public debts, would be attended with greater evils than such failure can cause.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

Mr. Justice Harlan, concurring:

I concur with the court in holding that a suit directly against a State by one of its own citizens is not one to which the judicial power of the United States extends, unless the State itself consents to be sued. Upon this ground alone I assent to the judgment. But I cannot give my assent to many things said in the opinion. The comments made upon the decision in Chisholm v. Georgia do not meet my approval. They are not necessary to the determination of the present case. Besides, I am of opinion that the decision in that case was based upon a sound interpretation of the Constitution as that instrument then was.

THE STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA and WILLIAM P. ROBERTS, Auditor of the STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA, Appts.,

v.

ALFRED H. TEMPLE.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 22-31.)

Suit against auditor is against the State—suit against State cannot be maintained by a citizen thereof.

1. A suit against the auditor of a State to compel the raising a tax to pay interest on the state bonds is virtually a suit against the State.
2. A suit cannot be maintained in the circuit court against a State by a citizen thereof.

Argued Jan. 22, 23, 1890. Decided March 3, 1890.

APPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of North Carolina that the State of North Carolina, defendant, is indebted to the said Alfred H. Temple, plaintiff, for the amount of coupons of state bonds and interest, and that said State pay same to said Temple; and also that the said William P. Roberts, as Auditor of the State, execute the State Act of Jan. 29, 1869, by raising taxes to pay such amount.

NOTE.—As to when States can be sued; suits by States.—see note to Hans v. Louisiana, ante, p. 842.

On certificate of division of opinion. Decree reversed and cause remanded with instructions to dismiss the suit.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. R. H. Battle, T. F. Davidson, Thomas Ruffin and John W. Graham, for appellants:

The King of England was not suable in the courts of that country except where his consent had been given on petition of right.

The exemption of the United States, and of the several States, from being subjected as defendants to ordinary actions in the courts, is an established doctrine of this court.

This court will not entertain jurisdiction of an action, the purpose of which is to constrain a state officer to disobey the positive orders of the supreme political power of his State.

Louisiana v. Jumel, 107 U. S. 711 (27: 448); Hagood v. Southern, 117 U. S. 52 (29: 805).

The reason that no express protection was given to the States against suits by their own citizens was, as declared by Justice Bradley in Marye v. Parsons, 114 U. S. 325 (29: 205), because no jurisdiction in such cases had ever been granted, under the Constitution, to the courts of the United States, or any of them, and it was not therefore deemed necessary to prohibit it.

This is an action against the State by name, in which its creditor is seeking to compel specifically the performance of its contract by process of law, and to compel officers of the State to do certain acts which, in themselves, amount to a performance of its contract by the State. It falls, therefore, clearly under the ban, as laid down in Antoni v. Greenhow, 107 U. S. 769 (27: 468), as distinguished from Poindexter v. Greenhow, 114 U. S. 272 (29: 185).

White v. Greenhow, 114 U. S. 807 (29: 199).

Mr. Justice Bradley delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was commenced in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of North Carolina by bill in equity filed by Alfred H. Temple, a citizen of North Carolina, on behalf of himself and other bondholders in like interest, against the State of North Carolina and William P. Roberts, the auditor of said State. The object of the bill is to compel said State and its officials, including the auditor, to execute and carry into effect a certain Statute of the State, passed January 29, 1869, which provided for raising taxes to pay the interest on certain bonds of the State, called "special tax bonds of the State of North Carolina," issued under the provisions of said Act, and held by the plaintiff and others. In other words, it is a suit, in the nature of a bill for a specific performance of a contract, brought to compel the State of North Carolina to raise a tax for the payment of the arrear of interest due on the state bonds held by the plaintiff and others.

The Act referred to authorized a subscription on the part of the State of $4,000,000 of the capital stock of The Wilmington, Charlotte and Rutherford Railroad Company, and the issue of state bonds for the payment thereof, payable thirty years after date, with interest at six per cent per annum, payable semi-annually, to be represented by coupons. The subscription was made and 8,000 of the bonds, for $1,000 each, were issued, of which the bonds of the plaintiff, which constitute the ground of the present suit, are a part.

By the sixth section of the Act it was provided as follows:

"Sec. 6. For the purpose of providing for the payment of the interest upon the bonds hereby authorized and the principal at its maturity, an annual tax of one eighth of one per cent is hereby imposed upon all the taxable property of the State, which shall be levied, collected and paid into the state treasury as other public taxes, and the surplus, after paying the interest, shall be invested in securities of the United States or other safe securities and kept as a sinking fund for the payment of the principal money at maturity."

The bill alleges that the plaintiff is the bona fide holder of ten of said bonds (giving their numbers), and that the over-due coupons attached thereto, unpaid, amount to $9,900; that in the year 1869 the collection of the special tax was duly made, and a portion of the coupons was paid; but that in the month of January, 1870, and while large amounts of money arising from the collection of the special tax aforesaid remained in the hands of the state treasurer, applicable to the payment of said coupons, the State of North Carolina, in violation of the Constitution of the United States, did by legislative resolution direct the appropriation of the said moneys then in the hands of the treasurer to other purposes; and that after all of said 8,000 bonds had been issued according to law the State of North Carolina undertook to impair the obligation of the contract, and to that end, on the 20th of January, 1870, formally enacted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the treasurer be instructed and directed not to pay any more interest on the special tax bonds until authorized and directed so to do by this General Assembly."

That to the same end, upon the 8th of March, 1870, the State also passed an Act declaring as follows:

"Section 1. The General Assembly of North Carolina do enact that all Acts passed at the last session of this Legislature making appropriations to railroad companies be, and the same are hereby, repealed; that all bonds of the State which have been issued under the said Acts now in the hands of any president or other officers of the corporation be immediately returned to the treasurer.

"Sec. 2. The moneys in the state treasury which were levied and collected under the provisions of the Acts mentioned in section one of this Act are hereby appropriated to the use of the state government, and shall be credited to the counties of the State upon the tax to be assessed for the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy, in proportion to the amounts collected from them, respectively."

That with the same view, upon the 28d of November, 1874, the General Assembly passed an Act containing the following provisions:

"Sec. 2. That the treasurer shall not pay or discharge any claim for interest upon any portion of the bonded debt of this State, except as hereinafter provided for by law.

"Sec. 3. That the auditor shall not audit or recognize any claim for principal or interest upon any portion of the bonded debt of this State heretofore made or pretended to be made by authority of this State, except as hereafter provided for by law.

"Sec. 4. That any money in or which may be paid into the treasury on account of special taxes heretofore levied for the payment of the interest on bonds or pretended bonds of this State is hereby transferred and appropriated to the general fund."

That in like connection, on the third day of November, 1880, the following Constitutional Amendment was adopted by the State:

"Nor shall the General Assembly assume or pay or authorize the collection of any tax to pay, either directly or indirectly, expressed or implied, any debt or bond incurred or issued by authority of the convention of the year 1868, or any debt or bond incurred or issued by the Legislature of the year 1868, at its special session of 1868, and at its regular session of 1868 and 1869 and 1870, except the bonds issued to fund the interest of the public debt, unless the purposing to pay the same shall have been submitted to the people or by them ratified, by the vote of a majority of qualified voters of the State at a regular election held for that purpose."

The bill further alleges that since the 20th day of January, 1870, none of the coupons belonging to said bonds, which have fallen due, have been paid, though payment of the same has been duly demanded; that the above-mentioned special taxes have not been collected; that none of the contracts performable under said Act of January 29, 1869, have been performed, and that the government of the State has constantly enforced upon its officials compliance with the subsequent nullifying enactments above set forth.

The bill then avers that by virtue of the provisions of the Constitution of North Carolina and of the said Act of the General Assembly of January, 1869, and of the issue of bonds thereunder, a contract was constituted between the State and the holders of said bonds which was in the same connection a contract executed by said State, by the levying of the tax and the committing of its collection to state taxing officials and the direction to other state officials for the regular payment of the coupons and the investment of the surplus arising from the taxes in good securities, to be kept as a sinking fund for the payment of the principal.

It further avers that the Statutes of North Carolina, hereinbefore set forth, which attempt to impair the contract in question, have not taken legal effect for the reason that the said laws are violations of the Constitution of the United States, both in its contract clause and in the Fourteenth Amendment thereto.

After showing the manner of levying taxes in North Carolina, and several matters as grounds of equitable jurisdiction, the bill prays, amongst other things, that the respondents be perpetually enjoined from obstructing or impeding the collection and payment of the special tax in question; and that the respondent, the State of North Carolina, its executive agents and officials, and William P. Roberts, the auditor of the State, be decreed to execute the said Act of January 29, 1869, and to cause the proper statutory lists to be sent to the boards of county commissioners containing provisions for the special tax above described; and for general relief.

A subpoena was issued, and served upon the governor, attorney-general and auditor of the State. The attorney-general, on behalf of the State, filed a motion to dismiss the bill as against the State, alleging that the State did not consent to be a party defendant. The auditor filed a demurrer to the bill, on the ground that by the showing of the bill itself he had no personal interest in the matters complained of, and that the bill is against him in his official capacity only, and requires him as an officer of the State to act contrary to the commands of the Legislature of the State, in raising money by taxation.

On the main question, the circuit judge and the district judge, who held the court, were opposed in opinion, the opinion of the former being in favor of the complainant; in pursuance of which the following decree was made, to wit:

"This cause coming on to be heard, the parties named as defendants thereto, by their counsel, announce to the court that they will not farther plead or answer thereto, but will abide, the one by its motion and the other by his demurrer; that they also waive the taking of any account in regard to the coupons alleged by the plaintiff to be by him held.

"Whereupon it is declared by the court that the said State of North Carolina is indebted to the said Alfred H. Temple for coupons held by him as in his bill alleged, and now by him deposited with the clerk of this court, to the amount of nine thousand nine hundred dollars, principal money, together with five thousand five hundred and forty-five dollars for interest due thereon up to the present term of this court, and also for interest upon said principal money until paid, which amounts the said State is hereby adjudged and decreed to pay to the said Temple.

"And it is further ordered that the said William P. Roberts, as auditor of the State of North Carolina, proceed in due course of his office to execute the provisions of the Act passed by said State on the 29th of January, 1869, entitled 'An Act to Amend the Charter of the Wilmington, Charlotte and Rutherford Railroad Company, to Provide for the Completion of Said Road and to Secure for the State a Representation in This Company,' so far as such execution may be necessary to satisfy this decree."

The point on which the judges differed is stated as follows:

"It appearing to the court that the case made in the record against Roberts as auditor, etc., was merely incidental to that against the State of North Carolina, it occurred as a question—

"Whether such suit could be maintained in this court against said State by the complainant, he being one of the citizens thereof.

"Upon which question the opinions of the judges were opposed, his honor Judge Bond being of opinion that it was so maintainable, and his honor Judge Seymour being of opinion to the contrary.

"Whereupon the above question was during the same term stated as above, under the direction of the judges, and certified, and such certificate ordered to be entered of record."

We think it perfectly clear that the suit against the auditor in this case was virtually a suit against the State of North Carolina. In this regard it comes within the principle of the cases of Louisiana v. Jumel, 107 U. S. 711 [27: 448]; Cunningham v. Macon & B. R. Co. 109 U. S. 446 [27: 992]; Hagood v. Southern, 117 U. S. 52 [29: 805], and Ex parte Ayers, 128 U. S. 443 [31: 216]. We do not think it necessary to consider that question anew.

The other point, the suability of the State, is settled by the decision just rendered in Hans v. Louisiana [ante, 842].

To the question on which the judges of the circuit court were opposed in opinion, our answer is in the negative, namely, that the suit could not be maintained in the circuit court against the State of North Carolina by the plaintiff, a citizen thereof.

The decree of the Circuit Court is reversed, and the cause remanded with instructions to dismiss the bill of complaint.

Mr. Justice Harlan, dissenting:

I dissent from so much of the judgment in this case as holds that this suit cannot be maintained against the auditor of the State of North Carolina. The legislation of which complaint is here made impaired the obligation of the State's contract, and was therefore unconstitutional and void. It did not, in law, affect the existence or operation of the previous Statutes out of which the contract in question arose. So that the court was at liberty to compel the officer of the State to perform the duties which the Statutes, constituting the contract, imposed upon him. A suit against him for such a purpose is not, in my judgment, one against the State. It is a suit to compel the performance of ministerial duties, from the performance of which the State's officer was not, and could not be, relieved by unconstitutional and void legislative enactments.

Jurisdictional amount—order involving merits—resignation of trustee—appointment of successor—sale without consent of court—deed from old trustee—notice.

1. The value of the specific property which is in litigation must determine the jurisdiction of this court. The value of the trust estate, the ownership of which is involved, is the value of the matter in dispute for the purposes of an appeal by the trustee.
2. In a proceeding to set aside a sale by a trustee as fraudulent and to remove the trustee, an order denying the relief asked is an order involving the merits of the proceeding.
3. A trustee has the right to surrender his trust, and it is competent for a court of equity to appoint another person to take the title to the trust property.
4. Where the order appointing a new trustee expressly declared that he should at all times be subject to the control and order of the court touching the trust, his subsequent sale of the property was subject to confirmation or rejection by the court, and he could not pass the title without its consent.
5. A deed from the old trustee, after he had ceased to be trustee, did not add to the new trustee's powers, or place him or the trust estate beyond the control of the court which appointed him.
6. The order approving the sale was improvidently passed, because made without notice to the beneficial owners of the property, who were entitled to its income, and who were before the court for the protection of their rights.

APPPEALS from a decree of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia vacating a sale and removing a trustee from his office and denying his commissions as trustee and requiring him to pay into court the property held by him as trustee. Affirmed.

184 U. S.

Statement by Mr. Justice Harlan:

Mary E. Macpherson, by clause 6 of her last will and testament, gave, devised and bequeathed to her nephews, Chapman Maupin and Robert W. Maupin, of Virginia, in fee simple, lot five hundred and eleven, with the improvements thereon, on F Street, between Fifth and Sixth Streets, in the City of Washington, to be held (using the words of the will) "by them and the survivor of them, and by such person or persons as may be appointed to execute the trusts declared by this my will, by the last will and testament of such survivor, or by other instrument or writing executed for that purpose by such survivor; but in trust, nevertheless, to manage and control the same and to take the rents, profits and income thence arising, and to pay the one half of the net amount received from such rents, profits and income monthly, quarterly, half yearly or yearly, according to the discretion of my said trustees, to my daughter, Susan W. Edwards, wife of John S. Edwards, for and during her natural life, to her own sole and separate use, free from the control of her present or any future husband and from responsibility for his debts or engagements; it being my design that the income thus provided for my said daughter shall not be assigned, disposed of or pledged in advance or by way of anticipation, but shall be employed to supply her current wants."

Upon the death of said Susan W. Edwards, the above moiety of net income, profits and rents was, by clause 7, to be invested by the trustees and held by them in trust for the sole and separate use of the testator's granddaughter, Susan W. Edwards, during her life, and upon her death that moiety, with its accumulations, was to be distributed by the trustees among the children and the surviving descendants of the children of the granddaughter per stirpes. If the granddaughter died without children or descendants living at her death, this moiety and its accumulations were to belong to the testator's great-granddaughter, Alice Tyler, subject to certain conditions, which need not be here stated.

The remaining moiety of the net income, rents and profits of the property was, by clause 8, devised to the same trustees in trust for the sole and separate use of the testator's great-granddaughter, Alice Tyler, with power to invest such income, rents and profits as in their best judgment was proper, and with authority to her, by last will, to appoint the said moiety and its accumulations to and among her children and their descendants surviving her, in such proportions as she might think fit. If she died without making a will, then the property was to be distributed among her children and their surviving descendants in fee simple and per stirpes. In case she died without children or surviving descendants of such children, then the net income, rents and profits of the estate were to go to her mother, Mary M. Tyler, a granddaughter of the testator, during her life, and upon the death of the latter the next of kin of Alice Tyler were to take the estate and its accumulations.

The will further provided: "I give, devise and bequeath all my other property whereof I may die seised, possessed or entitled, of whatsoever kind, real, personal or mixed, unto the said Chapman Maupin and Robert W. Maupin and the survivor of them, and such person or persons as may be appointed to execute the trusts of this my will, by the last will and testament of such survivor, or by other instrument of writing executed for that purpose by such survivor, in trust, to hold the same for the purposes and upon the trusts hereinbefore declared in the sixth, seventh and eighth clauses of this my will in respect to the real estate and the accumulations therein named; and I do hereby confer upon my said trustees full power and authority, at his or their discretion, from time to time to sell by public or private sale and to convey to the purchaser or purchasers all or any part of the trust property in this will devised and bequeathed to my said trustees, and to receive, grant acquittance for and reinvest the proceeds of such sales, and I do expressly relieve purchasers of such property from the obligation to see to the application of the purchase money."

Robert W. Maupin died in 1876, leaving Chapman Maupin the sole surviving trustee.

Chapman Maupin having expressed a desire to surrender his trust, the present suit was brought in the court below by Susan W. Edwards, widow, and by Alice Tyler, by her next friend, for an accounting in respect to the rents and profits of the trust estate, and for the appointment by the court of a new trustee. After answer by the surviving trustee, the cause was referred to an auditor for the statement of the accounts. The report of the auditor, showing the amounts in the hands of the trustee to be accounted for, was approved. And it was adjudged by the court, March 29, 1882, that the fee-simple estate in the lands devised by the will of Mary E. Macpherson to Chapman Maupin and Robert Maupin, upon certain trusts therein declared, "be, and the same is hereby, taken out of the said Chapman Maupin, the survivor of the said co-trustees, and vested in James B. Green, of the City of Baltimore, together with all the rights, powers, duties and obligations incident thereto under the said last will and testament; and it is further adjudged, ordered and decreed that all the trusts vested by the said will in the said co-trustees and surviving to the said Chapman Maupin be, and they are hereby, abrogated and repealed as to him and conferred upon the said James B. Green, subject to the terms of the said last will and testament, and that the retiring trustee pay over and deliver to his successor hereby appointed all money, books, papers and other property belonging or relating to the said trust estate.

"And it is further adjudged, ordered and decreed that the said James B. Green, trustee, as herein provided, shall file with this court, before any sale of the said real estate under the powers contained in the said will, a bond in the sum of eight thousand dollars, with a surety or sureties, to be approved by this court, for the faithful performance of his duty in connection with the said sale, and that he shall at all times be subject to the control and order of this court in matters touching the trust, and that the costs of this proceeding are payable out of the principal of the trust estate."

It having been suggested to Chapman Maupin—presumably by Green—that the decree in this cause could not be fully carried into effect without a conveyance by him of the trust property, with all the powers of the surviving trustee, to his successor, he executed, March 8, 1888, to Green a deed, granting and assigning to him and to his successors all the grantor's right, title and estate in and to the property devised to the grantor by the will of Mary E. Macpherson, "in trust for the uses and purposes set out in said will, and coupled with all the powers thereby conferred on the trustees therein named."

On the 7th of March, 1888, Green, as trustee, reported, in this cause, a sale he had made, through agents, on the 31st of January, 1888, to A. M. Kenaday, of the lot and improvements on F Street for $11,000 in cash to be paid on the ratification of the sale. While he expressed a belief that his powers under the will were sufficient to enable him to execute a valid deed to the purchaser, he was unwilling to do so without the approval of the court. The sale was thereupon, on the day this report was made, ratified and confirmed by the court, but, so far as the record shows, without notice of the sale or of the above application to the court being given to either of the present plaintiffs or to anyone representing them.

Green and Kenaday, upon the petition of the plaintiffs, were required, March 17, 1888, to show cause, within a time named, why the order ratifying and confirming the sale to Kenaday should not be set aside as having been improvidently made, the sale itself vacated, and Green removed from the office of trustee. This order was served upon Green March 19, 1888, and Kenaday filed an affidavit, alleging that he purchased in good faith, and insisting upon his right to hold the property. His affidavit shows that the sale was consummated on the 7th of March, 1888, the day on which it was approved by the court.

By an order made March 23, 1888, Green was directed to pay into the registry of the court, on or before March 28, 1888, all the fund of every kind and description in his hands as trustee in this cause, and to make answer within one week. He filed an answer on the 29th of March, 1888, in which he denied that the order confirming the sale was improvidently made, or that the price paid for the property was inadequate. He rested his authority to make the sale upon the decree appointing him trustee, and upon the deed made to him by Chapman Maupin.

All the prayers of the petition of the plaintiffs, filed March 17, 1888, were, upon final hearing, denied. From that order the plaintiffs prosecuted an appeal to the general term.

In pursuance of an order of court, Green deposited in its registry one bond of the City of Richmond, Virginia, numbered 67, and standing in his name as trustee, and also $4,921.22 in cash. The last-named sum was, by an order passed May 23, 1888, directed to be invested in notes secured upon real estate, and, until the court otherwise directed, the interest accruing upon the above bond was directed to be paid to the plaintiffs or to their authorized attorney, and not to Green.

Notwithstanding these orders, Green collected the interest upon the bond of the City of Richmond, and paid it to brokers in discharge of his personal indebtedness to them. He was therefore ordered, July 5, 1888, forthwith to pay into the registry of the court the whole of the interest upon that bond accrued and payable on the 2d of July, 1888. He subsequently moved to rescind that order. And Kenaday filed his petition, in general term, praying that the appeal from the decree in special term be dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

Upon final hearing in the general term it was adjudged that the order of March 7, 1888, confirming the sale by Green, be set aside; that the sale itself be vacated; that Green be removed from his office and denied commissions as trustee; that he be required to pay into the registry of court the full sum received by him as the price of the property referred to in his report, and all other money, stock, certificates of deposit and evidences of indebtedness received or held by him as trustee under his appointment in this cause; and that the cause be remanded to the court in special term to ascertain the amount to be paid by him, and to appoint a trustee in his place.

From that decree separate appeals have been prosecuted by Kenaday and Green.

Messrs. George F. Appleby and Calderon Carlisle, for Kenaday:

Troy v. Troy, 1 Busb. Eq. 85; Clarke v. Hayes, 9 Gray, 428; Re Jones, 2 Barb. Ch. 22.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellees have moved to dismiss each of these appeals upon the ground that the value of the matter in dispute is not sufficient to give this court jurisdiction; and with the motions to dismiss was joined a motion to affirm the decree as to each appellant. Both motions to dismiss are overruled. As to Kenaday, the decree denies his right to property of which he claims to be the owner, and which is of the value of eleven thousand dollars. He paid that sum for it in cash to Green as trustee. It is true that there are funds in the registry of the court below, which, in the event of the affirmance of the decree, can be paid over to him, and he be thus far reimbursed for what he paid to Green on the purchase of the property. But we think that the value of the specific property which is in litigation must determine the jurisdiction of this court. And the same principle must control the right of Green to appeal. It cannot be said that his right to commissions as trustee constitutes the whole matter in dispute between him and the appellees. He claims, as trustee, the right to hold and control the proceeds of the sale made to Kenaday. The order removing him as trustee involves his ownership and control of the trust estate for the objects expressed in the will, and therefore the value of that estate is the value of the matter in dispute for the purposes of an appeal by him.

We pass to the consideration of the case upon its merits.

It is contended by the appellants that the general term cannot exercise any jurisdiction in equity unless (1) a suit or proceeding or motion be ordered by the court holding the special term, to be heard by the general term in the first instance, or (2) a motion be filed in a suit that by the rules of the general term is designated as an enumerated motion, or (3) an appeal by a party aggrieved be taken from an order, judgment or decree of the special term which involves the merits of the action or proceeding. The argument is: As the application to set aside the order confirming the sale to Kenaday was heard and determined in special term; as such application could not be regarded as an enumerated motion; as an application to reopen the decree of confirmation was addressed to the discretion of the court, and not appealable, and, for that reason, did not involve the merits of the proceeding, and as there was no appeal from the order confirming the sale,—the general term was without jurisdiction to review the order of the special term refusing to set aside the previous order confirming the sale.

This argument is based upon a misconception of the object and scope of the proceeding instituted by appellees on the 17th of March, 1888. By their petition filed on that day they assailed, as fraudulent, the sale made by Green to Kenaday, and asked that the order confirming it be set aside and Green removed from the trusteeship. Upon that petition Green and Kenaday were ruled to show cause why the order of March 7, 1888, ratifying and confirming the sale, should not be set aside, the sale itself vacated, and the trustee removed. They both appeared to that petition; Kenaday, by affidavit, insisting upon his right to hold the property, and Green by formal answer. The case was heard in special term upon this petition, and it was ordered that all of its prayers be denied. From that order the petitioners appealed to the general term. It was clearly an order involving the merits of the proceeding; because, unless reversed or modified, it sustained the sale to Kenaday, confirmed his right to hold the property as against the appellees, and held Green in the position of trustee. It was not an appeal simply from an order refusing to set aside the decree of confirmation, but one that involved the integrity of the order confirming the sale, and therefore the merits of the whole case made by the petition. As said by Mr. Justice Merrick, in the opinion delivered by him when the court below overruled a petition for rehearing: "It is apparent that in this case the most substantial rights of the parties were involved. Here is an application at the same term at which an order is passed ratifying a sale, which, being passed and not appealed from or corrected in any other mode, would definitively settle the rights of the parties and deprive the petitioners absolutely and forever of a title to real estate by the conversion of the realty into a sum of money, whether the full or an inadequate price for the value of the land need not be considered."

The next contention of the appellant Kenaday is that he is a bona fide purchaser for value of this property from a trustee who had full power, under the will creating him trustee, in connection with the deed to him from Chapman Maupin, the surviving trustee, to sell and convey; and that his right to hold the property cannot be affected unless there was such inadequacy of price as indicated collusion between him and the trustee. It may be that the surviving trustee, under the broad powers of sale given by the will, could in his discretion have sold this property if he had not surrendered his position as trustee, and if the title had not, by the decree of the court, been taken out of him. And it may be that it was competent for him, while holding the trusteeship, to transfer to someone else, by a written instrument, the powers the will gave him. But he had not exercised any such powers prior to the decree of March 29, 1882, divesting him of title, and substituting Green in his place as trustee. After that date he had no connection with the trust estate, and his powers as trustee ceased. That he had the right to surrender his trust, and that it was competent for a court of equity to appoint another person to take the title to the trust property, cannot, in our opinion, be successfully questioned. But the order appointing a new trustee expressly declared that he should at all times be subject to the control and order of the court touching the trust. His subsequent sale, therefore, of the property was subject to confirmation or rejection by the court. He could not pass the title without its consent. The deed from Chapman Maupin, after he had ceased to be trustee, did not add to Green's powers, or place him or the trust estate beyond the control of the court which appointed him.

It results, from what has been said, that the rights acquired by Kenaday, under his purchase from Green, were subject to the power of the court to ratify or disapprove the sale. The order approving the sale was improvidently passed, because made without notice to the beneficial owners of the property, who were entitled to its income, and who were before the court for the protection of their rights. The confirmation was obtained by the trustee with knowledge that the appellees, if notified of the application to the court, would oppose its ratification.

Under all the circumstances disclosed by the record—and which it will serve no useful purpose to state in detail—we are of opinion that the court below did not err in setting aside the confirmation of the sale, vacating the sale itself, and removing the trustee without allowing him any commissions.

The decree below is in all particulars affirmed.

and Trustees, Plffs. in Err.,
v.

THE LIVERPOOL AND LONDON AND GLOBE INSURANCE COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 110-116.)

Policy, construction of—privilege to keep kerosene for lights—breach of condition, by whom—act of lessee or other person—cause of fire—verdict, when court may direct.

1. Where a policy of fire insurance permits the use of kerosene or like oil "for lights, if the same is drawn and the lamps are filled and trimmed by daylight only," the words "for lights" are restricted in meaning to lighting the insured premises only, and the words "by daylight" are intended to prevent the use of artificial light from which the oil might catch fire.
2. The clause written in the margin of the policy, granting a privilege "to keep not exceeding five barrels of oil on said premises," does not dispense with the printed regulations as to precautions in handling or using it.
3. Where the use of gas apparatus had been discontinued before the fire, the privilege to use it in the policy does not affect the case.
4. A breach of the conditions by anyone permitted by the assured to occupy the premises is equivalent to a breach by the assured himself.
5. The assured was chargeable with any acts of his lessee in keeping on the premises any of the prohibited articles, although they were not intended to be used there but for lighting other places.
6. The policy was avoided if kerosene or like oil was drawn upon the premises near a lighted lamp by any person acting by the direction or under the authority of the lessee.
7. The testimony in this case held to establish beyond a reasonable doubt that the fire was caused by a breach of the conditions of the policy.

8. Where the court would deem it its duty to set aside a verdict for plaintiff if given by a jury, on account of the want of sufficient evidence, the court is not bound to submit the case to the jury, but may direct a verdict for defendant.

The error of the court below is in holding that the two privileges granted to the assured are restrictions.

The defendant having moved the court to direct a verdict for the defendant and the court having in accordance with that request made such direction, the defendant is estopped from claiming there was any question of fact to be passed upon by the jury.

Mr. William Allen Butler, for defendant in error:

The cause was first tried November 15, 1881, and a verdict rendered for plaintiff. The judgment entered on this verdict was reversed.

Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. v. Gunther, 116 U. S. 118 (29: 575).

It is the clear duty of the court to set aside the verdict of a jury founded on a disbelief of clear, uncontradicted and undisputed evidence.

Lomer v. Meeker, 25 N. Y. 361.

Even where there may be a scintilla of evidence, the question for the court is whether there is any evidence upon which the jury can properly proceed to find a verdict.

The privilege attached to the policies as a rider and pasted on the face of each policy, "to use kerosene oil for lights; lamps to be filled and trimmed by daylight only," was not a waiver of the condition of the policy against drawing the oil by daylight.

The written privilege on the margin of the policy, "to keep not exceeding five barrels of kerosene oil on said premises," did not annul the restriction as to the drawing the oil and filling and trimming the lamps by daylight.

Savage v. Howard, 52 N. Y. 502, 504.

Mr. Justice Gray delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action brought by a citizen of New York against a British corporation on two policies of fire insurance, dated November 16, 1877, and extended to July 15, 1880, the one on buildings, and the other on fixtures, furniture and other personal property in and about the same.

Each policy described the principal building as follows: "The two-story frame hotel building, with one-story frame kitchen and two-story frame pavilion adjoining and communicating, situated on Gravesend, Bay of Bath, Kings County, Long Island (it is understood that the above property is to be occupied by a family when not in use as a hotel); privilege to use gasoline gas, gasometer, blower and generator being under ground about sixty feet from main building in vault, no heat employed in process."

Among the printed conditions of each policy were the following:

"If the assured shall keep gunpowder, fireworks, nitro-glycerine, phosphorus, saltpetre, nitrate of soda, petroleum, naphtha, gasoline, benzine, benzole or benzine varnish, or keep or use camphene, spirit gas, or any burning fluid or chemical oils, without written permission in this policy, then and in every such case this policy shall be void."

"Petroleum, rock, earth, coal, kerosene or carbon oils of any description, whether crude or refined, benzine, benzole, naphtha, camphene, spirit gas, burning fluid, turpentine, gasoline, phosgene or any other inflammable liquid are not to be stored, used, kept or allowed on the above premises, temporarily or permanently, for sale or otherwise, unless with written permission indorsed on this policy, excepting the use of refined coal, kerosene or other carbon oil for lights, if the same is drawn and the lamps filled by daylight; otherwise this policy shall be null and void."

Attached to and pasted on the face of each policy at the time of its issue was a printed slip, signed by the defendant's agents, and in these words: "Privileged to use kerosene oil for lights, lamps to be filled and trimmed by daylight only." And on the margin of the first policy were written and signed by the defendant's agents these words: "September 17, 1878. Privileged to keep not exceeding five barrels of oil on said premises."

At the first trial, a verdict was returned for the plaintiff, which was set aside and a new trial ordered by this court. 116 U. S. 113 [29: 575].

Afterwards the plaintiff died, and the action was revived in the name of his executors; and the answer was amended by leave of court, so as to set up, among other defenses, as a breach of the second condition above quoted, "that kerosene, carbon oil or other inflammable liquid, so stored, used, kept or allowed on said premises as aforesaid, was drawn, not by daylight, but at or after dusk or dark and with a lighted lamp or lantern near, in violation of the express terms of the said condition, and that the fire which destroyed said premises was caused by such proximity of said lighted lamp; and the defendant further avers that it is advised and believes that the said policies thereby became and were null and void."

A second verdict for the plaintiffs was set aside by the circuit court, for the reasons stated in its opinion reported in 84 Fed. Rep. 501.

At the third trial, the plaintiffs introduced in evidence the policies, and renewal receipts continuing them in force until July 15, 1890, and proved the assured's ownership of the property insured; and the parties agreed that it was destroyed by fire on August 15, 1879, and that the amount of the loss, with interest, was $41,116.64.

The defendant proved by uncontradicted evidence that a barrel of about fifty gallons of kerosene was bought by Walker, the lessee of the premises, on August 18, 1879, and on the next day put by him in the oil room under the pavilion, which was a low room about twelve feet square, with doors opening into other rooms only. There was conflicting evidence upon the question whether any gasoline, naphtha or benzine was kept in the oil room at the time of the fire. It was admitted that in 1878 the pavilion had been lighted by gasoline generated in a gasometer under the privilege in the first clause of the policy, but that its use was discontinued in the fall of 1878, and it was not used in 1879.

The only testimony introduced as to the cause of the fire was in substance as follows:

The defendant proved that the assured testified at the first trial that on August 15, 1879, about dusk, he was seated on the piazza of the hotel, in sight of the pavilion, and saw some men with pails and a light; that his attention was attracted by shouts of children playing about in front, and he immediately looked back again and saw the men come out "as though they were afire," and it did not occur to him that there was a fire in the oil room, although he saw it; that he called to the men to roll in the high grass, and one of them did so, and another ran into the water, and in another instant, he saw the oil room burning, and the building immediately caught fire and in an hour or less was level with the ground.

The defendant called as witnesses the two men last mentioned, who testified that they had been sent from another hotel a mile off with two ordinary wooden pails to get five gallons of gasoline; that Walker directed one Schuchardt, a man in his employ, to let them have the oil; that Schuchardt, carrying a lighted glass stable-lantern with small holes around the top, took them into the oil room, and drew the oil from a barrel, through a piece of pipe used as a faucet, into the pails, one of which leaked, and much oil was spilled upon the floor; that the lantern was very near the barrel, and presently there was a blue flame across the floor, and the whole room was in a blaze of fire; that Schuchardt got out first, and died of his burns; that one of the witnesses rolled in the grass and was little injured, and the other, who ran into the water, was so severely burned as to be obliged to keep his bed for three months.

The defendant moved the court to direct a verdict for the defendant, "on the ground that as the established cause of the fire was the drawing in the oil room of the insured premises about dusk, in the vicinity of a lighted lamp, of a fluid product of petroleum under the circumstances shown by the evidence, not for filling lamps on the insured premises, but for another and different purpose, this of itself, and irrespective of other questions in the case, constitutes a violation of the several contracts of insurance in force at the time of the fire, as contained in the policies respectively, thereby rendering the said policies and each of them void, and defeating the right of the plaintiffs to recover in this action."

The plaintiffs requested the court to submit to the jury the questions "whether there was any naphtha, gasoline or benzine on the insured premises at the time of the fire," and "whether the fluid which was drawn from a barrel in the oil room at the time of the fire was so drawn in the presence of a lighted lamp."

The court denied the plaintiff's requests and directed a verdict for the defendant. The plaintiffs excepted to these rulings and sued out this writ of error.

Each of the policies in suit contains two conditions concerning the keeping or use, without written permission in or upon the policy, of naphtha, gasoline, benzine or any burning fluid or chemical oil, upon the premises. By the general terms of the first of these conditions, the policy is avoided if the assured shall "keep or use" any of these articles. By the more specific provisions of the other condition, the prohibited articles "or any other inflammable liquid are not to be stored, used, kept or allowed" on the premises, "temporarily or permanently, for sale or otherwise," except certain articles named, and for the purpose and with the precautions therein specified, namely, "excepting the use of refined coal, kerosene or other carbon oil for lights, if the same is drawn and the lamps filled by daylight; otherwise the policy shall be null and void."

The printed slip, bearing the words "Privileged to use kerosene oil for lights, lamps to be filled and trimmed by daylight only," was attached to each policy and delivered with it, and must therefore be construed in connection with and as part of it, and not as superseding any consistent clause in the body of the policy. It is suggested that there is an inconsistency between the slip and the exception above referred to. But the two, upon being compared with one another, disclose no such inconsistency; and differ only in that the exception regulates the drawing of the oil, which the slip does not, while the slip regulates the trimming of the lamps, which the exception does not. Taking the exception and the slip together, the effect is the same as if they had been incorporated into a single sentence, so as to permit the use of kerosene or like oil "for lights, if the same is drawn and the lamps are filled and trimmed by daylight only."

In the exception, as well as in the slip, the words "for lights" are clearly restricted in meaning to lighting the insured premises only, and the words "by daylight" are intended, not to denote day-time as opposed to night-time, but to prevent the use of any artificial light from which the oil might catch fire.

The clause written in the margin of one policy, granting a privilege "to keep not exceeding five barrels of oil on said premises," cannot reasonably be construed as intending to dispense with any of the carefully prepared printed regulations concerning the precautions to be taken in handling and using it.

The clause following the description of the principal buildings in each policy, "Privilege to use gasoline gas, gasometer, blower and generator being under ground about sixty feet from main building in vault, no heat employed in process," does not affect the case; for the use of the gas apparatus had been discontinued some time before the fire; and, as has already been decided, when this case was before us at a former term, that clause did not sanction the keeping or use of gasoline or other burning fluid except for actual use in that apparatus. 116 U. S. 180 [29: 581].

It has also been decided that a breach of the conditions by any person permitted by the assured to occupy the premises was equivalent to a breach by the assured himself; and that the assured was chargeable with any acts of his lessee in keeping upon the premises any of the prohibited articles, although they were not intended to be used there, but for lighting other places. 116 U. S. 128, 129 [29: 580].

There can be no doubt, therefore, that both policies were avoided if kerosene, gasoline or any other carbon oil was drawn upon the premises near a lighted lamp by any person acting by the direction or under the authority of the lessee; and what the particular kind of carbon oil so drawn was, is quite immaterial.

The testimony of the assured himself, that just before the fire he saw some men with pails and a light near the pavilion under which the oil room was, and presently afterwards saw two of the men come out "as though they were on fire," and in another instant saw the oil room burning, and the building immediately caught fire and within an hour was level with the ground, of itself strongly tended to the conclusion that the fire was caused by such a breach of the conditions of the policy.

But this conclusion was established beyond all reasonable doubt by the testimony of the two men whom he saw come out, the substance of which has been already stated, and the accuracy and credibility of which is not impaired in any essential point by the thorough cross-examination to which they were subjected at the trial, or by a careful comparison with their testimony given before a coroner's jury ten days after the fire, and introduced in connection with their cross-examination.

If the case had been submitted to the jury upon the testimony introduced, and a verdict had been returned for the plaintiff, it would have been the duty of the court to set it aside for want of any evidence to warrant it. Under such circumstances, it is well settled that the court was not bound to go through the idle form of submitting the case to the jury, but rightly directed a verdict for the defendant. Schofield v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 114 U. S. 615, 619 [29: 224, 225], and cases there cited; Robertson v. Edelhoff, 132 U. S. 614, 626 [33: 477, 481].

Judgment affirmed.

WILLIAM D. McKEY, Pff. in Err.,
v.
THE VILLAGE OF HYDE PARK.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 84-99.)

Boundary line—dedication of street to the public—mere knowledge and non-action—question for jury.

1. Where the evidence as to the boundary line of land is conflicting, in the absence of an official survey the intention of the parties, when ascertainable, must be carried out.
2. In Illinois, a dedication of a street or highway may be inferred from a long and uninterrupted user by the public with the knowledge and consent of the owner.
3. Mere knowledge and non-action or failure to assert one's rights are not conclusive evidence of such dedication, for they may be rebutted; and the party is always allowed to show facts and circumstances to overcome such presumption.
4. Whether the facts proved are sufficient to explain the non-action of the plaintiff, and to negative the presumption of a dedication or not, is a question for the jury.

Submitted Jan. 7, 1890. Decided March 3, 1890.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action of ejectment. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. R. Doolittle, for plaintiff in error:

The act, declaration or deed of one tenant in common is of no effect as an admission against his co-tenant, and cannot bind or affect his rights.

Freeman, Co-tenancy, §§ 199, 205; Gates v. Salmon, 85 Cal. 588; Sutter v. San Francisco, 86 Cal. 115.

It is the settled law of the State of Illinois that mere non-action,—in other words, a mere omission to assert title as against the public,—will not raise any implication of an intention to dedicate private property to public use.

Bloomington v. Bloomington Cemetery Assn. 126 Ill. 221; McIntyre v. Storey, 80 Ill. 127, 130; Chicago v. Stinson, 14 West. Rep. 404, 124 Ill. 510; Kelly v. Chicago, 48 Ill. 888.

A fortiori, when the land is uninclosed.

Chicago v. Johnson, 98 Ill. 618; Herhold v. Chicago, 108 Ill. 467; Peyton v. Shaw, 15 Ill. App. 192, 196.

There must be deliberate, unequivocal and decisive acts and declarations manifesting a positive and unmistakable intention to permanently abandon his property to the specific public use, to make a common-law dedication.

Bigelow, Estoppel, 558; Irwin v. Dixon, 50 U. S. 9 How. 10 (13: 25); Kelly v. Chicago, 48 Ill. 888; Kyle v. Logan, 87 Ill. 87; Chicago v. Johnson, 98 Ill. 618; Herhold v. Chicago, 108 Ill. 467; Peyton v. Shaw, 15 Ill. App. 192, 196; Robertson v. Wellsville, 1 Bond, 88; Lonsdale v. Portland, Deady, 44; Bloomington v. Bloomington Cemetery Assn. 126 Ill. 221; McIntyre v. Storey, 80 Ill. 127, 130; Chicago v. Stinson, 14 West. Rep. 404, 124 Ill. 510.

Any party who is before the court pendente lite and who acts under a decree, becomes pro tanto a party to the proceeding.

Requa v. Rea, 2 Paige, 339, 341.

Mr. James H. Roberts, for defendant in error:

No particular formalities are required to make a common-law dedication.

Cincinnati v. White, 81 U. S. 6 Pet. 458 (8: 458), and cases cited; Jarvis v. Dean, 3 Bing. 447.

From use, with the assent of the owner, the law presumes a dedication, the use being for such a length of time that the public accommodation and private rights might be materially affected by an interruption of the enjoyment.

Macon v. Franklin, 12 Ga. 239; Case v. Favier, 12 Minn. 89; Cady v. Conger, 19 N. Y. 256; Barclay v. Howell, 31 U. S. 6 Pet. 513 (8: 482).

If the owner of the land intentionally or by gross negligence leads the public to believe that he has dedicated the premises to public use, he will be estopped from contradicting his representations to the prejudice of those he may have misled.

Wilder v. St. Paul, 12 Minn. 192; Forney v. Cuthoun County, 84 Ala. 215.

A dedication once made cannot be recalled, and the intention of the owner at the time is to be considered, not his intention at any subsequent time.

Ruch v. Rock Island, 5 Biss. 95; Adams v. Saratoga & W. R. Co. 11 Barb. 414.

Mr. Justice Lamar delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action of ejectment brought in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois by William D. McKey against the Village of Hyde Park, to recover possession of a strip of land 28 feet wide and 150 long, used and occupied by the Village as a part of a street known as Forty-first Street. The ground of McKey's complaint is that the Village, in locating and opening that street, entered upon, and unlawfully took possession of, his land to the extent of the above-mentioned strip, ejected him therefrom, and withholds from him the possession thereof. The defendant filed a plea of not guilty, and at the trial contended that the street, including that strip, was properly located and was rightfully used as a public highway by virtue of a common-law dedication, and also under a deed from plaintiff's co-tenant, with the acquiescence of plaintiff, through a long period of years.

The controversy in the case is as to the location of a boundary line, there being, according to the bill of exceptions, no contention as to the title of the premises in dispute. The land in dispute is in the south ten acres of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 8, township 88 N., R. 14 E. of the third principal meridian, in Cook County, Illinois. Upon the trial it was shown that the trustees of the Illinois and Michigan Canal had owned the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 8, deriving their title by grant from the State of Illinois; and that they conveyed the northwest quarter of this N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ to P. F. W. Peck, describing it in the deed as the northwest quarter of the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the section, containing forty acres, more or less. By mesne conveyances the title to the south ten acres of this N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 8, in June, 1866, became vested in two brothers, Edward and Michael McKey, living in Wisconsin, as tenants in common, and was held by them until the death of Michael McKey, intestate, September 29, 1868, upon whose death his interest therein descended to his four minor children, one of whom, William D. McKey, the plaintiff, became of age on September 18, 1874. Edward McKey died intestate August 14, 1875.

In order to show his title to the premises in dispute the plaintiff put in evidence the proceedings of the Circuit Court of Cook County in chancery in a suit for the partition of the McKey tract among the heirs and owners thereof. As shown by this evidence that court in that case appointed commissioners to partition the land, and authorized them to subdivide it into blocks, lots, streets and alleys, which they did, and attached to the record a plat entitled "McKey's Addition to Hyde Park."

The plaintiff also put in evidence the final decree in that cause entered October 6, 1882, the said plat being a part of it. The decree reads as follows:

"It appearing to the court that the plat in said report attached, marked 'E,' which said commissioners have entitled 'McKey's Addition to Hyde Park,' being a subdivision made by circuit court commissioners in partition of that part of the south ten acres of the northwest quarter, etc., represents their subdivision of the land above described under description No. 5, and was by them duly submitted to the president and board of trustees of said Village of Hyde Park, and was approved by them on the eighth of September, A. D. 1882, as appears by the certificate of the clerk of said Village thereon, the pieces or parcels of land designated on this plat 'E' as streets and alleys being laid out for public streets and alleys as on said plat 'E' shown. It is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that the several maps or plats by said commissioners prepared and the subdivision by them made and shown thereon, and the respective titles given thereto, be, and the same are hereby, in all respects approved, ratified and confirmed, and it is ordered that the originals now here in court be recorded in the recorder's office of said Cook County, as required by law. And it is further ordered that the clerk of this court certify, under his hand and seal of this court, on each of said original maps or plats a minute of the order of this court approving the same, in words and figures as follows, to wit:

"State of Illinois, }
"County of Cook. } ss.

"This plat approved in all particulars by the court; and it is ordered that the same be recorded in the recorder's office of the County of Cook aforesaid. This certificate is made in pursuance of a decree of the Circuit Court of Cook County, in the State of Illinois, entered on the 6th day of October, 1882, in case number 39,801, in which William D. McKey and others are complainants and Richard M. McKey and others are defendants."

The plat shows that the lots embraced 23 feet of the street, and that the stakes of the lots were set 23 feet south of the north line of the street, leaving a strip thirty-three feet wide south of the lots to be thereby dedicated for use as a public street. The plaintiff, for the purpose of showing that the line thus indicated by the plat as the southern boundary of the McKey tract was intended by the canal trustees to be the southern line of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of sec. 3, offered in evidence, in addition to their conveyance to Peck, the purchaser from them of that tract, all the other conveyances made by them of the said northeast quarter of said section 3, as follows: (1) a deed to Robert S. Wilson, dated April 1, 1857, for the north half of the southwest quarter of that quarter-section which was stated in the deed to contain 19 $\frac{1}{100}$ acres, more or less, in consideration of \$985; (2) a deed to John C. Dodge, dated October 6, 1855, for the south half of the southwest quarter of that quarter-section, stated in the deed to contain 20 acres, at the rate of \$50 per acre, amounting to the sum of \$1,000; (3) a deed to Isaac Cook, dated August 16, 1852, conveying the northeast quarter of that quarter-section, containing 40 acres, more or less, at the rate of \$15 per acre, amounting to the sum of \$600; (4) a deed to William B. Egan, dated January 28, 1856, conveying the north half of the southeast quarter of that quarter-section, containing 19 $\frac{1}{100}$ acres; and, (5) a deed to Margaret Johnson, dated July 1, 1859, conveying the south half of the southeast quarter of that quarter-section, containing 19 $\frac{1}{100}$ acres.

It was admitted, as stated above, that the canal trustees had held title to the whole of the said northeast quarter, and that the above deeds placed all the titles to said quarter-section in the grantees aforesaid.

The plaintiff then introduced one Henry J.

Goodrich, who testified "to his signature upon the plat, and that he was one of the commissioners appointed by the court to make the partition, and was at the same time president of the board of trustees of the Village of Hyde Park; that he knew where the stakes were driven by the surveyors who made the plat, and he knew that the land as staked took 23 feet off the street; that at the time the board approved the plat they knew it was taking more land than what 'was intended to be given;' that they wanted to change the street; they wanted to leave that question in court and approve of the plat as it then stood; that the board was then in favor of changing the location of that street. The witness further testified that he had known that land ever since 1865 or 1866, and that it was then inclosed with a fence; that the fence was an old fence; that the fence was south of the center line of the street as opened by the authorities of Hyde Park; and that he remembered the circumstance of a street being run through there. . . . It was admitted by stipulation of counsel that 41st Street was opened through the property in question in 1878."

Alexander Taylor, a witness for the plaintiff, testified that he resided very near this property for eighteen years, and had known it ever since 1869, and at one time lived on part of it. That "it was always fenced in until the time it was opened as a street, in 1878. There was a fence on the south line of it in 1869, which was quite an old fence then and which the gardener made into a reed fence to give shelter to his garden from the north winds, and on the south side of it was the Bowen lot, cultivated as a vegetable garden; on the north side it was also inclosed. There was no fence on the north side of the ten-acre lot deeded to the McKeys, but the whole piece up to the railroad, including Mr. Hill's and Mrs. Smith's land, was all fenced in together. One half of it belonged to the McKey estate and one half belonged to Mrs. Smith and Mr. Hill, but it was inclosed on all sides and was used for a pasture by the witness. The fence on the south line between the McKey land and the Bowen land was an old fence which used to blow down; the pressure of the wind would break it down, and he had to patch it up. It was an old fence in 1869, made on cedar posts, a straight fence running through from Vincennes Avenue to Grand Boulevard. The wind would blow it down sometimes three or four lengths at a time. When the street was put through and the fence was moved south they turned the tops of the fence into the ground; they were so rotten they could not use them again. When the street was put through, the fence was moved south into Mr. De Lat's garden."

Frank McLeane testified to the same effect as to the existence of the old fence which ran straight through from Vincennes Avenue to Grand Boulevard, immediately south of which was Bowen's land, used as a garden.

The plaintiff then called S. S. Greeley, who testified that he was the surveyor who made the plat pursuant to the order of the court; that he staked the south line of the lots and the north line of the street; and that the stakes were all driven in the grade of the street. He stated that when he made the survey of McKey's addition he was informed of how the canal trustees had conveyed the whole of the quarter-section by the certificates and conveyances above mentioned; that the United States plat of section 8 showed that the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ was a fractional quarter-section—not full 160 acres, but $157\frac{23}{100}$ acres; and that before making the survey it was necessary to know how the canal trustees had conveyed the land.

He further stated: "I found then there were six conveyances by the canal trustees to six different parties in the northwest quarter of section 8; two of the pieces were conveyed as the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter and the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter, each being 40 acres, more or less; then there were four conveyances—one conveying the north half of the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter of section 8, containing $19\frac{1}{100}$ acres, more or less, one the south half of the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter, containing $19\frac{1}{100}$ acres, and one the north half of the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter, containing $19\frac{1}{100}$ acres, and one the south half of the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter, containing $19\frac{1}{100}$ acres. The south half of the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter was marked in two ways; it was marked $19\frac{1}{100}$ acres with a pencil mark through it. . . . I then found that the line between what is technically called the north half and the south half of the northwest quarter was not really the middle line of the quarter-section, but was a line far enough south of that to give the proportion of 80 acres in the north half and $77\frac{2}{3}$ acres in the south half. I then divided it upon that basis, giving the north half $\frac{2}{3}$ of the width north and south, and giving the south half $\frac{1}{3}$ and a fractional $\frac{1}{17}$ of the width north and south; that made the north part of the quarter-section 1,834 feet long on the west line, and the south part 1,288 $\frac{2}{3}$ feet, and the true dividing line between the northwest quarter and the southwest quarter of the quarter-section, which is properly the south line of the McKey property."

In reply to a question by the judge, he stated that he put the dividing line "just where the canal trustees seem to have done in their deeds." Witness further testified "that he had made surveys in the northwest quarter of this quarter-section, and that he had surveyed the property immediately south of the McKey ten acres, which is in dispute, and that he had located the fence along the north line of said property and the south line of 41st Street as laid out by the Village; that he had located this fence running east and west an equal distance between the north and south boundary lines of the quarter-section, but that he had done this simply by retracing the subdivision which had been made before, and that he made the north line of the southwest quarter of the quarter-section at the midway point, because he discovered that it was the way it had been made before."

The defendant to maintain the issues on its part introduced Henry McKey, son of Edward McKey, to show that the Village of Hyde Park in 1873 opened 41st Street through the land in question, in pursuance of a deed from his father, who was the original owner of an undivided half of the McKey tract; that the plaintiff, though a minor at the time, became of age in the year 1874, and did not commence this suit until 1887; that in the meantime the Village of Hyde Park proceeded to open and improve the street, to lay sidewalks and to put in sewers without objection or interruption from the plaintiff; that witness was the only agent the McKeys had in the management of their property, and was present at the time the street was laid out; that he saw that the fence had been moved; that more of the street had been taken from the McKey tract than from the land adjoining it on the south; that he thought the location of the fence might have been wrong, and therefore made no objection; and that the location was not questioned until Mr. Greeley informed him of the alleged error of said location, and that the southern line of the lots extended 56 feet below the north line of the street. He also testified that in selling lots in their addition the McKeys followed the description in the plat thereof, but inserted in the deed a condition that they did not warrant the title to any portion of the lots claimed by the Village as a part of the street.

In support of its contention that the 28-foot strip involved in this suit was rightfully included within the limits of the street, and that the same is located where it ought to be, the defendant introduced as witnesses McLennan, Rossiter, Lee and Foster, all surveyors of experience. Each of those witnesses testified that the center line of 41st Street, as laid out by the Village of Hyde Park, is the true southern boundary of the McKey tract.

Jacob T. Foster, county surveyor, said if he were called upon to survey the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter, containing forty acres, more or less, he would ascertain the southern line of the quarter by measuring the west line of the quarter-section and dividing it in the middle, then measuring the east line of the quarter-section and dividing it in the middle, and run a line through from one point to the other, so that if the west line of the quarter-section was 2,622 $\frac{1}{2}$ feet long he would make the west line of the quarter-quarter one half of that, and make the south line of the quarter-quarter that many feet south of the north line. That is the correct principle in surveying.

The witness McLennan, a surveyor of thirty years, testified that "if this northeast quarter of section 8 be subdivided into four quarters by dividing the quarter section by equally distant lines, such a survey would locate 41st Street in exactly the position where it is now occupied by the Village, and in that case the true line between the northwest quarter and the southwest quarter of this northeast quarter of the quarter-section would be in the center of 41st Street as now laid out and occupied."

Defendant's other witnesses testified to the same effect.

Several exceptions were taking to rulings of the court below during the progress of the trial, and also to the general charge to the jury. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendant, upon which judgment was rendered. The plaintiff then sued out this writ of error.

The first assignment of error which we think necessary to consider relates to the following charge of the court:

"If you believe from the evidence that the center of the street is the center east and west line of the quarter-section, then you are also instructed that it was and still is the true boundary line, and that the plaintiff is not entitled to the land described in the declaration on the theory that the Greeley survey was correct."

He preceded this charge by the following statement:

"In 1873 the Village of Hyde Park laid out and opened 41st Street sixty-six feet wide from Grand Boulevard to Vincennes Avenue, the center of which was a line equidistant from the north and south lines of the quarter-section, on the theory that this line was the true east and west boundary between the four quarters of the quarter-section and the true southern boundary of the McKey tract."

In our opinion that instruction was erroneous. It in effect directed the jury to find that the center of the street, which is a line equidistant from the north and south lines of the quarter-section, is the true southern boundary of the McKey tract, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the premises described in the declaration. The question in this branch of the case is, whether, as is contended by the plaintiff, the line designated in the plat of partition, adopted by the decree of the Chancery Court of Cook County, and approved by the president and board of trustees of the Village of Hyde Park, is the true southern boundary of the McKey tract, or whether, as is insisted by the defendant, the center line of 41st Street is that boundary.

The facts adduced by the plaintiff in support of his contention are, that the whole of the northeast quarter of section 3 was owned by the canal commissioners; that it contained, as shown by the plat of the governmental survey, 157 $\frac{1}{100}$ acres; that there was never any official subdivisional survey of that quarter; that the canal commissioners, by six different deeds, conveyed to different parties and in different quantities the whole quarter-section, 80 acres in the north part of the quarter and four times 19 $\frac{1}{100}$ or 77 $\frac{1}{100}$ acres in the south part; that S. S. Greeley, a surveyor of forty years' experience, employed by the court commissioners in the partition suit, with those deeds before him, proceeded to survey the property into subdivisions, and, as he testified, by tracing the lines of the various subdivisions just as the canal commissioners seemed to have placed them by their deeds, and, locating it "exactly as it was originally subdivided," he fixed the boundary line twenty-three feet south of that indicated by the center of the street; and that the line thus certified to by him, adopted by the court and approved by the president and board of trustees of the Village of Hyde Park, coincided exactly with an ancient dividing fence between the McKey tract north and the Bowen tract south, running across the western half of the quarter-section, which, by its rotted condition, furnished a strong presumption that it had been built there by the original purchasers in accordance with a survey made upon the same principle as the one on which the partition plat was prepared.

The evidence as to the true southern boundary is at least conflicting; and its weight and value was a question to be determined by the jury.

Assuming that the rule laid down by the court is the usual one prescribed by the government for the direction of surveying officers in subdividing sections of the public lands for disposal under the Public Land Law, it does not necessarily relate to the subdivision of private lands by the owners after they have been granted by the government without official subdivisions having been made. If the northeast quarter of section 3 had been subdivided by the surveying officers of the United States and recorded on the plat prior to the grant to the State, such general description as that contained in the deed from the canal company to Peck might properly be presumed to convey only an official quarter of the quarter-section. But in the absence of such official subdivisional survey the intention of the parties, as to the amount of land conveyed, must, when ascertainable, be recognized and carried out. We think, therefore, the court erred when in its charge it withdrew from the consideration of the jury the evidence which had been submitted, very properly, we think, tending to prove, both by the location of the old fence, and by the deeds of adjoining lands executed by the canal commissioners, the southern boundary line of the premises in dispute.

Another assignment of error urged by counsel for plaintiff is, that the court erred in giving the following charge to the jury: "If you believe from the evidence that in 1874, when the plaintiff attained his majority, he knew of the action of the Village of Hyde Park in laying out, opening and improving the street, and that thereafter and until the partition suit was commenced, in 1881 or later, the street was maintained and used with his knowledge and without objection by him, you are authorized to infer that he consented to a dedication to that use of so much of the McKey tract as is embraced within the present limits of the street."

This instruction was repeated in the following more unqualified language: "The plaintiff became of age in 1874, and if the Village of Hyde Park took possession of this strip of land in 1873, and he knew of that possession and the continued use and improvement of the street and made no objection, if with full knowledge of everything that was done from 1874, when he was of age, until Mr. Greeley informed him for the first time that he was the owner or part owner of the 23 feet, then he cannot recover as against the Village of Hyde Park."

However correct technically, as an abstract proposition, the first part of this charge may be, we do not think the last paragraph of it, above quoted, states the law of Illinois as to what constitutes a dedication of real property in that State, as interpreted by her supreme court. In Bloomington v. Bloomington Cemetery Assn., 126 Ill. 221, 227, 228, the court laid down the principle that mere "non-action will not raise an implication of an intention to dedicate private property to public use, nor will it estop the owner to deny such intention." After repeating the doctrine in the language of preceding cases, the court proceeded thus: "But it is said that he, and his grantee, the plaintiff, should be estopped to deny a dedication because of the public user of the land in question as a part of the street without objection on their part. Had the plaintiff, or its grantor, by any equivocal overt rights or declarations, given evidence of an intention to have the land in question included in the street, and thereby induced the public to use and the city to improve it as a part of the street, possibly the doctrine of estoppel might have been invoked. No such acts or declarations however are shown. All that is proved is mere non-action on their part, or, in other words, a mere omission to assert their title as against the public. Mere non-action will not raise an implication of an intention to dedicate private property to public use, nor will it estop the owner to deny such intention." See also Herhold v. Chicago, 108 Ill. 487; Peyton v. Shaw, 15 Ill. App. 192.

In Kyle v. Logan, 87 Ill. 64, 66, 67, the court states the same doctrine as follows: "In order to justify a claim that title to a tract of land has been devoted by dedication, the proof should be very satisfactory, either of an actual intention to dedicate or of such acts and declarations as should equitably estop the owner from denying such intention. . . . The owner of the land must do some act, or suffer some act to be done, from which it can be fairly inferred he intended a dedication to the public. Acquiescence, with knowledge of the use by the public, without objection, is not, as held by the circuit court, conclusive evidence of a dedication, for it may be rebutted. The second instruction for appellees, announcing this principle, was erroneous. A dedication, from an user of twenty years, and for a shorter time, may be presumed, but it is not conclusive. The owner might show any fact which would overcome the presumption."

In Chicago v. Johnson, 98 Ill. 618, 624, 625, the court laid down the doctrine on this subject as follows: "A dedication of private property to public uses will not be held to be established, except upon satisfactory proof, either of an actual dedication, or of such acts or declarations as should equitably estop the owner from denying such intention. This proposition is so clearly the law, it needs the citation of no authorities in its support."

In the still earlier case of McIntyre v. Storey, 80 Ill. 127, 130, the court said: "A dedication of the right of way for a highway may be variously proven. It may be established by grant or written instrument, or by the acts and declarations of the owner of the premises. It may be inferred from long and uninterrupted user by the public, with the knowledge and consent of the owner; but this court has had frequent occasion to say, there must be a clear intent shown to make the dedication. The evidence offered for that purpose should be clear, either of an actual intent so to do or of such acts or declarations as will equitably estop the owner from denying such intent."—citing Marcy v. Taylor, 19 Ill. 634; Kelly v. Chicago, 43 Ill. 888; Godfrey v. Alton, 12 Ill. 29.

In Chicago v. Stinson, 124 Ill. 510, 518, 514 [14 West. Rep. 404], the court said: "Before title can be devoted by dedication, the proof must be very satisfactory either of an actual intention to dedicate, or of such acts or declarations as should equitably estop the owner from denying such intention."—citing Kelly v. Chicago, 43 Ill. 888. "Long use and long acquiescence in such use by the owner of land are sometimes regarded as, in and of themselves, evidence of a dedication. In cases, however, of implied or presumed acquiescence or consent on part of the owner, very much depends upon the location of the road or street, the amount of travel, the nature of the use of the public, the rights asserted by the public, the knowledge of the owner, and like circumstances,"—citing Onstott v. Murray, 22 Iowa, 457. "We have said: 'Acquiescence, with knowledge of the use by the public, without objection, is not . . . conclusive evidence of a dedication, for it may be rebutted,'—citing Kyle v. Logan, 87 Ill. 64. The two prominent elements to be considered, in determining whether there has been a common-law dedication or not, are the intention of the owner to dedicate, and the acceptance by the public of the intended dedication. 'The owner of the land must do some act, or suffer some act to be done, from which it can be fairly inferred he intended a dedication to the public,'"—citing Kyle v. Logan, supra.

Under these authorities we think the court below committed error in that part of the charge to which we have just referred. The principle established by them is, that a dedication of a street or highway may be inferred from a long and uninterrupted user by the public with the knowledge and consent of the owner; but that mere knowledge and non-action or failure to assert one's rights are not conclusive evidence of such dedication, for they may be rebutted; and the party is always allowed to show facts and circumstances to overcome such presumption.

In the case at bar the facts were shown that at the time the Village opened the street through the property of the plaintiff he was a minor and a nonresident; that though he became of age the year after, he was then, and up to a short time before this suit was brought, a nonresident, living at Janesville, Wisconsin; and there was no evidence to show that he had ever until then seen the premises or been in Chicago. There was evidence also to show that during a great part of that period he was a co-tenant with other minors who resided out of the State of Illinois. Whether these facts were sufficient to explain the non-action of the plaintiff, and to negative the presumption of a dedication or not, was a question for the jury, which the court, by its charge, in effect withdrew from their consideration.

We do not deem it necessary to refer to any of the other assignments of error, as those we have discussed are sufficient to dispose of the case.

It results from what we have said that the judgment of the court below should be, and it hereby is, reversed, with a direction to order a new trial, and to take such further proceedings as shall not be inconsistent with this opinion.

(See S. C. Re Wight, Reporter's ed. 136-150.)

Power of court to enter order nunc pro tunc in a criminal case—omissions in record—order remanding cause—habeas corpus, matters inquirable into—embezzling letters—question of fact.

1. Where a person was convicted of embezzling letters, in the district court, and, pending a motion for new trial, the cause was transferred to the circuit court, where the motion was denied, and subsequently, in the district court, without the entry of the order previously made remitting the cause to that court, he was sentenced to imprisonment, the circuit court has power subsequently to enter the order nunc pro tunc upon its own motion and recollection, remitting the cause to the district court, according to the facts, to supply the omission to enter it previous to remitting the cause.
2. The court may make nunc pro tunc entries to supply omissions in the record of what was done at the time of the proceedings.
3. The action of the circuit court in making the order for a nunc pro tunc record, which showed that the case had been remanded from that court to the district court prior to the time when the sentence was passed upon the prisoner, was a legitimate exercise of power.
4. In a writ of habeas corpus nothing can be inquired into but the jurisdiction of the court.
5. In an indictment under sec. 5487, Rev. Stat., for embezzling a letter which was intended to be conveyed by mail, the failure to allege that the letter had not been delivered to the person to whom it was directed does not render the conviction void.
6. This court will not examine into the question whether the letter was put into the mail as a mere decoy or not. The question whether it was intended to be conveyed by the mail or by the letter carrier was a question of fact to be ascertained by the jury.

Argued Jan. 10, 1890. Decided March 3, 1890.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Michigan, discharging a writ of habeas corpus by which the appellant, Charles H. Wight, sought to be relieved from imprisonment after a conviction for unlawfully secreting and embezzling certain letters which came into his possession in the course of his official duty and were intended to be carried by a letter carrier. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Henry M. Duffield, for appellant:

This court will, upon habeas corpus, examine an indictment sufficiently to determine whether, under it, the prisoner could be convicted of any offense against the laws of the United States.

Ex parte Parks, 93 U. S. 22 (23: 788); Ex parte Yarbrough, 110 U. S. 653 (28: 274).

If the indictment does not describe any offense of which the court below could lawfully take jurisdiction, the prisoner will be discharged.

Ex parte Siebold, 100 U. S. 377 (25: 719).

The indictment in question does not contain the necessary jurisdictional averments.

1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 283; 1 Bish. Crim. Proc. § 636; U. S. v. Carl, 105 U. S. 611 (26: 1135); U. S. v. Britton, 107 U. S. 655 (27: 520).

The second and fourth counts do not allege that the letter was intended to be conveyed by mail, and are therefore fatally defective.

U. S. v. Matthews, 35 Fed. Rep. 890; U. S. v. Denicke, 35 Fed. Rep. 407; U. S. v. Rapp, 30 Fed. Rep. 818; U. S. v. Taylor, 37 Fed. Rep. 201.

This court will, upon habeas corpus, examine the testimony under which a person has been convicted, sufficiently to determine whether there was any evidence tending to prove an offense of which the court below had jurisdiction.

Cuddy, Petitioner, 181 U. S. 286 (33: 157).

If there is a fair doubt whether the act charged in the indictment and established by the evidence was embraced in the criminal prohibition of the statute, that doubt is to be resolved in favor of the accused.

U. S. v. Morris, 39 U. S. 14 Pet. 464 (10: 543); U. S. v. Wittberger, 18 U. S. 5 Wheat. 76 (5: 37); U. S. v. Sheldon, 15 U. S. 2 Wheat. 119 (4: 199); U. S. v. Clayton, 2 Dill. 219; U. S. v. Taylor, 37 Fed. Rep. 201.

The entry of the nunc pro tunc order on the hearing of the petition for habeas corpus, amending the record of the circuit court, was without jurisdiction and void.

The court had no authority to make the order nunc pro tunc upon its own unaided recollection.

Hyde v. Curling, 10 Mo. 359.

Mr. O. W. Chapman, Solicitor-Gen., for appellee:

The court below properly corrected the record.

A test letter sent to a fictitious address is within the protection of the statute, and such a letter addressed by any inspector to a fictitious person is a letter intended to be conveyed by mail, and its embezzlement will sustain an indictment.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a judgment of the Circuit Court for the Eastern District of Michigan discharging a writ of habeas corpus on a hearing before that court. By this writ the appellant here, Charles H. Wight, sought to be relieved from imprisonment in the Detroit House of Correction, under sentence of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Michigan. The petitioner was indicted in that court upon the charge that on the 28th day of June, 1888, while he was employed in one of the departments of the postal service of the United States, to wit, as superintendent of letter carriers in the post-office at Detroit, he wrongfully and unlawfully secreted and embezzled certain letters which came into his possession in the regular course of his official duty, and which were intended to be carried by a letter carrier, and which letters contained obligations and securities of the United States of pecuniary value, called treasury notes. There were six other counts for a similar offense.

Upon the trial in the district court, the jury found a verdict of guilty against petitioner. He thereupon made a motion in that court for a new trial, and likewise a motion in arrest of judgment. Pending the argument of these motions, the district court made an order transferring the cause to the Circuit Court for said District, which order is in the following language:

"It is now by the court ordered that this case be certified and remitted to the next Circuit Court of the United States for this District."

These motions were heard in the circuit court on the 11th day of March, 1889, before Judges Howell E. Jackson, circuit judge, and Henry B. Brown, district judge, and on the 12th day of March, 1889, the following order was entered of record:

"United States of America }
v.
Charles Wight. }

"In this cause the defendant's motion to set aside verdict and in arrest of judgment, after mature deliberation thereon, are by the court here now denied."

And on the same day, at the district court room in the City of Detroit, that court made the following entry:

"The United States }
v.
Charles Wight. } Convicted on indictment forembezzling letters, etc.

"The court now deliver judgment on the motions to set aside the verdict rendered by the jury herein and for a new trial, heretofore argued and submitted; and, thereupon, it is ordered that said motions be, and the same are hereby, denied, and that the order heretofore made herein certifying this cause to the Circuit Court of the United States for this District be, and the same is hereby, vacated as having been improvidently made.

"And the said defendant being now placed at the bar of the court for sentence, thereupon the court do now sentence him, the said Charles Wight, to be imprisoned and kept at hard labor, at and in the Detroit House of Correction, in the City of Detroit, Wayne County, Michigan, for the term of two years from and including this day, and to stand committed until the terms of this sentence are complied with."

On the 25th of August, thereafter, an application was made to Mr. Justice Harlan of this court, who was the justice assigned at that time to the Sixth Circuit, for a writ of habeas corpus, to deliver the petitioner, Wight, from restraint in the Detroit House of Correction, by Joseph Nicholson, its superintendent. On this application Justice Harlan made an order that a rule issue from the circuit court against the marshal of the United States for the Eastern District of Michigan and the superintendent of the Detroit House of Correction, returnable before that court within three days after service of process, to show why the habeas corpus should not issue as prayed in the petition. To this rule Nicholson made a return, in which he said that he held the said Wight in restraint of his liberty as a prisoner in the Detroit House of Correction, by virtue of the judgment and sentence of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Michigan, rendered on the 12th day of March, 1889, a copy of which he set out. To this return Wight, by his counsel, made exception by way of answer, in which he said that the District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan had not, at the time of the sentence referred to in said return, any jurisdiction over him, the said Wight, or any authority to pass sentence against him, because the said cause in which it pretended to pass sentence upon him on the 12th of March, 1889, had been duly certified and remitted from said District Court into the Circuit Court of the United States in said District, and the transcript thereof duly filed, and that up to the date of said alleged sentence, to wit, the 12th day of March, 1889, was and at the date hereof is still pending in the circuit court of the United States, as more fully and at length alleged and shown by the certified copies of the proceedings in said cause, in the petition filed in this matter.

Petitioner Wight also averred that the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Michigan never had or obtained jurisdiction over him for the following reasons: that the indictment on which petitioner was arraigned and tried in said court did not charge the commission of any offense over which said court had jurisdiction, and because the evidence in the case did not establish any offense against the laws of the United States, of which said district court had jurisdiction.

Upon examination of the record of the circuit court in the case at this stage of the proceeding on the writ of habeas corpus, it was ascertained that no order remanding the case from the circuit court to the district court had been entered on the journals of the former court, the last order on the subject being the one which we have already recited, overruling the motion for a new trial and the motion in arrest of judgment. Thereupon the judges of the circuit court caused the following order to be made:

v.
Charles Wight. }

"The defendant, being personally present in court, as well as by his counsel, Henry M. Duffield, Esq., and the court having its attention called to its records made and entered in the above-entitled cause on the twelfth day of March, A. D. 1889, by the return of Joseph H. Nicholson, superintendent of the Detroit House of Correction, to the writ of habeas corpus heretofore allowed by this court on the petition of the above-named Charles Wight, and upon inspection of said records, so made and entered as aforesaid, it satisfactorily appears to the court that the same is not a full and correct record of the order which was in fact made by this court on the 12th day of

March aforesaid, in this, that it fails to show the order of this court which was duly made on the said 12th day of March, remitting said cause out of this court into the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Michigan; therefore, after hearing the said Charles Wight, by his counsel, in opposition thereto, this court, upon its own motion, based upon its recollection of the facts of the making of said order remitting said cause as aforesaid into said district court, now orders and directs that the same be entered now as of the said twelfth day of March, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-nine, according to the facts thereof, which are as follows:

"At a session of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Sixth Circuit and Eastern District of Michigan, continued and held, pursuant to adjournment, at the district court room, in the City of Detroit, on the twelfth day of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-nine.

"Present: The Hon. Howell E. Jackson, circuit judge; the Hon. Henry B. Brown, district judge.

v.
Charles Wight. }

"The defendant being personally present in court, as well as by his counsel, Henry M. Duffield, Esq., said United States being represented by C. P. Black, United States attorney, and Charles T. Wilkins, assistant United States attorney, and the said United States attorney objecting to the consideration of said cause on the part of this court for the reason that there was no authority in law for the district court to remit said cause to this court after verdict had in said district court; therefore the court, upon its own motion, hereby remits said cause back into the said District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan for such action as said district court shall see fit to take."

Thereupon the circuit court on the 30th day of September, 1889, on the same day that it had ordered the nunc pro tunc entry of the order remanding the cause to the district court, being of the opinion that this order cured the defect of the record, which showed the case to be still pending in the circuit court, and being further of opinion, as appears from their judgment in the matter, that the case had never been lawfully removed from the district into the circuit court, and that therefore said district court had always retained jurisdiction of the case, made an order discharging the writ of habeas corpus.

It is mainly upon these orders about the several removals of the case from one court into the other that appellant relies to show that the district court at the time of pronouncing its judgment of imprisonment against appellant had no jurisdiction of the case. But there is also a further point made, that the letters which the appellant embezzled were never put into the mail with intent that they should be carried, within the meaning of the Statute.

Of course, if the judge of the district court is right in the opinion expressed by him in the orders which he made, that he had no power after the verdict in the district court to transfer it to the circuit court, then the case had really never been withdrawn from the jurisdiction of the district court, and the question arising upon the absence of any record in the circuit court of an order remanding it back to the district court is of no consequence, because all that was done in the circuit court, in that view, was without jurisdiction, and the case never was lawfully in that court, and the district court had the right to make the order, which it did make, setting aside its former order transferring the case to the circuit court. In this view of the subject, the case having always been really under the jurisdiction and control of the district court, its judgment sentencing the prisoner on the verdict was within its power, and is not examinable on this writ of habeas corpus.

But we are not satisfied that this view of the powers of the two courts is a sound one. While we do not decide the question now, because it is not necessary (as our judgment is the same in either event), we shall, for the purposes of the present case, treat it as if the order transferring the case from the district court into the circuit court was a valid order, so that it could only be remanded from the circuit court into the district court by some order or action of the former. No such order was found upon the records of the circuit court at the time sentence was imposed upon the prisoner in the district court; if no such order had been made previous to that judgment, the case was still pending in the circuit court, and the district court had no authority to pass the sentence it did upon the prisoner. This view of the subject calls upon us to inquire whether the nunc pro tunc order of September 30 was a valid order, and one within the power of the circuit court to make.

Our first impression was that whatever might be the powers of the courts in this regard over their records during the term in which the transactions are supposed to have occurred, the record of which, or failure to make any record of which, is the subject of amendment, yet when it was attempted to do this after an adjournment and at a subsequent term of the court, the powers of the court in making such changes in the records of the proceedings were limited to those in which there remained written memoranda of some kind in the case, and among the files of the court, by which the record could be amended, if erroneous, or the proper entry could be supplied, if one had been omitted. And especially that in criminal procedure this power to make such entries, at a subsequent term of the court, of what had transpired at a former term, as would establish the authority of the court to pass a sentence of fine or imprisonment, either did not exist at all, or, if it did, was limited to cases in which some written evidence of what was done remained in the papers connected with the case.

We are satisfied, however, upon an examination of the authorities, that this restriction upon the power of the court does not exist. Mr. Bishop, in his first volume on Criminal Proceedings, section 1160, states the doctrine in the following terms:

"When the term of the court has closed, it is too late to undo, at a subsequent term, what was done at the former term. A judgment of the court, for instance, cannot then be opened, and modified or set aside. Neither, it has been held, can the clerk, at a subsequent term, make an entry of what truly transpired at the preceding term. But this refers to the power of the clerk, proceeding of his own motion. The court may order nunc pro tunc entries, as they are called, made to supply some omission in the entry of what was done at the preceding term; yet this is a power the extent of which is limited, and not easily defined. In general, mere clerical errors may be amended in this way. So of the mistake of the clerk in the name of the judge before whom the indictment was found."

The present case comes within the clause of this section which declares the power of the court to make nunc pro tunc entries to supply some omission in the record of what was done at the time of the proceedings. An extensive list of authorities is cited in the foot note of Mr. Bishop, and among those which support the power of the court to make a record of some matter which was done at a former term, of which the clerk had made no entry, the following cases directly affirm that proposition: Galloway v. McKeithen, 5 Ired. L. 12; Hyde v. Curling, 10 Mo. 359; State v. Clark, 18 Mo. 432; Nelson v. Barker, 8 McLean, 379; Bilansky v. State, 3 Minn. 427.

The opinion of the court in this latter case contains a somewhat full reference to the history of this subject, as it is found in the reports of the English cases, and in Blackstone's Commentaries, Vol. 3, p. 408, the result of which is to show that at an early day the English courts exercised this power so recklessly, when the pleadings were all ore tenus, and great liberality was necessarily allowed in amendments, that the abuse was corrected by the King, who made the declaration that "although we have granted to our justices to make record of pleas pleaded before them, yet we will not that their own records shall be a warranty for their own wrong, nor that they may raise their rolls, nor amend them, nor record them contrary to their original enrolment." This, Blackstone declares, meant only that the justices should not by their own private rasure change a record already made up, or alter the truth to any sinister purpose.

In the Minnesota case, the plaintiff in error had been convicted of the crime of murder, and after trial and verdict, and after the case had been carried to the Supreme Court of the State, the record of the proceedings on the trial was amended so as to show affirmatively that each juror was sworn as prescribed by law; that they were put in charge of the officer to keep them as prescribed by law; and that they were polled at the request of defendant on their coming in with their verdict; matters which, it seems, had been omitted in the record of the judgment. The supreme court in that case, as we think, stated with force and precision the true rule on this subject. They said: "While we should go as far as any court in reprobating a rule to place the proceedings of a court almost entirely at the mercy of the subordinate officials thereof, we should be scrupulously careful in adopting any rule which would tend to destroy the sanctity or lessen the verity of the records. And while we admit the power to amend a record after the term has passed in which the record was made up, we deprecate the exercise of the power in any case where there was the least room for doubt about the facts upon which the amendment was sought to be made. . . . But when the facts stand undisputed, and the objection is based upon the technical point alone that the term is passed at which the record was made up, it would be doing violence to the spirit which pervades the administration of justice in the present age to sustain it. It is our opinion that this power of necessity exists in the district court, and that its exercise must in a great measure be governed by the facts of each case."

The case in 5 Iredell, although a civil suit, established the doctrine that a court has a right to amend the records of any preceding term by inserting what had been omitted either by the act of the court or clerk, and that when so amended it stands as if it had never been defective, or as if the entries had been made at the proper time.

The case of Hyde v. Curling, 10 Mo. 359, which was also a civil suit, and seems to have been very well considered, is thus stated in the syllabus of the report: "A court has power to order entries of proceedings had by the court at a previous term to be made nunc pro tunc, but where the court has omitted to make an order which it might or ought to have made, it cannot at a subsequent term be made nunc pro tunc."

In the case in 18 Mo. of State v. Clark, it appeared that the prisoner had been tried on an indictment which was not signed at the time of the trial by the foreman as a true bill, and that the clerk had not marked the time of filing the same on the indictment. It was held, on writ of error to the supreme court, that the court had a right, on motion at a subsequent term, to amend its record by a statement of these facts, not only by the indorsement upon the bill, but by a regular entry on the journal, that "the grand jury returned into court the following true bills of indictment" (naming the one under which the defendant was convicted). The court said that, if these acts had taken place, the failure of the clerk to make proper and formal entries on the records of the court might have been supplied or corrected by having such entries made nunc pro tunc.

In Nelson v. Barker, 8 McLean, 379, Mr. Justice McLean, observed, in regard to an amendment of a declaration under a plea of misnomer, that it was objected to on the ground that there was nothing to amend by, to which he replied that at common law the court could only give leave to amend when there was something to amend by, and anciently amendments were required to be made at the term at which the error occurred, but now an amendment may be made at any time before judgment, and in some cases after judgment; and he refers to the 32d section of the Judiciary Act of 1789.

This, which has been commonly called the Statute of Jeofails and Amendments of the United States, may be found in section 954, Revised Statutes, and is as liberal in the powers which it confers on the courts to make amendments as any of those enacted in more modern times. We are forced to the conclusion that the action of the circuit court in making the order for a nunc pro tunc record, which showed that the case had been remanded from that court to the district court prior to the time when the sentence was passed upon the prisoner, was a legitimate exercise of power.

With regard to the proposition which denies that the indictment in the district court and the evidence by which it is sustained conferred jurisdiction on that court, we do not think it needs much comment. The grand jurors charged in the first count of this indictment that "the said Wight, who was then and there a person employed in one of the departments of the postal service of the United States, to wit, employed as an assistant to the superintendent of letter carriers in the post-office at Detroit aforesaid, unlawfully and wrongfully did secrete and embezzle a letter which came into his possession in the regular course of his official duties, and which was intended to be carried by a letter carrier, which letter then and there contained five pecuniary obligations and securities of the government of the United States," and were the property of one Angus M. Smith, and with the letter were then and there inclosed in an envelope addressed to "Oscar Singleton, Montevideo, Cook Co. Mich." A similar statement is in effect made in all the other counts.

The law under which the prisoner was indicted is section 5467 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, the language of which, applicable to the case, is as follows:

"Any person employed in any department of the postal service who shall secrete or embezzle or destroy any letter, packet, bag or mail of letters, intrusted to him, or which shall come into his possession, and which was intended to be conveyed by mail or carried or delivered by any mail-carrier, mail-messenger, route-agent, letter-carrier or other person employed in any department of the postal service, or forwarded through or delivered from any post-office or branch post-office established by authority of the Postmaster-General, and which shall contain any note, bond, draft, check, warrant, revenue stamp, postage-stamp, stamped envelope, postal-card, money-order, certificate of stock or other pecuniary obligation or security of the government, . . . any such person who shall steal or take any of the things aforesaid out of any letter, packet, bag or mail of letters, which shall have come into his possession, either in the regular course of his official duties or in any other manner whatever, and provided the same shall not have been delivered to the party to whom it is directed, shall be punishable by imprisonment at hard labor for not less than one year nor more than five years."

The argument of counsel assumes that in this proceeding, by writ of habeas corpus, we can inquire into and correct nearly all errors which may have been committed by the district court in the control of the case originally. This has been so often denied by this court, and the proposition is so clear, that in a writ of habeas corpus nothing can be inquired into but the jurisdiction of the court, that it is unnecessary to pursue the entire line of argument of counsel for appellant. Cuddy, Petitioner, 131 U. S. 280 [83: 154]. We are of opinion, notwithstanding the allegation of counsel that there was no jurisdiction because the indictment did not charge that the letter embezzled was intended to be carried by a letter carrier, that it so alleged in the exact terms of the Statute just cited, and is therefore sufficient.

With regard to the proposition "that the failure to allege in some of these indictments that the letter had not been delivered to the party to whom it is directed renders the whole proceeding void," we think it is unsound. While the purpose for which this clause was inserted in the Act is not very clear, it was probably intended to repel the idea that the stealing or embezzling of such a letter, after it had been carried through the mail or delivered by the letter carrier to its owner and its purpose served, did not render the party guilty under this Statute. At all events, the fact of its delivery being a matter of defense, when it was proved that the party in the course of his employment had embezzled the letter and stolen the money, it will be presumed that the defendant made the most he could of that defense on the trial. We are not of opinion that it is necessary for us to examine into the question raised on the evidence at the trial as to whether the securities were put into the letter, and that into the mail, as a mere decoy or not. The question whether it was intended to be conveyed by the mail or by the letter carrier was a question of fact to be ascertained by the jury, and in a case like this, where the party has been convicted of embezzling a letter and valuable property in a letter passing through the regular course of the mail and the hands of the letter carrier, where the indictment is a good one, and where the party has been found guilty and sentenced, we are not disposed to inquire into the motives for which the letter was put into the mail, even though the object was to detect or intrap the party in his criminal practices. For these reasons the judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

The Chief Justice, with whom concurred Mr. Justice Harlan, dissenting:

I am compelled to withhold my assent to the conclusion reached by the court in this case. In my judgment the district court had power after the verdict to transfer the cause to the circuit court, and, having done so, it required an order remitting the cause from the circuit court to the district court, before the latter court could pronounce a lawful sentence. The petitioner was sentenced by the district court, which, as the record then stood, has no jurisdiction, and was committed accordingly, and while undergoing imprisonment under that sentence sued out the writ of habeas corpus. The circuit court then entered an order nunc pro tunc as of the previous term, remitting the cause into the district court, basing its action upon "its recollection of the facts of the making of said order." The record before us does not disclose the existence of any minutes of the clerk or notes of the judge that the entry of such an order had been directed, or of any other official evidence to that effect, and I do not understand it to be contended that there was any such. Granting that, as has been said, the judge during the term is a living record, and may alter and supply from memory any order, judgment or decree which has been pronounced, and this because he is presumed to retain his own action in his recollection, yet after the term has elapsed, the exercise of such a power to the extent of supplying an order upon which jurisdiction depends, in the absence of any entry, minute or memorandum to proceed by or of any statutory provision expressly allowing it, ought not to be conceded in criminal cases. The Statute of Amendments and Jeofails has no application.

Upon this ground, my brother Harlan and myself are of opinion that the judgment should be reversed.

Mr. Justice Gray did not sit in the argument of this case and took no part in its decision.

Order of circuit court remanding case not appealable—Acts of March 3, 1887, and Aug. 13, 1888—sec. 673, Rev. Stat.—Act of Feb. 25, 1889.

1. Orders of the circuit court remanding cases to the state court are not final judgments or decrees from which an appeal will lie to this court.
2. By the Act of March 3, 1887 (24 Stat. 552, 555), as corrected by the Act of August 13, 1888 (25 Stat. 438), it was provided that no appeal or writ of error should be allowed from the decision of the circuit court remanding a case.
3. An appeal or writ of error in such a case will not lie under sec. 693 of the Revised Statutes, because that section applies only to final judgments or decrees, and an order remanding is not a final judgment.
4. In the Act of February 25, 1889 (25 Stat. 693), the words "a final judgment or decree" are used in the same sense as in the prior Statutes.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

These are appeals from orders of the circuit court remanding the above-entitled cases to the state court, which appeals the records show were "granted under the provisions of the Act of February 25, 1889, on the ground that the court has no jurisdiction of the cause."

Before the Act of 1875, chap. 137 (18 Stat. 470), we held that an order by the circuit court remanding a cause was not such a final judgment or decree in a civil action as to give us jurisdiction for its review by writ of error or appeal. The appropriate remedy in such a case was then, by mandamus, to compel the circuit court to hear and decide. Babbitt v. Clark, 108 U. S. 606, 609 [26: 507, 508]; Turner v. Farmers L. & T. Co. 106 U. S. 552, 555 [27: 273]; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Wiswall, 90 U. S. 23 Wall. 507 [23: 103]. The Act of 1875 made such order reviewable (without regard to the pecuniary value of the matter in dispute); but by the Act of March 3, 1887 (24 Stat. 532, 555), as corrected by the Act of August 13, 1888 (25 Stat. 438), the provision to that effect was repealed, and it was also provided that no appeal or writ of error should be allowed from the decision of the circuit court remanding a cause. In Morey v. Lockhart, 128 U. S. 56, 57 [31: 68], Mr. Chief Justice Waite, speaking for the court, said: "It is difficult to see what more could be done to make the action of the circuit court final, for all the purposes of the removal, and not the subject of review in this court. First, it is declared that there shall be no appeal or writ of error in such a case, and then, to make the matter doubly sure, the only statute which ever gave the right of such an appeal or writ of error is repealed." And the court held that the language of the Act was broad enough to cover all cases, and also that an appeal or writ of error would not lie under § 693 of the Revised Statutes, because that section applied only to final judgments or decrees, and an order remanding was not a final judgment.

The Act of February 25, 1889 (25 Stat. 693), provides that "in all cases where a final judgment or decree shall be rendered in a circuit court of the United States in which there shall have been a question involving the jurisdiction of the court, the party against whom the judgment or decree is rendered shall be entitled to an appeal or writ of error to the Supreme Court of the United States to review such judgment or decree, without reference to the amount of the same; but in cases where the decree or judgment does not exceed the sum of five thousand dollars the supreme court shall not review any question raised upon the record except such question of jurisdiction."

The words "a final judgment or decree," in this Act, are manifestly used in the same sense as in the prior Statutes which have received interpretation, and these orders to remand were not final judgments or decrees, whatever the ground upon which the circuit court proceeded. Graves v. Corbin, 132 U. S. 571, 591 [33: 462, 468].

Appeals dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

THE EAST OMAHA LAND COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 178-198).

Alluvion, right to—Missouri River—what is alluvion—reference to a plat of land, in a deed—government lands—patent passes title to accretions—meander lines—water line.

1. The person whose land is bounded by a stream of water, which changes its course gradually by alluvial formations, will still hold by the same boundary, including the accumulated soil, and is without remedy for his loss by the same means.

2. This rule is applicable to land which borders on the Missouri River.
3. Alluvion is an addition to riparian land made by the water to which the land is contiguous so gradually and imperceptibly that, though the witnesses may see from time to time that progress has been made, they could not perceive it while the process was going on.
4. Where a plat is referred to in a deed as containing a description of land, the courses, distances and other particulars appearing upon the plat are to be as much regarded, in ascertaining the true description of the land and the intent of the parties, as if they had been expressly enumerated in the deed.
5. This rule is applicable to government lands bounded by the Missouri River, as the same are surveyed and platted under the Acts of Congress.
6. The patent passes the title of the United States to the land, not only as it was at the time of the survey, but as it is at the date of the patent, so that the United States does not retain any interest in any accretion formed between the survey and the date of the patent.
7. Meander lines are run in surveying public lands bordering upon navigable rivers, not as boundaries of the tract, but to ascertain the quantity of the land subject to sale; and the water-course, and not the meander line, as actually run on the land, is the boundary.
8. Where a water line is the boundary of a given lot, that line, no matter how it shifts, remains the boundary, and a deed describing the lot by number or name conveys the land up to such shifting line exactly as it does up to a fixed side line and conveys all accretion thereto.

Mr. Justice Blatchford delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit in equity brought in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Nebraska, on the 9th of February, 1889, by The East Omaha Land Company, a Nebraska corporation, against Thomas Jefferis. The case was heard on a demurrer to the bill, which makes it necessary to state with particularity the allegations of the bill. They are as follows:

The lands which are the subject of the suit are of the value of $2,000 or more. In 1851 the deputy surveyors of the United States, then engaged in surveying the public lands in township 75 north, range 44 west, of the fifth principal meridian, in the State of Iowa, ran, marked and made field-notes and plats on the meander line of the left bank of the Missouri River, and returned the said field-notes and plats to the surveyor-general of Iowa, who filed the same in the General Land Office, and they were thereupon duly approved; and since that time no resurvey has been made by the United States of the lands lying along, upon or near said river, or of the premises which are the subject of the bill.

Section 21 in that township was properly surveyed and subdivided by the deputy surveyors, and the plats and notes thereof were duly made, returned and approved as aforesaid. By the surveys the section was found, and by the plats and notes thereof returned, as fractional; and a part thereof, designated as lot 4 was formed, containing 37.24 acres, the north boundary thereof being on the Missouri River. The meander line of the river was described in the field-notes as beginning at meander corner No. 6, the same being at a point on the line between sections 16 and 17 in said township and range, about 100 feet north of the intersection of the exterior lines of said sections 16 and 17 and sections 20 and 21; thence south 71 degrees east, 2.68 chains to meander post No. 7, on the north line of lot 4; thence south 79 degrees 50 minutes east, 54 chains; thence north 85 degrees east, 4.50 chains; thence east 15 chains; thence north 87 degrees east, 5.25 chains to the corner of sections 21 and 22. A map is annexed, marked "Exhibit A," being a true copy of the plat so made, returned and approved, showing the meander line of the river and the lines of the subdivisions of sections 16, 17, 21 and 22.

On the 10th of October, 1858, one Edmund Jefferis entered lot 4 at the United States land office for the district of land subject to sale at Kanesville, Iowa, paid the proper officer of the office the legal price thereof, and received therefor the usual register's certificate; and, on the 15th of June, 1855, the usual patent of the government was duly issued to him for the land. In the certificate and patent the land was described as lot 4 in fractional section 21, in township 75 north, range 44 west, of the fifth principal meridian, containing 37.24 acres, according to the official plat of the survey of the land returned to the General Land Office by the surveyor-general. At the time of the entry, the meander line of the left bank of the river was the same, or nearly the same, as shown by such field-notes and plat.

On the 14th of July, 1856, said Jefferis duly conveyed the land to Joseph Still and Joseph I. Town, describing the same simply as lot 4 in section 21 in township 75 north, range 44 west, of the fifth principal meridian. On the 21st of September, 1857, Town conveyed the undivided half of the premises, with warranty, to one McCoid, who, on the 16th of October, 1857, quit-claimed the premises to one Coleman. On the 25th of May, 1858, Coleman conveyed them, with warranty, to Mrs. Ruth A. Town. On the 27th of April, 1859, Joseph I. Town and Ruth A. Town conveyed them, with warranty, to one Boin, who on the 30th of May, 1861, quit-claimed them to one McBride; and McBride, on the 30th of September, 1861, quit-claimed them to one Schoville. Schoville having died, his widow and heirs quit-claimed them to the plaintiff, on the 22d of March, 1888. On the 9th of March, 1888, Still quit-claimed the other undivided half of the premises to Lyman H. Town, who on the 28th of March, 1888, conveyed the same to the plaintiff. In each of the deeds made by those several parties, the premises were described as lot 4 in fractional section 21, township 75 north, range 44 west, of the fifth principal meridian, and the deeds were duly recorded in the registry of Pottawattamie County, Iowa, in which county the premises were situated.

About the time of the original entry of lot 4 by Edmund Jefferis, new land was formed along and against the whole length of the north line thereof, and from that time continued to form until 1870, so that in that year, at a distance of 20 chains and more from the original meander line before described, and within the lines of the lot on the east and west running north and south, a tract of 40 acres and more had been formed by accretion to the lot, and ever since had been and now is a part thereof. The said land was so formed by natural causes and imperceptible degrees, that is to say, by the operation of the current and waters of the river, washing and depositing earth, sand and other material against and upon the north line of the lot; and the waters and current of the river receded therefrom, so that the new land so formed became high and dry above the usual high-water mark, and the river made for itself its main course far north of the original meander line. Such process, begun in 1858 and continued until 1870, went on so slowly that it could not be observed in its progress; but, at intervals of not less than three or four months, it could be discerned by the eye that additions greater or less had been made to the shore.

In 1877, the river, at a point more than a mile south of the north line of the lot, suddenly cut through its bank and made for itself a course through the same, leaving all of section 21 north of its bank. A plat marked "Exhibit B," is annexed, upon which is delineated the river both before and after such sudden change.

The river is and always has been navigable for steamers of large tonnage. The United States never claimed any interest in the land so formed by accretion to lot 4. The plaintiff submits that by such several mesne conveyances, whereby the title to lot 4 has come to it, it has become seised in fee, not only of the land included within the boundaries of the lot at the time of such survey, but also of the land so formed by accretion thereto, so that the east and west boundaries of the lot are formed by the protraction of the east and west lines north to the left bank of the river as the same was in 1877 when the river suddenly changed its course, and the north boundary of the lot is the said left bank at that time.

When the plaintiff became seised of the land, it entered into the same and made large and valuable improvements thereon; and it has projected the enterprise of redeeming the land and other land adjoining it, of improving the same so that the whole will be available for railroad and manufacturing purposes, of building railroad tracks, station-houses, depots, warehouses and manufacturing establishments, and selling parcels of the land to others for such purposes, and has expended more than $20,000, and has in hand $100,000 which it purposes to expend in grading, and in building roads, bridges, etc.

In 1888, one Counzeman and others, without any authority of law, entered upon the land so formed by accretion, and for a time occupied it, but afterwards abandoned it. Recently, Counzeman has made to the defendant a deed of quit-claim purporting to convey a certain parcel of the land so formed by accretion to lot 4. The south line of the land so conveyed to the defendant is about two hundred feet north of the original meander line of lot 4, as that line was so run, marked and platted by the United States surveyors; and the deed purports to convey about twenty acres, which are within the above-recited boundaries of the land formed by accretion to lot 4. When Counzeman entered upon the land and when he made the deed to the defendant, each of them well knew of the plaintiff's plan and purposes in respect thereof, and that they had no right so to enter; and the defendant threatens to, and, unless restrained by injunction, will, dispossess the plaintiff and seriously interfere with its plans and purposes. The defendant is insolvent and unable to answer for the damage to which he will subject the plaintiff by entering into the premises and dispossessing the plaintiff.

The bill waives an answer on oath, and prays for an injunction restraining the defendant from entering into, taking possession of or intermeddling with any part of the premises conveyed to him by Counzeman, and for a decree declaring that the land so formed against lot 4, including that conveyed to the defendant, became and was a part of lot 4 and included within its description; that the title to it has become and is vested in the plaintiff; that the deed made to the defendant be delivered up to be canceled; that he be perpetually enjoined from asserting the same or any title or interest thereunder against the plaintiff; and for general relief.

The defendant interposed a general demurrer to the bill, for want of equity.

The case was heard before Mr. Justice Brewer, then circuit judge, who filed an opinion on the 1st of March, 1889, directing that the demurrer be sustained. (40 Fed. Rep. 386.) On a petition for a rehearing, which was heard by the same judge, he filed an opinion (40 Fed. Rep. 390) directing that the demurrer be overruled. Thereupon a decree was entered, on the 13th of November, 1889, overruling the demurrer; granting a perpetual injunction restraining the defendant from entering into, taking possession of or in any manner intermeddling with the premises, and from asserting any right or interest therein; and declaring that the land in question was formed by process of accretion and imperceptible degrees against the premises known and described as lot 4 of section 21 in township 75 north, of range 44 west, of the fifth principal meridian, in the State of Iowa, as the same was originally surveyed and platted by the surveyors of the United States, and became, by such accretion, a part of said lot and was included within such description, and the title thereto passed by such description from the original patentee of the United States to the plaintiff, by divers mesne conveyances, and is now vested in the plaintiff. It was further decreed that the deed made to the defendant by Counzeman, purporting to convey the premises, be delivered up to the plaintiff to be canceled, and that the plaintiff recover its costs to be taxed. The premises upon which the decree operated were described in it as follows: Beginning at a point 1,520 feet north of the southwest corner of lot 4 in section 21, township 75 north, range 44 west, of the fifth principal meridian, running thence north 660 feet; thence east 1,320 feet, to the extension due north of the east boundary line of said lot 4, as originally surveyed and platted by the United States; thence south on that line 660 feet; and thence west to the place of beginning; containing 20 acres. The decree further states that the defendant prayed an appeal to this court, and that it was allowed.

The grounds upon which the circuit court proceeded in overruling the demurrer to the bill are stated by it in its opinion to be these: (1) It being alleged in the bill that the added land was formed by "imperceptible degrees," although the increase was great, resulting in the addition of many acres, yet the time during which it was made was nearly twenty years, and an increase might have been going on, imperceptible from day to day and from week to week, which, during the lapse of so many years might result in the addition of all the land; and hence the averment of the bill cannot be overthrown, notwithstanding what is known of the character of the Missouri River and the soil through which it flows, and of the rapid changes in its banks which are constantly going on. (2) Where a water line is the boundary of a given lot, that line, no matter how it shifts, remains the boundary; and a deed describing the lot by number or name conveys the land up to such shifting water line, exactly as it does up to the fixed side lines; so that, as long as the doctrine of accretion applies, the water line, no matter how much it may shift, if named as the boundary, continues to be the boundary, and a deed of the lot carries all the land up to the water line.

The propositions contended for by the defendant are these: (1) Taking the allegations of the bill with those facts in relation to the Missouri River of which the court will take judicial notice, it appears that the formation in question was not accretion. (2) Taking the allegations of the bill most strongly against the plaintiff, it must be assumed that some area, however narrow, had formed between the time when the survey was made, in 1851, and the time when the land was entered by the patentee, in October, 1858. (3) The patentee, by the deed made by him to Still and Joseph I. Town, conveyed only "lot 4;" and, while the successive grantees held the title to that lot, accretions were formed of greater or less extent, which were never conveyed to the plaintiff, the deeds to it calling only for lot 4. The substance of this contention is that, as the conveyance by the patentee to Still and Joseph I. Town described the land simply as "lot 4," it passed the title to that lot as it was at the date of the survey in 1851, and not at the date of the deed, in 1856, and thereby excluded the new land formed after the survey of 1851; and, that, as accretions of greater or less extent were formed while the several successive grantees held the title, such accretions did not pass by their respective deeds, and the title thereto has not come to the plaintiff.

It is distinctly alleged in the bill that the new land is an accretion to that originally purchased by the patentee from the United States. The rule of law applicable to such a state of facts is thus stated by this court in New Orleans v. United States, 85 U. S. 10 Pet. 662, 717 [9: 578, 594]: "The question is well settled at common law, that the person whose land is bounded by a stream of water which changes its course gradually by alluvial formations, shall still hold by the same boundary, including the accumulated soil. No other rule can be applied on just principles. Every proprietor whose land is thus bounded is subject to loss by the same means which may add to his territory; and, as he is without remedy for his loss in this way, he cannot be held accountable for his gain." And in Banks v. Ogden, 69 U. S. 2 Wall. 57, 67 [17: 818, 821], it is said: "The rule governing additions made to land bounded by a river, lake or sea, has been much discussed and variously settled by usage and by positive law. Almost all jurists and legislators, however, both ancient and modern, have agreed that the owner of the land thus bounded is entitled to these additions. By some, the rule has been vindicated on the principle of natural justice, that he who sustains the burden of losses and of repairs, imposed by the contiguity of waters, ought to receive whatever benefits they may bring by accretion; by others, it is derived from the principle of public policy, that it is the interest of the community that all land should have an owner, and most convenient that insensible additions to the shore should follow the title to the shore itself."

It is contended by the defendant that this well-settled rule is not applicable to land which borders on the Missouri River, because of the peculiar character of that stream and of the soil through which it flows, the course of the river being tortuous, the current rapid and the soil a soft, sandy loam, not protected from the action of water either by rocks or the roots of trees; the effect being that the river cuts away its banks, sometimes in a large body, and makes for itself a new course, while the earth thus removed is almost simultaneously deposited elsewhere, and new land is formed almost as rapidly as the former bank was carried away.

But it has been held by this court that the general law of accretion is applicable to land on the Mississippi River; and, that being so, although the changes on the Missouri River are greater and more rapid than on the Mississippi, the difference does not constitute such a difference in principle as to render inapplicable to the Missouri River the general rule of law.

In Jones v. Soulard, 65 U. S. 24 How. 41 [16: 604], it was held that a riparian proprietor on the Mississippi River at St. Louis was entitled, as such, to all accretions as far out as the middle thread of the stream; and that the rule well established as to fresh-water rivers generally was not varied by the circumstance that the Mississippi at St. Louis is a great and public water-course. The court said that from the days of Sir Matthew Hale all grants of land bounded by fresh-water rivers, where the expressions designating the water line were general, conferred the proprietorship on the grantee to the middle thread of the stream, and entitled him to the accretions; that the land to which the accretion attached in that case was an irregular piece of 79 acres, and had nothing peculiar in it to form an exemption from the rule; that the rule applied to such a public water-course as the Mississippi was at the City of St. Louis; and that the doctrine that, on rivers where the tide ebbs and flows, grants of land are bounded by ordinary high-water mark, had no application to the case, nor did the size of the river alter the rule.

In Sault v. Shepherd, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 502 [18: 442], the doctrine of accretion was applied in respect of a lot of alluvion or batture in the Mississippi River fronting the City of New Orleans, in favor of the riparian proprietor; and it was held that the right to the alluvion depended upon the fact of the contiguity of the estate to the river, and that where the accretion was made to a strip of land which bordered on the river, the accretion belonged to such strip and not to the larger parcel behind it, from which the strip, when sold, was separated.

In St. Clair County v. Livingston, 90 U. S. 23 Wall. 46 [28: 59], the same doctrine was applied to a piece of land situated on the east bank of the Mississippi River opposite St. Louis. It was there held that where a survey began "on the bank of the river," and was carried thence "to a point in the river," the river bank being straight and running according to such line, the track surveyed was bounded by the river; that alluvion meant the addition to riparian land, gradually and imperceptibly made, through causes either natural or artificial, by the water to which the land was contiguous; that the test of what was gradual and imperceptible was that, although the witnesses might see from time to time that progress had been made, they could not perceive it while the process was going on; and that it was alluvion whether the addition was made on a stream which overflowed its banks, or on one which did not. The authorities on the subject are collected in the opinion in that case.

The rule is as applicable to the Missouri River as it is to the Mississippi, whether the principle on which it rests be that the riparian owner is entitled to the addition to his land because he must bear without compensation the loss of land caused by the action of the water and any consequent expense of repair to the shore, or whether that principle be one of public policy, in that it is the interest of the community that all lands should have an owner, and most convenient that insensible additions to the shore should follow the title to the shore.

In the present case, the land in question is described in the bill as a tract of 40 acres and more. How much, if any of it, was formed between the date of the original survey in 1851 and the time of the entry in October, 1858, cannot be told; nor how much was formed between 1858 and 1866, while the patentee owned the lot; and so in regard to the time when it was owned by each successive owner. There can be, in the nature of things, no determinate record, as to time, of the steps of the changes. Human memory cannot be relied on to fix them. The very fact of the great changes in result, caused by imperceptible accretion, in the case of the Missouri River, makes even more imperative the application to that river of the law of accretion.

The bill must be held to state a fact, in stating that the land in question was formed by "imperceptible degrees," and that the process, begun in 1858 and continued until 1870, resulting in the production by accretion of the tract of 40 acres and more, "went on so slowly that it could not be observed in its progress, but at intervals of not less than three or more months it could be discerned by the eye that additions greater or less had been made to the shore." The fact, as thus stated, is that the land was formed by imperceptible degrees, within the meaning of the rule of law on the subject, and it is not capable of any construction which would result in the conclusion that the land was not formed by imperceptible degrees.

In the Roman law, it was said in the Institutes of Gaius (Book II. § 70): "Alluvion is an addition of soil to land by a river, so gradual that in short periods the change is imperceptible; or, to use a common expression, a latent addition." Justinian says (Institutes, Book II. title 1, § 20): "That is added by alluvion, which is added so gradually that no one can perceive how much is added at any one moment of time."

The same rule was introduced into English jurisprudence. Bracton says (Book II. chap. 2): "Alluvion is a latent increase, and that is said to be added by alluvion, whatever is so added by degrees that it cannot be perceived at what moment of time it is added; for although you fix your eyesight upon it for a whole day, the infirmity of sight cannot appreciate such subtle increments, as may be seen in the case of a gourd, and such like." Blackstone says (2 Com. 262): "And as to lands gained from the sea, either by alluvion, by the washing up of sand and earth, so as in time to make terra firma; or by dereliction, as when the sea shrinks back below the usual water mark; in these cases the law is held to be, that if this gain be by little and little, by small and imperceptible degrees, it shall go to the owner of the land adjoining. For de minimis non curat lex; and besides, these owners being often losers by the breaking in of the sea, or at charges to keep it out, this possible gain is therefore a reciprocal consideration for such possible charge or loss."

The whole subject was fully considered in England, in the case of Rez v. Lord Yarborough, in the King's Bench, 3 Barn. & C. 91; 8 C., in the House of Lords, 2 Bligh, N. R. 147, and 1 Dow & C. 178; S. C. sub nom. Gifford v. Lord Yarborough, in the House of Lords, 5 Bing. 163, where it was decided in effect that in cases of alternate accretion and decretion, the riparian proprietors had movable freeholds, that is, moving into the river with the soil as it was imperceptibly formed, and then again receding, when by attrition it was worn away. Lord Yarborough owned lands immediately adjoining the sea, to prevent the encroachment of which upon his lands he built sea walls on two sides. The ooze, sand and soil from the sea were gradually deposited outside of and against these walls, until, by the accretion, some 450 acres of land were made in a short time, which the crown claimed against him. But the court of King's Bench held, and the decision was affirmed by the House of Lords, that, the land being formed by the gradual and imperceptible action of the sea, Lord Yarborough, and not the crown, was entitled to it. See also Re Hull & S. R. Co. 5 Mees. & W. 327; Scrutton v. Brown, 4 Barn. & C. 485.

The doctrine of the English cases is that accretion is an addition to land coterminous with the water, which is formed so slowly that its progress cannot be perceived, and does not admit of the view that, in order to be accretion, the formation must be one not discernible by comparison at two distinct points of time.

In New Orleans v. United States, supra, the accretion was 140 feet in width, formed in 22 years. In St. Clair County v. Livingston, supra, the court says: "In the light of the authorities, alluvion may be defined as an addition to riparian land, gradually and imperceptibly made by the water to which the land is contiguous. . . . The test as to what is gradual and imperceptible in the sense of the rule is that, though the witnesses may see from time to time that progress has been made, they could not perceive it while the process was going on." To the same effect are Jones v. Johnston, 59 U. S. 18 How. 150 [15:320]; Jones v. Soulard, 65 U. S. 24 How. 41 [16:604]; Schools v. Risley, 77

The accretion set forth in the bill is alleged to have taken place between 1853 and 1870; and it is not alleged that the sudden change in the course of the river in 1877 caused any accretion. There is no suggestion in the bill that the land made by the accretion can be identified as having been previously the land of any particular person. There can be no identification unless there is a sudden change, and that is the very opposite of an imperceptible accretion.

We come now to consider the question of what passed by the description in the patent of the land as lot 4, containing 37.24 acres, according to the official plat of the survey of the land, returned to the General Land Office by the surveyor-general.

The bill alleges that in 1851, when the township was surveyed, the meander line of the river, as marked on the plat, ran along the bank of the river, and that at the time of the entry in 1858 the meander line of the left bank of the river was the same, or nearly the same, as that shown by the field-notes and on the plat made, returned and approved in 1851. On these facts it is contended for the defendant that the title to any new land which may have been made between 1851 and 1858, by accretion, did not pass to the patentee by the grant of lot 4 in the patent, but remained in the United States. The plaintiff, on the other hand, contends that the description in the patent of the land as lot 4 in effect made the river the boundary on the north, and passed the title of the United States to any new land that might have been formed before that time.

The bill states that the register's certificate and the patent described the land as lot 4 in fractional section 21, in township 75 north, range 44 west, of the fifth principal meridian, containing 37.24 acres, according to the official plat of the survey of said land, returned to the General Land Office by the surveyor-general. That plat, of which a copy is annexed to the bill and marked "Exhibit A," shows the Missouri River as the north boundary of lot 4, and that lot is marked on the plat as containing 37.24 acres.

It is a familiar rule of law that, where a plat is referred to in a deed as containing a description of land, the courses, distances and other particulars appearing upon the plat are to be as much regarded, in ascertaining the true description of the land and the intent of the parties, as if they had been expressly enumerated in the deed. Fox v. Union Sugar Refinery, 109 Mass. 292. This rule is applicable to government lands bounded by the Missouri River, as the same are surveyed and platted under the Acts of Congress; and the patent passed the title of the United States to lot 4, not only as it was at the time of the survey in 1851, but as it was at the date of the patent in 1855, so that the United States did not retain any interest in any accretion formed between the survey in 1851 and the date of the patent.

No different rule is established by the Acts of Congress which provide for the survey and sale of the public lands. The provisions found in sections 2395 et seq. of the Revised Statutes, in regard to the survey of the public lands, are re-enactments of Statutes passed in 1790, 1800, 1805, 1820 and 1832. According to these provisions, section 21 being a fractional section, because the river cut through it on its north side, the east and west side lines of lot 4 were to be run north to the river. No provision was made for running the north boundary line of lot 4, but the river formed such north boundary without the running of any line there. The Statute provided that, where the course of a navigable river rendered it impracticable to form a full township of six miles square, and in those portions of fractional townships where no opposite corresponding corners could be fixed, to which to run straight lines from established corners, the boundary lines should be ascertained by running from the established corners, due north and south or east and west lines, as the case might be, to the water-course, Indian boundary line or other external boundary of such fractional township.

In the present case, the plat was made in accordance with the Statute, showing the river as the northern boundary of fractional section 21 and of lot 4 therein; and as the patent referred to the official plat of the survey, and thus made that a part of the description of lot 4, that description made the river the boundary of lot 4 on the north.

In St. Paul & P. R. Co. v. Schurmeier, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 272 [19: 74], this court said: "Meander lines are run in surveying fractional portions of the public lands bordering upon navigable rivers, not as boundaries of the tract, but for the purpose of defining the sinuosities of the banks of the stream, and as the means of ascertaining the quantity of the land in the fraction, subject to sale, and which is to be paid for by the purchaser. In preparing the official plat from the field-notes, the meander line is represented as the border line of the stream, and shows, to a demonstration, that the water-course, and not the meander line, as actually run on the land, is the boundary."

We are therefore of opinion that the patent of June 15, 1855, which described the land conveyed as lot 4, according to the official plat of the survey, of which a copy is annexed to the bill, marked "Exhibit A," conveyed to the patentee the title to all accretion which had been formed up to that date.

The case of Jones v. Johnston, 59 U. S. 18 How. 150 [15: 820], is cited by the defendant as holding that a grantee can acquire by his deed only the land described in it by metes and bounds, and cannot acquire, by way of appurtenance, land outside of such description. But that case holds that a water line, which is a shifting line and may gradually and imperceptibly change, is just as fixed a boundary in the eye of the law as a permanent object, such as a street or a wall; and it justifies the view announced by the circuit court in its opinion, that where a water line is the boundary of a given lot, that line, no matter how it shifts, remains the boundary, and a deed describing the lot by number or name conveys the land up to such shifting line exactly as it does up to a fixed side line. See also Lamb v. Rickets, 11 Ohio, 311; Girard v. Hughes, 1 Gill & J. 249; Kraut v. Crawford, 18 Iowa, 549.

These views result in the conclusion that the side lines of lot 4 are to be extended to the river, not as the river ran at the time of the survey in 1851, but as it ran at the date of the patent in 1855, and that all the land which existed at the latter date, between the side lines so extended and between the line of the lot on the south and the river on the north, was conveyed by the patent.

All the grantors in the deeds made subsequently to the patent, including the patentee, described the land in their successive deeds as lot 4. It is contended by the defendant that this description conveys the land as it was at the date of the entry, or, at most, at the date of the patent; that as, from the allegations in the bill, it must be intended that some accretion was formed between July 14, 1856, the date of the deed by the patentee, and September 21, 1857, the date of the deed by Joseph I. Town to McCoid, the description of the land as lot 4 in the latter deed was not adequate to pass to the grantee the new land, and therefore all the land which was formed afterwards belonged to Still and Joseph I. Town, and not to McCoid; also, that if, in point of fact, there was no accretion between July, 1856, and September, 1857, there must have been accretion subsequently, while some of the successive grantees held the title, prior to 1870.

But we think that in all the deeds the accretion passed by the description of the land as lot 4. In making every deed the grantor described the land simply as lot 4, and did not, by his deed, nor does it appear that he has since or otherwise, set up any claim to any accretion. It must be held, therefore, that each grantor, by his deed, conveyed all claim not only to what was originally lot 4, but to all accretion thereto. When McCoid, in 1854, conveyed his interest in the premises by the description of lot 4, as he had taken a deed of the undivided half of the premises by the same description from Joseph I. Town, in September, 1857, and had title thereby up to the river, his north line was the river, which was gradually adding land to his land. How much was added during the time he owned his undivided half he could not tell, and he conveyed his interest to Coleman (without any reservation. The same is the case with each successive grantor, and each must be held to have passed by his deed his title to all the land up to the river, as the river was at the date of his deed. When each successive owner took his title, lot 4 was a water lot, having the rights of wharfage, landing and accretion; and although new land was formed during his ownership, yet when he conveyed the premises he conveyed them by the same description by which he had received the valuable rights referred to.

The decree of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

Mr. Justice Miller did not take any part in the decision of this case.

Repeal of statute—Texas law as to assignment by limited partnership—power of one partner to assign—property of special partner—assignment, when not void—notice—estoppel.

1. A previous statute will be held to be modified by a subsequent one, if the latter was plainly intended to cover the whole subject embraced by both, and to prescribe the only rules in respect to that subject that are to govern.
2. In Texas, a limited partnership, when it is insolvent or contemplates insolvency, may make an assignment of its property for the benefit only of such creditors as will accept their proportional share of the proceeds of the effects assigned, and discharge their claims.
3. In that State, one partner may make, in good faith, in the name of the firm, an assignment of the partnership property for the benefit of creditors.
4. An assignment of a limited partnership which covers the interest of the special partner in the firm property need not convey his individual property, which cannot be taken for the debts of the firm.
5. A deed of assignment, under the Texas Statute, is not void because the verified schedule annexed to it may embrace a debt that cannot be paid ratably with the claims of other creditors.
6. The legal existence of the special partnership did not depend upon the notice of its formation; the only effect of the failure to publish the required notice was that the partnership should be deemed general.
7. If the attaching creditors recognized and dealt with the firm as a limited partnership, they are estopped from insisting that there was no such partnership or that the notice was insufficient.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Texas to review a judgment in favor of the assignee of an insolvent firm against attaching creditors. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Justice Harlan:

The principal questions in this case arise under the laws of Texas relating to limited partnerships, and to assignments for the benefit of creditors. Before examining those laws, the facts out of which this litigation arises will be stated.

Prior to March 26, 1884, R. W. McLin and W. T. Tuffly were partners doing business at Houston, Texas, under the name of R. W. McLin & Co. On that day McLin died, his widow and two minor children surviving him. No administration was had upon his estate. At the time of his death the firm was largely indebted to various individuals and partnerships. Among the latter were Morrison, Heriman & Co., Dunham, Buckley & Co. and W. H. Lyon & Co., who are plaintiffs in error. After consultation with the agent of many of the creditors—the firms just named among the number—the surviving partner and the widow determined to form a limited partnership under the name of “W. T. Tuffly,” which should assume the debts of R. W. McLin & Co. in consideration of the release, by creditors of the old firm, of the estate of R. W. McLin from liability for their debts. From a trial balance of the accounts of the old firm which Tuffly caused to be made, it appeared that after the payment of its debts the share belonging to R. W. McLin's estate was $6,419.36. Mrs. McLin having sold and transferred to Tuffly all the goods and merchandise belonging to the old firm, they executed the following certificate of the formation of a special partnership:

“State of Texas, County of Harris:

“We, W. T. Tuffly and Mrs. Christine E. McLin, hereby certify that we have formed a copartnership, under the firm name of W. T. Tuffly, under which firm name the business of such copartnership shall be conducted.

“The general nature of the business intended to be transacted is a general retail and wholesale, if they see proper, fancy and staple dry-goods and notion establishment in the City of Houston, Texas. W. T. Tuffly is and will be the general partner of such partnership, resident of the City of Houston, Texas, and Mrs. Christine E. McLin is and will be the special partner of such partnership, whose residence is also in said City of Houston, Texas.

“The said Mrs. Christine E. McLin has contributed the sum of six thousand four hundred and nineteen and 36-100 dollars to the common stock. The said partnership is to commence on the 16th day of April, 1884, and to continue for the space of two years, to end on the 16th day of April, 1886.

“W. T. Tuffly,

“Christine E. McLin.”

This certificate was duly acknowledged by Tuffly and Mrs. McLin on the day of its date, before a notary public of the county, who certified the fact under the seal of his office. And on the same day, as appears from the official certificate of that officer, W. T. Tuffly, as the general partner named in the certificate of partnership, certified, under oath, that Christine E. McLin, the special partner therein, “has contributed to the common stock of said partnership the sum specified in said certificate, and the said sum has in good faith actually been paid in cash.” The record also contains the certificate of the county clerk, under the seal of his office, to the effect that the certificate of

A partner may transfer the whole stock in trade of the partnership bona fide in payment of the debts of the firm, especially where his copartner has absconded; and the fact that the assignment is under seal is immaterial. Deckard v. Case, 5 Watts, 22, 30 Am. Dec. 287.

One partner has no power, while his copartners are at hand, to make a general assignment without their consent. Their subsequent ratification will not cut off intervening rights; and where a copartner, while not actively objecting, refused to assent, and did not assent until after service of garnishment process on the assignee, the garnishing creditor's right is an intervening right not cut off by the ratification. Coleman v. Darling, 66 Wis. 155, 57 Am. Rep. 253.

Where one partner undertakes to sell the entire stock, if the other acquiesces or declines to enforce his equitable rights, a partnership creditor cannot attack the sale except on grounds which would avoid a sale by the partnership. Ellis v. Allen, 80 Ala. 515.

Each partner has an implied power to execute a chattel mortgage to secure a debt due from the firm. Willett v. Stringer, 17 Abb. Pr. 152; Sweetzer v. Mead, 5 Mich. 107; *Milton v. A lease by one partner of partnership realty to be binding on the other partners must be made in the prosecution of the partnership business, and where the making of the lease is in the exercise of an authority necessarily implied from the nature and object of the partnership. Mussey v. Holt, 24 N. H. 248, 55 Am. Dec. 234.

One or more members of a copartnership firm cannot execute a general assignment for the benefit of creditors, with or without preferences, without the consent of the other member or members of the firm. Welles v. March, 30 N. Y. 344; Klumpp v. Gardner, 114 N. Y. 153.

A sole surviving partner of an insolvent firm may make a general assignment of its assets for the benefit of its creditors, with preferences, and without the assent of the representatives of the deceased partner, and, in the absence of fraud, such an assignment cannot be disturbed by an unpreferred creditor. *Williams v. partnership, with the certificate of its authentication, was filed for registration in his office on the 25th day of April, 1884, and was duly recorded on the 26th day of May of the same year.

In conformity with the direction of the clerk of the county court, the following notice was published in a designated newspaper for six successive weeks from April 26, 1884: "The undersigned give notice that they have formed a copartnership under the firm name of W. T. Tuffly, having the following terms, as will appear by their executed and recorded certificate: W. T. Tuffly is the general partner; Mrs. Christine E. McLin is the special partner, and has contributed to the common stock the sum of six thousand four hundred and nineteen $6-100 dollars. W. T. Tuffly. Christine E. McLin."

On the day of the formation of this partnership, April 24, 1884, numerous creditors of R. W. McLin & Co.—among the number, Morrison, Herriman & Co., Dunham, Buckley & Co., W. H. Lyon & Co.—executed a written release in these words: "The undersigned, creditors of the late firm of R. W. McLin & Company, in consideration of the assumption of all the indebtedness of said late firm by the firm of W. T. Tuffly, composed of W. T. Tuffly, general, and Christine E. McLin, special partner, as appears by the certificates by them signed, hereby release the estate of R. W. McLin, deceased, from any and all liability on account of the obligations of said firm of R. W. McLin & Co., either by note or open account or otherwise."

W. T. Tuffly entered upon the business contemplated by the partnership between himself, as general partner, and Mrs. McLin, as special partner, and continued in its prosecution until the 23d of March, 1885, when he executed a writing of assignment, upon the construction and legal effect of which the decision of some of the questions in this case depends. It is in these words:

"State of Texas, County of Harris:

"Whereas the firm of W. T. Tuffly, composed of W. T. Tuffly, the general partner, and C. E. McLin, as special partner, finding it impossible to pay its debts as they mature, and being desirous to have a distribution of all the property of said firm and the property of the said W. T. Tuffly, partnership and individual, and wishing to avail himself of the provisions of the General Assignment Law in such cases made and provided: Now, therefore, in consideration of the premises and one dollar to me in hand paid, I, W. T. Tuffly, hereby assign and convey and deliver possession of all and singular my property and effects, of whatever name and nature, both personal and real, which I own as copartner and individually, and intend to include all property of which or in which I have any interest whatever, wherever the same may be, to Louis Tuffly, as assignee, for the purposes aforesaid, taking possession of the same and sell the same, collect and convert the same, and when so sold, collected and converted, to appropriate the same ratably or in full payment, as the case may be, of all my debts and the debts of the firm of W. T. Tuffly, said assignee to proceed under the law aforesaid. This assignment is intended for the benefit of all such of my creditors only as will consent to accept their proportional share of said property and estate so hereby conveyed and discharge me, as aforesaid, from their respective claims, said assignee to take lawful compensation for his services herein and expenses and counsel fees necessary to aid him and enable him to carry out the purposes of this conveyance.

"Schedules are hereto attached, and made as particular as I can do at this time, but in any particular where they may be incorrect or insufficient in detail they will be corrected by me.

"In witness whereof I hereunto set my hand, at Houston, this March 23d, 1885.

"W. T. Tuffly."

That deed of assignment was duly acknowledged, and to it were attached exhibits duly verified by the oath of W. T. Tuffly. These exhibits consisted of an inventory of the estate assigned and a schedule of the debts. In the latter appears a claim of Mrs. McLin of "$7,798, notes, borrowed money." Louis Tuffly, the assignee, indorsed his acceptance of the trust on the back of the deed, and gave bond as assignee, which was approved by the judge of the 11th Judicial District of Texas, March 23, 1885, on which day the deed of assignment and bond were filed for record in the proper office. The assignee took immediate possession of the stock of goods, wares and merchandise, belonging to the firm of "W. T. Tuffly," also of the furniture, shelves, counters and stationery in the store-house. The assignment was accepted by creditors (excluding Mrs. McLin) whose debts aggregated $7,116.26. It was not accepted by Morrison, Herriman & Co., Dunham, Buckley & Co. or W. H. Lyon & Co. The assignee remained in possession of the property until March 31, 1885, on which day, under attachments sued out from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Texas, by the three firms just named, against the property of W. T. Tuffly, they were levied upon and taken by Tracy, marshal of the United States for that district. The latter refused to make a levy, and did not levy, until indemnifying bonds were executed in behalf of the attaching creditors, the latter knowing, when they sued out the attachments, that the property was in the possession of the defendant in error in virtue of the above deed of assignment.

Under the order of the court the attached property was sold and the proceeds of sale were brought into court and paid into its registry.

The present suit was brought by the assignee, in one of the courts of the State of Texas, against the marshal and the sureties on his official bond, the breach alleged being the illegal and wrongful seizure of the property in question, which was alleged to be of the value of $29,972.22. It was removed, upon the petition of the defendants, into the court below, upon the ground that their defense arose under and involved the construction of the Constitution and laws of the United States. Rachrack v. Norton, 132 U. S. 337 [33: 377]. The plaintiffs in the attachment suits were, upon their motion, made parties defendant, as were also the various parties who executed indemnifying bonds to the marshal.

The result of a trial before a jury was a verdict and judgment for $17,000 against Tracy and the sureties on his official bond, and against the attaching creditors. There was also a verdict and judgment in favor of Tracy (upon the several indemnifying bonds given to him by those creditors) for the following amounts: $2,500 against Dunham, Buckley & Co. and their sureties; $2,600 against W. H. Lyon & Co. and their sureties; and $17,000 against Morrison, Herriman & Co. and their sureties. A motion for a new trial having been overruled, the defendants have brought the case here, and assign various errors of law as having been committed by the court below in its instructions to the jury, and in its refusal to grant instructions asked by the defendants.

Mr. George Hoadly, for plaintiffs in error:

By "insolvency" as used in the Bankrupt Act when applied to traders and merchants, is meant inability of a party to pay his debts, as they become due, in the ordinary course of business.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

Our attention will be first given to the Statutes of Texas, relating to limited partnerships, and to assignments for the benefit of creditors.

By the Revised Civil Statutes of that State, which went into effect on the 1st day of September, 1879, it is provided that limited partnerships for the transaction of any mercantile, mechanical, manufacturing or other business, except banking or insurance, may be formed by two or more persons, with the rights and powers, upon the terms and subject to the conditions and liabilities, prescribed in chapter 68 of that Revision.

Such partnerships may consist of one or more persons as general partners, and of one or more persons as special partners, the latter contributing in actual cash payments a specific sum to the common stock, but without liability for the debts of the partnership, beyond the fund so contributed by him or them to the capital. Art. 3443. The general partners only are authorized to transact business and sign for the partnership and to bind the same. Art. 3444. Persons desirous of forming such partnership are required to make and severally sign a certificate, containing: "1. The name or firm under which the partnership is to be conducted; 2. The general nature of the business to be transacted; 3. The names of all the general and special partners interested therein, distinguishing which are general and which are special partners, and their respective places of residence; 4. The amount of capital which each special partner shall have contributed to the common stock; 5. The period at which the partnership is to commence and the period at which it is to terminate." Art. 3445.

The certificate must be acknowledged before, and certified by, an officer authorized to take acknowledgments of conveyances of land, be filed in the office of the clerk of the county court of every county in which the partnership shall have places of business, and be recorded at large in each of such counties, in a book to be kept for that purpose, open to public inspection. With the original certificate and the evidence of its acknowledgment must be filed an affidavit of one or more of the general partners, stating that the sums specified in the certificate to have been contributed by each of the special partners to the common stock have been actually and in good faith paid in cash. Arts. 3446, 3447, 3448. "No such partnership shall be deemed to have been formed until a certificate shall have been made, acknowledged, filed and recorded, nor until an affidavit shall have been filed as above directed; and if any false statement be made in such certificate or affidavit all the persons interested in such partnership shall be liable for all the engagements thereof as general partners." Art. 3449. "The partners shall publish the terms of the partnership, when registered, for at least six weeks immediately after such registry, in such newspapers as shall be designated by the clerk in whose office such registry shall be made, and if such publication be not made the partnership shall be deemed general." Art. 3450. The affidavit of the publication, by the publisher of the newspapers in which the notice is published, filed with the clerk, is evidence of the facts therein contained. Art. 3451. "Every alteration which shall be made in the names of the partners, in the nature of the business or in the capital or shares thereof, or in any other matter specified in the original certificate, shall be deemed a dissolution of the partnership; and every such partnership which shall in any manner be carried on after any such alteration shall have been made shall be deemed a general partnership, unless renewed as a special partnership according to the provisions of the last article." Art. 3453. "The business of the partnership shall be conducted under a firm in which the names of the general partners only shall be inserted, without the addition of the word 'company,' or any other general term; and if the name of any special partner be used in such firm, with his privity, he shall be deemed a general partner." Art. 3454. "Suits in relation to the business of the partnership may be brought and conducted by and against the general partners in the same manner as if there were no special partners." Art. 3455. "No part of the sum which any special partner shall have contributed to the capital stock shall be withdrawn by him, or paid or transferred to him in the character of dividends, profits or otherwise, at any time during the continuance of the partnership; but any partner may annually receive lawful interest on the sum so contributed by him, if the payment of such interest shall not reduce the original amount of such capital; and if, after the payment of such interest, any profit shall remain to be divided he may also receive his portion of such profits." Art. 3456. "If it shall appear that by the payment of interest or profits to any special partner the original capital has been reduced, the partner receiving the same shall be bound to restore the amount necessary to make good his share of the capital with interest." Art. 3457.

Article 3460, which is the subject of much discussion by counsel, is in these words: "Every sale, assignment or transfer of any property or effects of the partnership made by such partnership when insolvent or in contemplation of insolvency; or after, or in contemplation of insolvency of any partner, with the intent of giving a preference to any creditor of such partnership or insolvent partner over other creditors of such partnership; and every judgment confessed, lien created or security given by any such partnership under the like circumstances and with like intent, shall be void as against the creditors of such partnership." Article 3461 is as follows: "In case of the insolvency or bankruptcy of the partnership, no special partner shall, under any circumstances, be allowed to claim as creditor until the claims of all other creditors of the partnership shall be satisfied."

The Revision of 1879 was adopted by an Act passed March 17, 1879, the latter Act going into effect July 24, 1879. It should be here stated that chapter 68 of the Revised Statutes is a reproduction, without material change, of the provisions of the Act of May 12, 1846, entitled "An Act for the Regulation of Limited Partnerships." Laws of Texas 1846, p. 279.

On the 24th of March, 1879, the Legislature passed an Act, entitled "An Act in Relation to Assignments for the Benefit of Creditors, and to Regulate the Same, and the Proceedings Thereunder." Gen. Laws Texas 1879, p. 57. The first section of that Act provides: "That every assignment made by an insolvent debtor, or in contemplation of insolvency, for the benefit of his creditors, shall provide, except as herein otherwise provided, for a distribution of all his real and personal estate, other than that which is by law exempt from execution, among all his creditors in proportion to their respective claims, and, however made or expressed, shall have the effect aforesaid, and shall be so construed to pass all such estate, whether specified therein or not, and every assignment shall be proved or acknowledged and certified and recorded in the same manner as is provided by law in conveyances of real estate or other property." The second section requires the debtor to annex to the assignment an inventory showing a full and true account of all his creditors, their place of residence, the sum due each, the nature and consideration of each debt, any existing judgment, mortgage or security for such debt, and the character of the debtor's estate of every kind (excepting such as the law exempts from execution) with the incumbrances thereon. To this schedule must be annexed the affidavit of the debtor that it is a just and true account to the best of his knowledge and belief.

The third section, upon which the assignment involved in this suit rests, is in these words:

"Section 3. Any debtor, desiring so to do, may make an assignment for the benefit of such of his creditors only as will consent to accept their proportional share of his estate, and discharge him from their respective claims, and in such case the benefits of the assignment shall be limited and restricted to the creditors consenting thereto; the debtor shall thereupon be and stand discharged from all further liability to such consenting creditors on account of their respective claims, and when paid they shall execute and deliver to the assignee for the debt or a release therefrom." Gen. Laws Tex. 1879, pp. 57, 58.

The ninth section declares that "all property conveyed or transferred by the assignor, previous to and in contemplation of the assignment, with the intent or design to defeat, delay or defraud creditors, or to give preference to one creditor over another, shall pass to the assignee by the assignment, notwithstanding such transfer."

The remaining sections of the Act prescribe the duties of the assignee, and regulate the administration of the trust.

The third section of the Act of 1879 was amended by an Act approved April 7, 1883, so as to provide that "such debtor shall not be discharged from liabilities to a creditor who does not receive as much as one third of the amount due and allowed in his favor as a valid claim against the estate of such debtor." Gen. Laws Texas, 1883, p. 46.

1. We have seen that article 3460 of the Revised Statutes of Texas declares void, as against the creditors of a limited partnership, every sale, assignment or transfer of any of its property or effects, made when such partnership was insolvent or contemplated insolvency, and with the intent to give a preference of some over others of its creditors. The first proposition of the defendants is that the assignment to the plaintiff of March 23, 1895—which was confessedly made by a partnership unable to meet its debts as they matured, and therefore insolvent (Cunningham v. Norton, 125 U. S. 77, 90 [31: 624, 628])—was void, as giving a preference to consenting creditors over those who did not consent. This contention is based upon the assumption that the Act of March 24, 1879, as amended by that of 1883, has no application to limited partnerships; in other words, insolvent individual debtors and insolvent general partnerships may, but insolvent limited partnerships cannot, assign their property for the benefit, primarily, of only such creditors as will consent to take their proportional share of the effects assigned, and discharge the assignor or assignors. The bare statement of this proposition suggests the inquiry, Why should the Legislature make any such discrimination against limited partnerships? The same considerations of public policy that require legislation under which an insolvent individual debtor and an insolvent general partnership may turn over their property to such creditors as will release their debts, would seem to have equal force in the case of limited partnerships that are insolvent or contemplate insolvency. Counsel for the defendants suggests that the reason for the discrimination—which, he insists, is made by the Statutes of Texas—is, that the creditors of a limited partnership trust only the liability of the general partner, and the fund contributed by the special partner, and when they lose recourse upon that fund they have recourse only to the liability of the general partner. We do not perceive, in this statement of the relations between a limited partnership and its creditors, any just ground upon which to rest the supposed discrimination.

The argument that the Statutes of 1879 and 1883 have no application to limited partnerships is based upon these propositions: that those enactments do not, in terms, repeal or modify article 3460 of the Revised Civil Statutes; that repeals by implication merely are not favored; that article 3460 constitutes a part of a title in the Revision, which relates—as did the Act of 1846, from which it was taken—exclusively to limited partnerships; and as the recent statutes do not, in terms, refer to limited partnerships, the duty of the court is to so construe the earlier and later statutes as, if possible, to give full effect to each according to the reasonable import of its words, a result, it is contended, that cannot be attained, unless the Acts of 1879 and 1883 are interpreted as not embracing assignments by limited partnerships.

We have not been referred to any decision of the Supreme Court of Texas sustaining this view, and we cannot adopt any such interpretation. The recent enactments cover, substantially, the whole subject of assignments by insolvent debtors for the benefit of their creditors. The first section of the Act of 1879 provides, as we have seen, that every assignment by an insolvent debtor, for the benefit of his creditors, shall provide for the distribution of all his real and personal estate, other than that exempted from execution, among all of his creditors, and, however made or expressed, the assignment shall have the effect, and be construed, to pass all such estate. This accomplishes all and more than was accomplished by article 3460 of the Revised Statutes. Will it be contended that this section applies only to assignments by individual debtors, and by general partnerships, and not to assignments by limited partnerships? That section, in terms, embraces "every assignment" by insolvent debtors for the benefit of their creditors. And the third section, enabling the debtor to surrender his estate for the exclusive benefit of creditors who will take their proportional share, and discharge him, embraces the case of "any debtor" who is insolvent or contemplates insolvency. The object of the Act of 1879 was to encourage insolvent debtors to make an assignment of their property for the benefit of creditors. Cunningham v. Norton, 125 U. S. 77, 81 [31: 624, 625]. It establishes a complete system for the administration of the estates of insolvent debtors conveyed for the benefit of creditors; and the mere fact that it does not, in terms, modify article 3460 of the Revised Statutes, or the section of the same purport in the Act of 1846, will not justify the courts in excepting from its operation the cases of debtors constituting a limited partnership, and including within its provisions debtors constituting a general partnership. The special object of its third section was to open the way for the discharge of insolvent persons from their debts. Creditors who would not consent to their discharge were left to stand upon their rights, and take the chance of collecting their debts in full, if the debtor got upon his feet, and was fortunate enough to acquire other property. The Statute is remedial in its character and should be liberally construed so as to give effect to the legislative will. And while it is true that repeals by implication are not favored by the courts, it is settled that, without express words of repeal, a previous statute will be held to be modified by a subsequent one, if the latter was plainly intended to cover the whole subject embraced by both, and to prescribe the only rules in respect to that subject that are to govern. United States v. Tynen, 78 U. S. 11 Wall. 88, 95 [20: 153, 155]; Cook County Nat. Bank v. United States, 107 U. S. 445, 451 [27: 537, 538]. We are of opinion, therefore, that in so far as article 3460 forbids a limited partnership, when it is insolvent, or contemplates insolvency, from making an assignment of its property for the benefit only of such creditors as will accept their proportional share of the proceeds of the effects assigned, and discharge their claims—the share received being sufficient to pay one third of the debts of the consenting creditor—it is modified by the Act of 1879, as amended by that of 1883.

2. If in error upon this point, the defendants contend that Tuffly had no authority in his own name to execute an assignment of the firm's property for the benefit of creditors; it not appearing that Mrs. McLean was absent, or incapable of acting in the matter, and the assignment being out of the common course. While there is some conflict in the adjudged cases as to the circumstances under which one partner may assign the entire effects of his firm for the benefit of creditors, the Supreme Court of Texas, in Graves v. Hall, 32 Tex. 665, sustained the authority of one partner to make, in good faith, in the name of his firm, an assignment of the partnership property for the benefit of creditors. Besides, under the law of that State, in the case of limited partnerships, the general partners only are authorized to transact business and sign for the partnership, and bind the same, and suits in relation to the business of the partnership may be brought and conducted by and against the general partners, in the same manner as if there were no special partners. Rev. Stat. Texas, §§ 3444, 3455.

3. It is also contended that the assignment does not purport to convey the firm property or the individual property of Mrs. McLin, and was, for that reason, void under the decisions in Donoho v. Fish, 58 Tex. 164, and Coffin v. Douglass, 61 Tex. 406. In those cases it was held that an assignment by partners which did not purport to pass title to all the property owned by the partnership, and by the members thereof in their separate rights, and not exempted from forced sale, could not be sustained as a valid assignment under the Act of March 24, 1879, and would interpose no obstacle to creditors collecting their debts by the usual process.

We do not assent to the defendants' interpretation of the assignment. It is inaptly expressed, but was intended to convey, and does convey, to the assignee all of the effects of the firm of "W. T. Tuffly," as well as the individual property of W. T. Tuffly. There was, it is true, proof tending to show that Mrs. McLin had individual property not exempt from execution, which was not embraced in the assignment. But the cases of Donoho v. Fish and Coffin v. Douglass were not cases of limited partnerships, and do not decide that an assignment under the Act of 1879 must embrace the individual property of a special partner. The Statute authorizing the formation of limited partnerships exempts a special partner from liability for the debts of the partnership beyond the fund contributed by him to the capital. The assignment in question covers the interest of Mrs. McLin as special partner, and need not have conveyed her individual property, which could not have been taken for the debts of the firm.

4. It is contended that an unlawful preference was given by the assignment in this: That Mrs. McLin was named in the schedule attached to the assignment as a creditor to the extent of $7,798 for borrowed money. This, it is claimed, makes the assignment void under the provision that "in case of the insolvency or bankruptcy of the partnership, no special partner shall, under any circumstances, be allowed to claim as creditor until the claims of all other creditors of the party shall be satisfied." Texas Code, art. 3463. We are of opinion that a deed of assignment, under the Texas Statute, is not void because the verified schedule annexed to it may embrace a debt that cannot be paid ratably with the claims of other creditors. In Fant v. Elsbury, 68 Tex. 1, 8, 6, it was held that an assignment which on its face preferred some creditors over others, in violation of the 18th section of the Act of 1879, was not therefore void. The court said: "By the express terms of that section the attempted preference and not the assignment is void. The estate is still administered under the Act, and is distributed among all the creditors in proportion to their respective claims, notwithstanding the attempted preference." Again: "All that is necessary is, that the assignment be made for the benefit of creditors by an insolvent, or one contemplating insolvency, and the Statute dictates everything requisite to be performed in order that the property conveyed may be distributed according to its own provisions, whether the assignor has so requested or not. Should the assignor prescribe a course to be pursued by the trustees different from that directed by the Statute, his wishes would not be respected." See also McCart v. Maddox, 68 Tex. 456, to the same general effect.

5. It is contended that the publication of the notice of the formation of the partnership between Tuffly and Mrs. McLin was so defective that the partnership did not come into legal existence as a limited partnership. The certificate of partnership contained, substantially, all that was required by article 3445. It was duly verified by the general partner and was duly registered in the proper office. The required certificate having been made, acknowledged, filed and recorded, and the required affidavit having been filed, the limited partnership was, under article 3449, to be deemed as formed. But article 3450 requires that the partners shall publish the terms of the partnership or registry in such newspaper as shall be designated by the clerk in whose office the registry shall be made, and if such publication be not made, the partnership shall be deemed general. Now, the point is made that the "terms" of the partnership were not set forth in the newspaper notice, and consequently the partnership was to be deemed general, in which event no valid assignment could be made, unless Mrs. McLin joined in it with Tuffly.

Precisely what the Statute means by the "terms" of the partnership is not clear. The notice did state that W. T. Tuffly was the general partner, and Mrs. McLin the special partner, and that the latter had contributed to the common stock the sum of $6,419.36. And it disclosed the fact that the certificate of the partnership had been executed and recorded. Without deciding whether the notice sufficiently disclosed the terms of the partnership, it is clear that the legal existence of the partnership did not depend upon the notice or its contents. The only effect of the failure to make the required publication was that "the partnership shall be deemed general." But that is immaterial in view of the finding of the jury in respect to certain facts, constituting an estoppel against the defendants, and which were submitted to them by the instructions. To these facts, and the instructions relating to them, we will next refer.

6. The jury were instructed: "If you shall find from the evidence that the limited partnership as stated and claimed by plaintiff was recognized as such in its inception by the three attaching creditors, defendants herein, and likewise during its existence was dealt with and credited as such by them, as well as sued therefor and its property attached as such after its assignment, and that its other creditors also treated and dealt with it, and accepted its assignment to plaintiff, as such, and that Mrs. McLin, named therein as the special or limited partner, and W. T. Tuffly, named therein as the general partner, and whose name constituted the firm name, always treated it as a special or limited partnership, and that Mrs. McLin loaned it money as claimed, and subsequently sued the plaintiff as its assignee therefor, then and in such case you likewise may deem the same a limited partnership and regard the assignment to plaintiff as valid.

"If you shall also find that the same was made at a time when the 'W. T. Tuffly' paper was maturing faster than it could be met in the ordinary and usual course of business, and that such assignment was made in good faith in contemplation of insolvency; and if you shall further find that the defendant Tracy, as United States marshal, seized the property so assigned, under and by virtue of the attachments of the three attachment creditors who have made themselves defendants herein, then you will find for the plaintiff herein as against defendant Tracy and the sureties on his official bond and the three firms of attaching creditors for the value of the goods as they were at the time and place of their seizure under such writs of attachment, such value to be ascertained from all the facts detailed in evidence before you.

"But if you shall otherwise find as to the facts constituting the rights of the parties as hereinbefore set forth, then and in such case your verdict will be for the defendants."

According to the bills of exceptions there was evidence tending to prove all the facts stated in these instructions. The attaching creditors, with other creditors, described them in the release executed by them at about the time of the formation of the limited partnership as constituting a limited partnership, in which W. T. Tuffly was the general, and Mrs. McLin the special, partner. If the attaching creditors thus recognized and dealt with W. T. Tuffly and Mrs. McLin as a limited partnership, they are estopped from insisting that there was no such partnership, or that the assignment was not valid as an assignment by a limited partnership. They cannot be permitted thereafter to raise the objection that the terms of the partnership were not sufficiently stated in the published notice of its formation. Those terms were fully set forth in the recorded certificate of the partnership.

But as the defendants contended that their recognition of the limited partnership was in ignorance of material facts bearing upon that question, and therefore they were not estopped, the court, at their instance, further instructed the jury:

"If the proof shows you that Mrs. McLin never in fact contributed the amount to the common stock necessary to make her a special partner, or that she afterwards altered and diminished the amount of her capital stock, and that these facts, or either of them, were unknown to the attaching creditors who are defendants herein at the time they dealt with the firm and sued W. T. Tuffly, then you are instructed that neither the recognition and dealing by them with Tuffly and Mrs. McLin as a limited partnership, nor the suing of W. T. Tuffly in ignorance of said facts, estops or precludes them, or any of the defendants, from showing that said partnership was never in fact legally formed as a limited partnership, for the reason above stated, nor from showing that it afterwards, by reason of the alteration and diminution of Mrs. McLin's capital stock, was rendered a general partnership."

This instruction gave the defendants the full benefit of all the facts upon which they could rely to defeat the estoppel referred to in the other instruction.

7. A considerable part of the discussion at the bar, and of the briefs of counsel, was directed to the question whether the court erred in refusing to give to the jury a certain charge which was prepared and submitted by the defendants. So much of that charge as constituted an argument rather than an instruction in behalf of the defendants may be omitted from this opinion. The material part of it was to the effect that if Mrs. McLin's husband had a net interest, at or about the time of his death, in the firm of R. W. McLin & Co., and that in consideration of the arrangement by W. T. Tuffly, for full settlement of all claims against the firm, and the obtaining of a release of R. W. McLin's estate from liability on account of the same, she assigned and transferred to W. T. Tuffly all the goods, wares, merchandise and other property of the firm, "and that the interest so conveyed constituted her contribution to the common stock to make her a special partner, this would not be such contribution of actual cash as the law requires or contemplates, no matter what the outward form of the transaction was, and in such case Mrs. McLin would have thereupon become a general partner and liable as such, and no advance, loan or payment thereafter made by her to W. T. Tuffly or to the firm would change her status from that of a general partner, and if you so find, then you are instructed that it was essential to the validity of the assignment that she should have joined in it and conveyed to the assignee her individual property not exempt, and that as she did not do so the assignment would be illegal and void, and that your verdict should be for the defendants."

We shall not extend this opinion by a discussion of the several propositions embodied in this instruction. It is sufficient to say: (1) The issues as to whether Mrs. McLin made the contribution to the common stock necessary to make her a special partner, or whether there was an alteration or diminution of her capital stock, were fairly submitted to the jury in the instruction that the court gave at the instance of the defendants. (2) The instruction now in question was in conflict with the first one given by the court upon its own motion; if given, it might have resulted in a verdict for the defendants, although the jury may have found that the partnership between Tuffly and Mrs. McLin was recognized by the attaching and other creditors, in its inception, and was dealt with by all of them during its existence, as a limited partnership, in which Mrs. McLin was known by them to be the special partner, and W. T. Tuffly the general partner.

Many other instructions were asked by the defendants which the court refused to grant. But it is unnecessary to discuss them, as what has been said is sufficient to indicate our opinion touching the essential issues in the case.

Upon the whole case we are of opinion that no error was committed by the court below, and the judgment must be affirmed.

WILLIAM HILL, Piff. in Err.,

v.

THE CITY OF MEMPHIS, MISSOURI.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 198-204.)

Town bonds, authority to issue—power of town, and of municipal corporations—Missouri Railroad Law—constitutional prohibition against issuing bonds by town.

1. The Missouri Act of February 9, 1857, to incorporate the Alexandria and Bloomfield Railroad Company, gives no authority to any town of the State to issue bonds for stock subscribed by it.
2. The power of a town to subscribe for stock does not of itself include the power to issue bonds of the town in payment of it.
3. Municipal corporations are established for purposes of local government, and in the absence of specific delegation of power cannot engage in any undertakings not directed immediately to the accomplishment of those purposes.
4. Section 17 of the General Railroad Law of Missouri must be construed in subordination to the Constitution of the State, which prohibits the Legislature from authorizing any town to loan its credit to any corporation unless two thirds of the qualified voters of the town, at a regular or special election, shall assent thereto.

5. The Constitution of the State controls the construction of the Missouri Act of March 24, 1868, and prevents the issue of any bonds by a town of the State without the previous assent of two thirds of its voters expressed at an election, general or special, called for that purpose.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Missouri to review a judgment in favor of the City of Memphis, defendant, in a suit to recover the amount of certain coupons of bonds purporting to have been issued by the Town of Memphis. Affirmed.

Opinion below, 28 Fed. Rep. 872.

Statement by Mr. Justice Field:

This is an action against the City of Memphis, a municipal corporation of Missouri, alleged to have been known and designated on the first day of March, 1871, as the Town of Memphis, and styled the Inhabitants of the Town of Memphis. It is brought to recover the amount of one hundred and thirty-eight coupons, each for eighty dollars, detached from certain railroad bonds purporting to have been issued by that Town. These bonds, except in their number, are in the following form:

"Number 4. Dollars 1,000.
United States of America.
Eight per cent railroad bond. Town of Memphis, County of Scotland.
Twenty years.

"Know all men by these presents that the Town of Memphis, in the County of Scotland, in the State of Missouri, acknowledges itself indebted to the Missouri, Iowa and Nebraska Railway Company, a corporation existing under and by virtue of the laws of the States of Missouri and Iowa, formed by a consolidation of the Alexandria and Nebraska City Railroad Company (formerly Alexandria and Bloomfield Railroad Company), of the State of Missouri, and the Iowa Southern Railway Company, of the State of Iowa, in the sum of one thousand dollars, which sum the said Town hereby promises to pay to the said Missouri, Iowa and Nebraska Railway Company, or bearer, at the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company in New York, on the first day of March, A. D. 1891, with interest thereon from the first day of March, 1871, at the rate of eight per cent per annum, which interest shall be payable annually, in the City of New York, on the first day of March in each year, as the same shall become due, on the presentation of the coupons hereto annexed. This bond being issued under and pursuant to an order of the board of trustees of the Town of Memphis, for subscription to the stock of the Missouri, Iowa and Ne-

"The Town of Memphis, State of Missouri, will pay to the bearer on March 1, 1885, at the Farmers' Loan & Trust Company, in New York, eighty dollars, being one year's interest on Bond No. 4, for $1,000.

"H. H. Byrne, Chairman."

The bond, on its face, purports to have been issued on the 1st day of March, 1871, by order of the board of trustees of the Town of Memphis, for subscription to the stock of the Missouri, Iowa and Nebraska Railway Company, as authorized by an Act of the General Assembly of the State of Missouri, entitled "An Act to Incorporate the Alexandria and Bloomfield Railroad Company," approved February 9, 1857. That Act provided that the company should in all things be subject to the same restrictions, and be entitled to all the privileges, rights and immunities which were granted to the North Missouri Railroad Company by its Act of Incorporation, so far as the same were applicable, as fully and completely as if they were thereby re-enacted. The fourteenth section of this latter Act is as follows:

"Sec. 14. It shall be lawful for the county court of any county, in which any part of the route of said railroad may be, to subscribe to the stock of said company, and it may invest its funds in the stock of said company, and issue the bonds of such county to raise funds to pay the stock thus subscribed, and to take proper measures to protect the interest and credit of the county. Such county court may appoint an agent to represent the county, vote for it and receive its dividends; and (any) incorporated city, town or incorporated company may subscribe to the stock to said railroad company, and appoint an agent to represent its interests, give its vote and receive its demands (dividends), and may take proper steps to guard and protect the interests in (of) such city, town or corporation."

The plaintiff also relied as authority for issuing the bonds, though not recited in them, upon section 17 of the General Railroad Law of Missouri, which went into effect August 1, 1866. That section is as follows: "Sec. 17. It shall be lawful for the county court of any county, the city council of any city, or the trustees of any incorporated town, to take stock for such county city or town in, or loan the credit thereof to, any railroad duly organized under this or any other law of the State, provided that two thirds of the qualified voters of such county, city or town, at a regular or special election to be held therein, shall assent to such subscription." (Gen. Stat. of Mo. 338.) He also relied upon the Act of March 24, 1868, entitled "An Act to Enable Counties, Cities and Incorporated Towns to Fund Their Respective Debts," which is as follows:

"Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Missouri, as follows:

"Section 1. That the various counties of this State be, and they are hereby, authorized to fund any and all debts they may owe, and for that purpose may issue bonds bearing interest at not more than ten per centum per annum, payable semi-annually, with interest coupons attached; and all counties, cities or towns in this State which have or shall hereafter subscribe for the capital stock of any railroad company may, in payment of such subscriptions, issue bonds bearing interest at not more than ten per centum per annum, payable semi-annually, with interest coupons attached. The bonds authorized by this Act shall be payable not more than twenty years from date thereof.

"This Act to take effect from and after its passage.

"Approved March 24, 1868."

Article eleven of the Constitution of Missouri, which went into effect in 1865, declares that "the General Assembly shall not authorize any county, city or town to become a stockholder in, or to loan its credit to, any company, association or corporation, unless two thirds of the qualified voters of such county, city or town, at a regular or special election to be held therefor, shall assent thereto."

The Town of Memphis was incorporated by Act of the Legislature of Missouri, November 4, 1857, but that Act was repealed on the 31st of December, 1859. An attempt was made to show that the people of the same area of country, in the following year, organized themselves into a municipality under the General Law of the State, by the name of "The Inhabitants of the Town of Memphis," and so continued until 1880; that by its trustees an election was ordered to determine whether it should subscribe $30,000 to the stock of the railroad in question; that such election was accordingly had; that the subscription was voted by a two-thirds vote; and that in pursuance of it the stock was subscribed and bonds of the Town were issued. The evidence on these points was very unsatisfactory, but, in the view taken of the want of power in the Town to issue the bonds, it becomes immaterial. The court instructed the jury that on the face of the record produced before them they must find for the defendant, as no authority was shown, on the part either of the Town or City of Memphis, to issue the bonds in question. The jury accordingly found for the defendant, upon which judgment was entered, to review which the case is brought here on writ of error. 28 Fed. Rep. 872.

Messrs. John H. Overall and F. T. Hughes, for plaintiff in error:

The power conferred upon the Town of Memphis by the railroad charter of 1851, to subscribe for its stock, necessarily implied, as incidental to the execution of said power, authority to issue municipal bonds to provide for payment of the subscription.

Mr. Justice Field delivered the opinion of the court:

The Act of the Legislature of Missouri of February 9, 1857, to incorporate the Alexandria and Bloomfield Railroad Company, gives no authority to any town of the State to issue bonds for stock subscribed by it. The fourteenth section, which is the one upon which the plaintiff relies, empowers the county court of a county in which any part of the route of a railroad may lie to subscribe to stock of the company, to invest its funds in that stock, to issue the bonds of the county to raise the funds to pay for the stock thus subscribed, to take proper steps to protect the interest and credit of the county and to appoint an agent to represent the county and receive its dividends. The same section also empowers any incorporated city or town to subscribe stock to such railroad and to appoint an agent to represent its interest, give its votes and receive its dividends, and take proper steps to guard and protect its interest. But it does not authorize the town to issue any bonds for the stock thus subscribed. It leaves the town to provide for the payment of the stock in the ordinary way in which debts contracted by a town are met, that is, by funds arising from taxation. It is well settled that the power to subscribe for stock does not of itself include the power to issue bonds of a town in payment of it. All grants of power in such cases to subscribe for stock in railways are to be construed strictly and not to be extended beyond the terms of the law. Whilst a municipal corporation, authorized to subscribe for the stock of a railroad company or to incur any other obligation, may give written evidence of such subscription or obligation, it is not thereby empowered to issue negotiable paper for the amount of indebtedness incurred by the subscription or obligation. Such paper in the hands of innocent parties for value cannot be enforced without reference to any defense on the part of the corporation, whether existing at the time or arising subsequently. Municipal corporations are established for purposes of local government, and in the absence of specific delegation of power cannot engage in any undertakings not directed immediately to the accomplishment of those purposes. Private corporations created for private purposes may contract debts in connection with their business, and issue evidences of them in such form as may best suit their convenience. The inability of municipal corporations to issue negotiable paper for their indebtedness, however incurred, unless authority for that purpose is expressly given or necessarily implied for the execution of other express powers, has been affirmed in repeated decisions of this court.

In Police Jury v. Britton, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 566 [21: 251], it was held that the trustees or representative officers of a parish, county or other local jurisdiction in Louisiana, invested with the usual powers of administration in specific matters, and the power of levying taxes to defray the necessary expenditures of the jurisdiction, had no implied authority to issue negotiable securities for the purpose of raising money or funding a previous debt. Whilst the court did not insist that express authority is in all cases required for municipal bodies to issue negotiable paper, as such power may be implied from other express powers, it held that such implications should not be encouraged or extended beyond the fair inferences to be gathered from the circumstances of each case. "It is one thing," said the court, "for county or parish trustees to have the power to incur obligations for work actually done in behalf of the county or parish, and to give proper vouchers therefor, and a totally different thing to have the power of issuing unimpeachable paper obligations which may be multiplied to an indefinite extent. If it be once conceded that the trustees or other local representatives of townships, counties and parishes have the implied power to issue coupon bonds, payable at a future day, which may be valid and binding obligations in the hands of innocent purchasers, there will be no end to the frauds that will be perpetrated."

In Nashville v. Ray, 86 U. S. 19 Wall. 468,

475 [22: 164, 166], the power of municipal bodies to issue negotiable paper for debts contracted by it was largely considered, and from the nature and the purposes of such municipalities it was held that they could not make such paper in the absence of express authorization. After speaking of municipal corporations as subordinate branches of the domestic government of a State, instituted for public purposes only, having none of the peculiar qualities or characteristics of trading corporations created for purposes of private gain, except that of acting in a corporate capacity, the court said: "Their powers are prescribed by their charters and those charters provide the means for exercising the powers; and the creation of specific means excludes others. Indebtedness may be incurred to a limited extent in carrying out the objects of the incorporation. Evidences of such indebtedness may be given to the public creditors. But they must look to and rely on the legitimate mode of raising the funds for its payment. That mode is taxation." And again (p. 477 [169]): "If in the exercise of their important trusts the power to borrow money and to issue bonds or other commercial securities is needed, the Legislature can easily confer it under the proper limitations and restraints, and with proper provisions for future repayment. Without such authority it cannot be legally exercised."

In Claiborne County v. Brooks, 111 U. S. 400, 406 [28: 470, 472], this doctrine is reiterated and reaffirmed with emphasis. Said the court: "Our opinion is, that mere political bodies, constituted as counties are, for the purpose of local policy and administration, and having the power of levying taxes to defray all public charges created, whether they are or are not formally invested with corporate capacity, have no power or authority to make and utter commercial paper of any kind, unless such power is expressly conferred upon them by law, or clearly implied from some other power expressly given, which cannot be fairly exercised without it." See also Kelley v. Milan, 127 U. S. 139 [32: 80]; Young v. Clarendon Township, 132 U. S. 340, 347 [33: 356, 358].

The same doctrine prevails in Missouri. It follows that there was no authority in the Town of Memphis to issue the bonds from which the coupons in suit are detached, under the law referred to in the bonds as authorizing them.

Nor can any authority for the issue of the bonds be derived from section 17 of the General Railroad Law of the State, which went into effect June 1, 1866. Though that section in terms empowers the trustees of an incorporated town to loan its credit to any railroad company organized under a law of the State, and the issue of its bonds to such company may be considered as a loan of its credit, it must be construed in subordination to the Constitution of the State which took effect the previous year, and prohibits the Legislature from authorizing any town to loan its credit to any corporation unless two thirds of the qualified voters of the town, at a regular or special election, shall assent thereto. No assent was ever given by the voters of the Town of Memphis to the issue in 1871 of its bonds to the Missouri, Iowa and Nebraska Railway Company, but only to its subscription to stock in that company; and no subsequent loan of credit by the issue of bonds to the company could be authorized by the Legislature except under the restrictions of the Constitution.

The same answer may be made to the claim of authority under the Act of the State of March 24, 1868, enabling counties, cities and towns to fund their debts. The Constitution of the State controls its construction and prevents the issue of any bonds by a town of the State without the previous assent of two thirds of its voters expressed at an election, general or special, called for that purpose.

Judgment affirmed.

v.

OLIVER B. STEELE, Auditor of Public Accounts of LOUISIANA.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 230-232.)

Suit against State, what is—11th Amendment, U. S. Constitution—jurisdiction.

1. Mandamus proceedings to compel the auditor of the State of Louisiana to require the sheriffs in the State to levy a tax to pay interest on state bonds, contrary to present state laws, is a suit against the State.
2. Such suit is within the prohibition of the 11th Amendment of the U. S. Constitution, forbidding jurisdiction to federal courts of a suit against a State.
3. Conceding that the present state laws, repealing the previous law in favor of bondholders, are unconstitutional and void, as impairing the obligation of the contract, that does not remove the objection that the suit is one against the State.

Argued Jan. 23, 1890. Decided March 10, 1890.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Louisiana to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the District Court for the Parish of Orleans in favor of defendant in mandamus proceedings against the Auditor of the State of Louisiana to compel him to require the state sheriffs to levy a tax to pay interest on state bonds. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. William Allen Butler and W. W. Howe, for plaintiff in error:

The Legislature levies the tax and the auditor simply acts as an arithmetician in calculating the amount which each taxpayer is to pay.

If the relator had a contract right under the Act of 1869, it could not be taken away by any provision, general or special, of the Constitution of 1879, any more than by any statute subsequent to 1869.

Mr. B. J. Sage and Alexander Porter Morse for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Bradley delivered the opinion of the court:

This case arose upon a petition filed in the Civil District Court for the Parish of Orleans in February, 1864, by the New York Guaranty and Indemnity Company, a corporation of New York, as relators, in the name of the State of Louisiana, for a mandamus to compel Allen Jumel, the auditor of public accounts of the State, to proceed under a certain Act of the Legislature, passed March 8, 1869, to require the several sheriffs throughout the State to levy a tax sufficient to pay the interest due on the state bonds authorized to be issued by said Act in aid of the Mississippi and Mexican Gulf Ship Canal Company. Jumel having been succeeded in office by Oliver B. Steele, the latter, on application of the relators, was substituted as defendant by order of the court. Steele, in answer to the petition, set up, amongst other things, that taxation is an act of sovereignty which can only be performed by the legislative department of the government; that by the present Constitution and laws of Louisiana, the defendant, as auditor, has no power to raise said tax; that the Act of 1869, referred to, has been repealed by an Act (No. 3) passed in 1874; and that by another Act (No. 55) of 1874 the respondent and all other officers of the State are prohibited from complying with the mandamus, and deprived of all power and authority to assess, collect or enforce the payment of the tax asked for by the relator, and the court is prohibited from entertaining jurisdiction of the suit.

The 7th section of the Act of 1869, which the relators seek to have executed, is as follows:

"Sec. 7. Be it further enacted, etc., That in order to provide a fund for the semi-annual payment of interest upon the bonds issued in accordance with this Act, and the final redemption of said bonds, should the Mississippi and Mexican Gulf Ship Canal Company fail to meet the obligations set forth in the fourth and sixth sections of this Act, when the deficit in interest to the year 1879 (one thousand eight hundred and seventy-nine), or the deficit and the annual instalment of thirty thousand dollars ($30,000) from that date to the final redemption of said bonds, shall have reached the sum of one hundred thousand dollars ($100,000), and as often thereafter as the said deficit shall have reached that sum, the auditor is hereby directed to determine, by accurate calculation, what rate of taxation on the total assessed value of all movable and immovable property in the State will be sufficient for the purpose of paying said deficit in interest or annual instalments, or both, and it shall also be his duty to notify the several sheriffs and tax collectors of the rate of taxation as ascertained and fixed for the purpose aforesaid; and said tax, as ascertained and fixed, is hereby levied upon all the movable and immovable property that may be assessed in this State; and it shall be the duty of the several sheriffs and tax collectors to collect said tax, and the collection of the same shall be enforced as the law provides, or may hereafter provide, for the collection of taxes."

There is no question but that, by constitutional and legislative enactment of the State of Louisiana, the above provisions of the Act of 1869 have been repealed and abrogated; and that, as set forth in the answer, the auditor has no longer, under the state laws, any power to execute them. The contention of the relators is that the Repealing Acts, and all Acts abrogating the provision made by the Act of 1869 in favor of the bondholders, are unconstitutional and void, as impairing the obligation of the contract. Conceding this to be true, the objection still remains that this is virtually a suit against the State. The auditor is sued in his official capacity, and it is sought to compel him to act in that capacity in order to raise the tax in question, contrary to subsequent legislation and the present laws of the State. The case is clearly within the principle of the decisions in Louisiana v. Jumel, 107 U. S. 711 [27: 443]; Cunningham v. Macon & Brunswick R. Co., 109 U. S. 446 [27: 992]; *Haygood v. The judgment of the Supreme Court of Louisiana is affirmed.

THE COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA.

Federal question—motion to dismiss—tax on corporate securities—14th Constitutional Amendment—intention of—Pennsylvania method of taxation—notice—due process of law—payment of tax by corporation.

1. The objection to a tax that it is taking property without due process of law, and denies to the taxpayers the equal protection of the laws, raises a question under the Constitution of the United States, and, where the question was necessarily involved in the final decision of the case, the writ of error cannot be dismissed.

2. Where the state court does not seem to have expressly passed upon the federal question, although it was clearly in the record, there is color for making the motion to dismiss.

3. An assessment of a tax of three mills upon the nominal or face value of corporate securities, instead of assessing upon the actual value, is not a discrimination which the State is not competent to make, where all corporate securities are subject to the same regulation.

4. The provision in the XIVth Amendment, that no State shall deny to any person the equal protection of the laws, does not prevent a State from adjusting its system of taxation in all proper and reasonable ways, nor compel the States to adopt an iron rule of equal taxation.

5. The XIVth Amendment intended only that equal protection and security should be given to all under like circumstances, and that no greater burdens should be laid upon one than are laid upon others in the same calling and condition.

6. The method of assessing the tax in question, on the face value of corporate securities in Pennsylvania, is not violative of the XIVth Amendment to the Constitution.

7. The process of taxation does not require the same kind of notice as is required in a suit at law. It involves no violation of due process of law when it is executed according to customary forms and established usages.

8. The corporation is not taxed for property it does not own, where, as the debtor of its bondholders, holding money in its hands for their use, namely, the interest to be paid, it is merely required to pay out of this fund the proper tax due on the security. The tax is on the bondholder, not on the corporation.

Submitted Jan. 27, 1890. Decided Mar. 10, 1890.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania to review a judgment in favor of the Commonwealth for the amount of tax on bonds of the plaintiff in error owned by residents of Pennsylvania and reversing the decision of the Court of Common Pleas of Dauphin County.

On motions to (1) revoke the allocatur and quash the writ of error, (2) dismiss the cause and (3) affirm the judgment below. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John F. Sanderson, Deputy Atty-Gen., and William S. Kirkpatrick, Atty-Gen., for plaintiff in error, in support of motion:

To give this court jurisdiction because of a denial by a state court of any right under the Constitution, it must appear that such right was claimed and that the decision was against the right.

Spies v. Illinois, 128 U. S. 181, 181 (81: 80, 91); Brooks v. Missouri, 124 U. S. 894 (81: 454); Chappell v. Bradshaw, 128 U. S. 132 (82: 369).

In this case no matter of law or fact appears of record by points submitted or by bills of exception.

Com. v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. 104 Pa. 97; Miller v. Dunlap (Pa.) 12 Cent. Rep. 184.

The motion to affirm is based upon the settled doctrine of the court that a cause ought not to be held for argument where the federal question, on which jurisdiction depends, was manifestly decided right.

Messrs. M. E. Olmstead and Wayne Mac Veagh filed a brief for W. W. Jennings.

Mr. M. E. Olmstead filed a brief for Delaware Division Canal Co. and others.

Mr. Justice Bradley delivered the opinion of the court:

Motion is made in this case to revoke the allocatur of the writ of error, and to quash the writ, and, in the alternative, to affirm the judgment. The first motion is based on the assumption that the writ was improperly allowed by the judge, and questions the propriety of his action. It is probable that the counsel who makes the motion does not intend it in that sense, but is merely unfamiliar with the practice of this court, by which the ordinary proceeding to vacate a writ of error is a motion to dismiss it.

In the present case we think that the writ was demandable, and cannot be dismissed, as will more fully appear from the following statement:

By the law of Pennsylvania all moneyed securities are subject to an annual state tax of three mills on the dollar of their actual value, except bonds and other securities issued by corporations, which are taxed at three mills on the dollar of the nominal or par value. If the treasurer of a corporation fails to make return of its loans, as required by law, the auditor-general makes out and files an account against the company, charging it with the tax supposed to be due. This account, if approved by the state treasurer, is served upon the corporation, which must pay the tax within a specified time, or show good cause to the contrary. If it objects to the tax, it is authorized, in common with all others who are dissatisfied with the auditor's stated accounts, to appeal to the court of common pleas of the county where the seat of government is (at present Dauphin County), which appeal is served on the auditor-general, and by him transmitted to the clerk of said court, to be entered of record, subject to like proceedings as in common suits. A declaration is then filed on the stated account in behalf of the State, and the cause is regularly tried.

In the present case, on failure of the Company (The Bell's Gap Railroad Company) to make return except under protest, the auditor-general made out an account against it, containing the following charge:

"Nominal value of scrip, bonds and certificates of indebtedness owned by residents of Pennsylvania, $539,000—tax three mills $1,617 00"

The Company thereupon tendered an appeal, which was filed in the Court of Common Pleas of Dauphin County, a declaration was filed on the part of the State, and the cause was tried by the court, a jury being waived.

The appeal filed by the corporation (which was the basis of the proceedings in the court) contained eight grounds of objection to the tax. Most of these objections were founded upon the Constitution or laws of Pennsylvania, and need not be noticed here. The second objection, which refers to the Constitution of the United States, was as follows, to wit:

"II. The report of the Company's treasurer was made under protest and does not constitute an assessment, and the tax sought to be imposed on so much of the Company's loans as the Commonwealth claims to be held by residents of Pennsylvania for their nominal or face value, which varies from the market value on account of the differing rates of interest, etc., is illegal, and the said tax cannot be lawfully deducted by the Company's treasurer from the interest payable to the holders of said loans, and the Commonwealth's demands contravene section one of the XIVth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, for the following reasons:"

Amongst the reasons then assigned are:

1. That the nominal value of the bonds is not their real value.

2. That the owners of the bonds have no notice, and no opportunity of being heard.

3. That the Company is taxed for property it does not own.

4. That the deduction of the tax from the interest payable to the bondholders is taking their property without due process of law, and denies to them the equal protection of the laws, since all other personal property in the State is taxed at its actual value, and upon notice to the owners.

The seventh objection is as follows: "VII. The tax is void as impairing the Company's obligation to its creditors."

On the trial of the cause the State offered in evidence the stated account, and the plaintiff in error offered the appeal and specification of objections and an affidavit of its treasurer. The court of common pleas decided in favor of the Company, but its decision was reversed on writ of error by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, and judgment was rendered in favor of the Commonwealth for $666, being the amount of tax on bonds shown to have been owned by residents of Pennsylvania.

It cannot be denied that the plaintiff in error, in its appeal and specification of objections to the tax, did raise a question under the Constitution of the United States. That question remained in the record as the foundation of the proceedings in the court, and, whether adverted to or not, was necessarily involved in the final decision of the case. We think it clear, therefore, that the writ of error cannot be dismissed. Our only doubt is whether, under our Rules, there was sufficient color for the motion to dismiss to justify us in considering the motion to affirm. As, however, the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, in its opinion, does not seem to have expressly passed upon the federal question, although it was clearly in the record, we may consider that there was color for making the motion to dismiss.

On the merits we have no serious doubt.

1. As to the assessment of the tax of three mills upon the nominal or face value of the bonds, instead of assessing it upon the actual value. This might have been subject to question under the state laws; but the state courts have upheld the assessment as valid. We are to accept it, therefore, as part of the state system of taxation, authorized by its Constitution and laws. Then how does it violate any provision of the Constitution of the United States? It is contended that it violates the 1st section of the XIVth Amendment, which forbids a State to withhold from any person the equal protection of the laws. We do not perceive that the assessment in question transgresses this provision. There is no unjust discrimination against any persons or corporations. The presumption is that corporate securities are worth their face value. Besides, the person that holds them is not affected by the tax unless he receives his interest from which the tax is deducted. So long as the interest is paid the security has to him full productive value; when it is not paid he pays no tax.

But, be this as it may, the law does not make any discrimination in this regard which the State is not competent to make. All corporate securities are subject to the same regulation. The provision in the XIVth Amendment, that no State shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws, was not intended to prevent a State from adjusting its system of taxation in all proper and reasonable ways. It may, if it chooses, exempt certain classes of property from any taxation at all, such as churches, libraries and the property of charitable institutions. It may impose different specific taxes upon different trades and professions, and may vary the rates of excise upon various products; it may tax real estate and personal property in a different manner; it may tax visible property only, and not tax securities for payment of money; it may allow deductions for indebtedness, or not allow them. All such regulations, and those of like character, so long as they proceed within reasonable limits and general usage, are within the discretion of the State Legislature, or the people of the State in framing their Constitution. But clear and hostile discriminations against particular persons and classes, especially such as are of an unusual character, unknown to the practice of our governments, might be obnoxious to the constitutional prohibition. It would, however, be impracticable and unwise to attempt to lay down any general rule or definition on the subject, that would include all cases. They must be decided as they arise. We think that we are safe in saying that the XIVth Amendment was not intended to compel the States to adopt an iron rule of equal taxation. If that were its proper construction, it would not only supersede all those constitutional provisions and laws of some of the States, whose object is to secure equality of taxation, and which are usually accompanied with qualifications deemed material; but it would render nugatory those discriminations which the best interests of society require, which are necessary for the encouragement of needed and useful industries, and the discouragement of intemperance and vice, and which every State, in one form or another, deems it expedient to adopt.

The general purpose and scope of the XIVth Amendment, and the general qualifications necessary to be applied to it, are well stated in Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 31 [28: 923, 924]. Mr. Justice Field, in delivering the opinion of the court, there said: "The XIVth Amendment, in declaring that no 'State shall deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws,' undoubtedly intended not only that there should be no arbitrary deprivation of life or liberty, or arbitrary spoliation of property, but that equal protection and security should be given to all under like circumstances in the enjoyment of their personal and civil rights; that all persons should be equally entitled to pursue their happiness and acquire and enjoy property; that they should have like access to the courts of the country for the protection of their persons and their property, the prevention and redress of wrongs and the enforcement of contracts; that no impediment should be interposed to the pursuits of anyone except as applied to the same pursuits by others under like circumstances; that no greater burdens should be laid upon one than are laid upon others in the same calling and condition; and that in the administration of criminal justice no different or higher punishment should be imposed upon one than such as is prescribed to all for like offenses. But neither the Amendment—broad and comprehensive as it is—nor any other amendment, was designed to interfere with the power of the State, sometimes called the police power, to prescribe regulations to promote the health, peace, morals, education and good order of the people, and to legislate so as to increase the industries of the State, develop its resources and add to its wealth and prosperity."

With due regard to these considerations, we are clearly of opinion that the method of assessing the tax in question, on the face value of corporate securities in Pennsylvania, is not violative of the XIVth Amendment to the Constitution.

2. As to want of notice to the owners of the bonds. What notice could they have which the law does not give them? They know that their bonds are to be assessed at their face value, and that a tax of three mills on the dollar of that value will be imposed; and that they will only be required to pay this tax when, and as, they receive the interest. If the State may assess the tax upon the face value of the bonds, notice in pais is not necessary. We think that there is nothing in this objection which shows any infraction of the Federal Constitution. It is urged that it is a taking of the bondholder's property without due process of law. We must confess that we cannot see it in this light. The process of taxation does not require the same kind of notice as is required in a suit at law, or even in proceedings for taking private property under the power of eminent domain. It involves no violation of due process of law when it is executed according to customary forms and established usages, or in subordination to the principles which underlie them. We see nothing in the process of taxation complained of which is obnoxious to constitutional objection on this score. Stockholders in the national banks are taxed in this way, and the method has been sustained by the express decision of this court. National Bank v. Kentucky, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 353 [19: 701].

3. That the corporation is taxed for property it does not own. This objection is not true in point of fact. The corporation, as the debtor of its bondholders, holding money in its hands for their use, namely, the interest to be paid, is merely required to pay to the Commonwealth out of this fund the proper tax due on the security. The tax is on the bondholder, not on the corporation. This plan is adopted as a matter of convenience, and as a secure method of collecting the tax. That is all. It injures no party. It certainly does not infringe the Constitution of the United States by making one party pay the debts and support the just burdens of another party, as is implied in the objection.

The other objections are embraced in those which we have already considered, and need no further notice.

We would say, in conclusion, that there are several decisions of this court which virtually dispose of most of the questions involved in the present case. We refer particularly to National Bank v. Kentucky, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 353 [19: 701]; Dollar Savings Bank v. United States, 86 U. S. 19 Wall. 227, 240 [22: 80, 83]; King v. United States, 99 U. S. 229 [25: 373]; Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. 111 U. S. 701 [28: 569]; Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97 [24: 616]; Walston v. Nevins, 128 U. S. 578, 581 [32: 544].

The motion to dismiss the writ of error is denied, and the judgment of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania is affirmed.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York to review a judgment in favor of plaintiffs for the amount due for a quantity of varnish sold and delivered to defendant. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Justice Lamar:

This action was commenced in the Marine Court of the City of New York, to recover $1,687.51, alleged to be due plaintiffs, for a quantity of varnish, etc., sold and delivered to defendants between November 9, 1881, and May 15, 1882. It was duly removed into the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York, on the petition of the defendants, the plaintiffs being citizens of Michigan, the defendants citizens of New York, and the amount sought to be recovered, exclusive of costs, exceeding $500.

The record appears to contain substantially all the evidence. It shows the material facts to be as follows:

On the 24th of June, 1881, a contract was made between the parties in these terms:

"Brooklyn, N. Y., June 24th, 1881.

"We hereby agree to deliver to Messrs. J. H. De Witt & Son, at their factory in Brooklyn, in N. Y., eighty (80) barrels of japan and twenty (20) barrels of varnish within one year from date, these goods to be exactly the same quality as we make for the De Witt Wire Cloth Company of New York, and as per sample bbls. delivered.

"Turpentine copal varnish, at 65c. per gallon.

"Turpentine japan dryer, at 55c. per gallon.

"Each shipment to consist of eight (8) barrels japan and two (2) barrels varnish, to be made once a month, commencing September next.

"Terms on each shipment, six months, without interest.

"Berry Brothers,

"per A. Hooper, Manager.

"We hereby accept the above proposition.

"J. H. De Witt & Son.

"Brooklyn, June 24th, '81."

At the time stipulated, the defendants in error, Berry Bros., delivered the proper number of barrels of varnish and of dryer, but the plaintiffs in error claim that the dryer did not conform to the contract, in quality. They not only resist the payment of a balance due of the purchase money, but also present a cross-demand for $17,500 for alleged breach of contract. The precise point of controversy is as to the relative quantities of turpentine and of benzine in the dryer. It appears that plaintiffs in error were manufacturers of wire gauze for screens, etc., and bought the dryer to use in their factory, and that the plaintiffs in error knew of these facts. The japan dryer and the copal varnish were used to mix with the paint that was put on wire goods. The process was that the wire cloth ran through a trough filled with the paint so mixed, and passed between the felt rollers into a drying chamber heated by steam to 140 degrees. At the farther end of such chamber the cloth passed into the cold air. The rolls then stood four or five days, after which they were rolled into tight rolls, wrapped, and put into the storehouse. The plaintiffs in error allege that the paint and varnish, in this case, were adulterated by the excessive use of benzine in their manufacture; and that for that reason the paint did not adhere to the wire cloth, but scaled off.

Plaintiffs in error commenced using the dryer and varnish in question about their business in August, 1881; but the goods prepared with them did not, in the ordinary course of business, reach the consumers until May, 1882. It was then that plaintiffs in error first discovered the defect—the composition of the goods being unknown to them, and only discoverable either by a chemical analysis or by the results of use. In the fall of 1882 large quantities of the wire cloth were returned because the paint came off; and the balance that plaintiffs in error had on hand unsold proved to be unsalable for the same reason, and had to be cleaned off and repainted; there being some 3,500,000 square feet damaged one-half cent per square foot, or $17,500.

Plaintiffs in error further claim that, under the contract, the defendants in error were obliged to furnish articles of a grade that commercially answered to the description of "turpentine copal varnish," and "turpentine japan dryer;" and that such grades were commercially known. That the articles so known contain either very little or no benzine, and are made of turpentine; whereas, if made of benzine, without turpentine, they are called in trade a "benzine copal varnish," and a "benzine japan dryer;" and if they contain half benzine and half turpentine, they are called a "turpentine and benzine japan dryer," or a "turpentine and copal varnish." They claim further that the defendants in error had fraudulently substituted inferior goods for those sold; that whereas, by the description in the bill of sale, they were to have received goods with little or no benzine, they were furnished with goods which, on analysis, were shown to have 38 parts of benzine to 64 of turpentine, and were known to the trade as "benzine goods." The defendants in error, on the other hand, maintain that the contract did not call for goods known to the trade as "commercial turpentine" goods, for two reasons: (1) by the very terms of the contract the quality was agreed to be tested by a different standard, which was, that the goods sold were to be "exactly the same quality as we make for the De Witt Wire Cloth Company of New York, and as per sample bbls. delivered;" and (2) because there was no such standard of uniform manufacture and terminology in the trade, as to these goods, as was claimed by the plaintiffs in error, they themselves having discovered that their process was bad, and afterwards changed it.

It appears further from the record that in a previous contract between the defendants in error and the De Witt Wire Cloth Company—not the plaintiffs in error—a stipulation had been inserted that the goods should be "the best of their kind, and equal to those formerly furnished." Plaintiffs in error maintained that this contract of quality is, by reference, a part of the contract. This view the court rejected.

In the course of the trial there were several exceptions taken to the introduction, or the refusal to permit the introduction, of evidence. The plaintiffs in error also made several exceptions to the charges as given, and to the refusals to charge as requested.

The trial resulted in a verdict and judgment for the defendants in error for the sum of $2,177.57, being the full amount of the demand and costs; to review which judgment this writ of error was sued out. The plaintiffs in error claim by their assignments that the court in the trial below committed sixteen different errors.

Messrs. Henry Edwin Tremain and Mason W. Tyler, for plaintiff in error:

Under the contract in this case, defendants in error were bound to deliver articles that answered to the commercial description, "turpentine copal varnish" and "turpentine japan dryer."

Where goods are sold by sample, and where the contract requires that they shall be of the same quality as other specified goods, the obligation of the seller is discharged if the goods are of the agreed quality and correspond with the sample.

Parol evidence is inadmissible to vary a written contract or to add a warranty not contained in it.

Mumford v. McPherson, 1 Johns. 414.

If the affidavits of De Witt & Son, that on the second and third days of the trial they learned of matters which protected them against having their case tried before the jury, were true, the law will not tolerate that a party may go on for ten days with the trial, take his chance of the result and, when beaten, for the first time complain.

Fox v. Hazelton, 10 Pick. 275; Gale v. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. Co. 13 Hun, 1; Valiente v. Bryan, 66 How. 302.

Mr. Justice Lamar delivered the opinion of the court:

It is not necessary to examine the sixteen assignments of error in detail. When analyzed they are resolved into one or other of these three propositions:

(1) That under a contract for the future delivery of goods, such as was made in this case, and by the terms of this agreement, it was still necessary that the goods delivered should conform to a common commercial standard, and should be adapted to the known uses of the vendee, notwithstanding the express terms of the written contract.

(2) That the court erred in refusing to treat the previous contract between Berry Brothers and the De Witt Wire Cloth Company as a part of the contract in controversy, by reference.

(3) That the court erred in excluding the antecedent parol colloquium offered as a part of the contract, or as competent to explain and interpret it.

We will consider these general propositions in the order stated. First. The contract between the parties was in writing and contained an express warranty as to the quality. It says: "These goods [are] to be exactly the same quality as we make for the De Witt Wire Cloth Company of New York, and as per sample bbls. delivered." Now there is good authority for the proposition that if the contract of sale is in writing and contains no warranty, parol evidence is not admissible to add a warranty. Van Ostrand v. Reed, 1 Wend. 424; Lamb v. Crafts, 12 Met. 353; Dean v. Mason, 4 Conn. 432; Reed v. Wood, 9 Vt. 285; 1 Parsons on Cont. (6th ed.) 589.

If it be true that the failure of a vendee to exact a warranty when he takes a written contract precludes him from showing a warranty by parol, a multo fortiori when his written contract contains a warranty on the identical question, and one in its terms inconsistent with the one claimed.

In the case of The Reeside, 2 Sumn. 567, Mr. Justice Story said: "I apprehend that it never can be proper to resort to any usage or custom to control or vary the positive stipulations in a written contract, and a fortiori not in order to contradict them. An express contract of the parties is always admissible to supersede, or vary or control a usage or custom; for the latter may always be waived at the will of the parties. But a written and express contract cannot be controlled or varied or contradicted by a usage or custom; for that would not only be to admit parol evidence to control, vary or contradict written contracts, but it would be to allow mere presumptions and implications, properly arising in the absence of any positive expressions of intention, to control, vary or contradict the most formal and deliberate written declarations of the parties." The principle is, that while parol evidence is sometimes admissible to explain such terms in the contract as are doubtful, it is not admissible to contradict what is plain, or to add new terms. Thus, where a certain written contract was for "prime singed bacon," evidence offered to prove that by the usage of the trade a certain latitude of deterioration called "average taint" was allowed to subsist before the bacon ceased to answer that description, was held to be inadmissible. 1 Greenleaf on Evidence, sec. 292, note 3; Yates v. Pyn, 6 Taunt. 446; Barnard v. Kellogg, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 883 [19: 987]; Bloven v. New England Screw Co. 64 U. S. 28 How. 420 [16: 510]; Oelricks v. Ford, 64 U. S. 28 How. 49 [16: 534].

There are numerous well considered cases that an express warranty of quality excludes any implied warranty that the articles sold were merchantable or fit for their intended use. International Pavement Co. v. Smith, 17 Mo. App. 264; Johnson v. Latimer, 71 Ga. 470; Cosgrove v. Bennett, 32 Minn. 371; Shepherd v. Gilroy, 46 Iowa, 193; McGraw v. Fletcher, 35 Mich. 104.

Nor is there any conflict between these authorities and others like them on the one hand, and those on the other, which hold that goods sold by a manufacturer, in the absence of an express contract, are impliedly warranted as merchantable, or as suited to the known purpose of the buyer. Dushane v. Benedict, 120 U. S. 630, 636 [30: 810], and cases there cited. It is the existence of the express warranty, or its absence, which determines the question. In the case at bar there was such an express warranty of quality in terms. Not only that, but there was a sample delivered and accepted, as such. The law is well settled that, under such circumstances, implied warranties do not exist. Mumford v. McPherson, 1 Johns. 414; Sands v. Taylor, 5 Johns. 395; Beck v. Sheldon, 48 N. Y. 365; Parkinson v. Lee, 2 East, 314. In Jones v. Just, L. R. 3 Q. B. 197, quoted by Mr. Benjamin in his work on Sales, § 657, Mellor, J., delivering the opinion of the court, laid down, among others, the following rule: "Where a known described and defined article is ordered of a manufacturer, although it is stated to be required by the purchaser for a particular purpose, still, if the known defined and described thing be actually supplied, there is no warranty that it shall answer the particular purpose intended by the buyer." Chanter v. Hopkins, 4 Mees. & W. 399; Ollivant v. Bayley, 5 Q. B. 288.

Examining now the express terms of the contract, in order to see what they are, and whether they fairly import the warranty claimed by the plaintiffs in error, we find them to be as follows:

"These goods to be exactly the same quality as we make for the De Witt Wire Cloth Company of New York, and as per sample bbls. delivered. Turpentine copal varnish, at 65 cts. per gallon. Turpentine japan dryer, at 55 cts. per gallon."

There are here three items of description claimed by the plaintiffs in error: (1) That they should be the same as those made for the De Witt Wire Cloth Company; and there is no evidence whatever that they were not the same, nor is a difference in this respect any part of their claim. (2) That they should conform to a sample delivered; and here again is an entire absence of testimony to show any difference, and a want of any such claim by the plaintiffs in error. The whole question, therefore, as to this branch of the case turns upon the effect of the use of the expressions "Turpentine copal varnish, at 65 cts. per gallon. Turpentine japan dryer, at 55 cts. per gallon." The plaintiffs in error maintain that the defendants in error thereby engaged to deliver articles known to the trade by those names, and of a certain standard of quality. We do not so construe the writing. All the terms descriptive of the quality are found in the sentence preceding. These sentences are nothing but stipulations in respect to the prices to be paid, and were not intended to fix quality.

There is this further to be said. We have carefully examined the record in this case, and are impressed with a conviction that, whatever the fact may be, the evidence adduced fails to show any such general usage of trade in respect to the standard of these preparations, or in respect to their designations, as is claimed by the plaintiffs in error. Their position is, that the words "turpentine copal varnish," etc., if considered at all as a stipulation as to quality, would mean a varnish in which the liquid elements were to be so composed that at least 50 per cent of them should be turpentine. In Carter v. Crick, 4 Hurlst. & N. 417, Pollock, C. B., observed that "if a party seeks to make out that certain words used in a contract have a different acceptation from their ordinary sense, either for the purposes of trade, or within a certain market, or in a particular country, he must prove it; not by calling witnesses, some of whom will say it is one way and some the other, and then leaving it to the jury to say which they believe; but by clear, distinct and irresistible evidence."

We pass now to the second proposition of the plaintiffs in error, that the court erred in refusing to charge the jury that if the goods delivered to them as turpentine were not the best of their kind, as guaranteed by reference to the contract with the De Witt Wire Cloth Company, they should find for them. The answer to the proposition seems obvious; it is but an effort, in a different shape, to vary the written contract made. The terms of that contract were not "These goods to be exactly the same quality as we have heretofore contracted to make for the De Witt Wire Cloth Company and as per sample bbls. delivered;" but were, "These goods to be exactly the same quality as we make for the De Witt Wire Cloth Company," etc. There is here no reference whatever, either express or implied, to the contract with the De Witt Wire Cloth Company; what goods were in fact made, not what were agreed to be made, was the standard. To fix that standard of goods produced, and not goods contracted for, yet more firmly as the measure of quality, a subsequent clause was written—"and as per sample bbls. delivered." It is clear that, under the contract, if the goods produced for the De Witt Wire Cloth Company varied from the samples delivered, the plaintiffs in error had the right to insist on the test by the sample. It is manifest that the terms of the other contract were not present to the minds of the parties to this contract. The plaintiffs in error fixed the terms of their warranty, and we cannot import other terms into the writing.

The third proposition, that the court erred in excluding evidence of an antecedent conversation between the salesman and one of the plaintiffs in error, is disposed of by the well-settled rule, that "when parties have deliberately put their engagements into writing, in such terms as import a legal obligation, without any uncertainty as to the object or extent of such engagement, it is conclusively presumed that the whole engagement of the parties, and the extent and manner of their undertaking, was reduced to writing; and all oral testimony of a previous colloquium between the parties, . . . as it would tend in many instances to substitute a new and different contract for the one which was really agreed upon, to the prejudice, possibly, of one of the parties, is rejected." 1 Greenleaf, Ev. sec. 275, and authorities cited; White v. National Bank, 103 U. S. 658 [26: 250]; Metcalf v. Williams, 104 U. S. 98 [23: 665]; Martin v. Cole, 104 U. S. 90 [23: 647].

On the whole case we find no material error, and the judgment of the court below is affirmed.

THE CHICAGO, MILWAUKEE AND ST. PAUL RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

THE THIRD NATIONAL BANK OF CHICAGO.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 276-280.)

Railroad company, when liable for debts of another company whose property has been leased to it—property of corporation, liable for its debts—trust fund—cross-bill—equitable remedies—amendments at hearing.

1. Where one railroad company leased and surrendered all its property to another railroad company for the purpose of procuring money to pay liens thereon, and the lessee covenanted in effect to pay and discharge all judgment liens founded on existing claims and to return the demised property to the lessor, at the end of the lease, and the lessee also received proceeds of the bonds secured by a trust deed on the property, the owner of judgments against the lessor is entitled to a decree requiring the lessee to pay the amount of such judgments.
2. A corporation in debt cannot transfer its entire property by lease, so as to prevent the application of the property to the satisfaction of its debts.
3. The properties of a corporation constitute a trust fund for the payment of its debts; and, when there is a misappropriation of the funds of a corporation, equity, on behalf of the creditors of such corporation, will follow the funds so diverted.
4. Where, in a court of equity, an apparent legal burden on property is challenged, the court has jurisdiction of a cross-bill to enforce, by its own procedure, such burden.
5. A court of equity which denies legal remedies may enforce equitable remedies for the same debt; and an application for the latter is not foreign to a bill for the former.
6. Amendment to a cross-bill may be allowed at the hearing simply to enable the cross-complainant to avail itself of what has been alleged and proved by the original complainants, although thereby is presented a new and independent basis of relief.

deem; and in case of failure to pay said money that a receiver be appointed of the property to pay said moneys out of the earnings of the road. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Opinion below, 26 Fed. Rep. 820.

Mr. E. Walker, for appellant:

A cross-bill is a matter of defense, and is confined to the matters in litigation in the original suit.

Story, Eq. Pl. §§ 889, 898, 681; Young v. Colt, 2 Blatchf. 378; Gallatian v. Cunningham, 8 Cow. 361; Walden v. Bodley, 39 U. S. 14 Pet. 156 (10: 398); Slason v. Wright, 14 Vt. 208; Cross v. DeValle, 68 U. S. 1 Wall. 5 (17: 516).

It can be sustained only on matters growing out of the original bill.

Thompson v. Shoemaker, 68 Ill. 256; Lund v. Skanes Bank, 96 Ill. 181; Gage v. Mayer, 5 West. Rep. 496, 117 Ill. 682; Daniel v. Morrison, 6 Dana, 186; Crabtree v. Banks, 1 Met. (Ky.) 482; Rutland v. Paige, 24 Vt. 181; Ayres v. Carver, 58 U. S. 17 How. 591 (15: 179); Pindall v. Treco, 30 Ark. 249; Eoe v. Louis, 91 Ind. 470; *Hall Lumber Co. v. The property seized was the entire property of the Chicago and Pacific Road. It cannot be said therefore that if the sale had taken place, the result would have been to destroy utterly the value of the property,

Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court:

In 1865, by a special Act of the Legislature of Illinois, the Chicago and Pacific Railroad Company was organized as a body corporate, with authority to construct and operate a railroad from the City of Chicago to the Mississippi River, at a point near Savanna, both points being within the State of Illinois. In 1872 it executed a trust deed upon its property to secure $3,000,000 of bonds. On March 9, 1876, judgment was rendered against it in the United States Circuit Court for the Northern District of Illinois for the sum of $3,499.73, in favor of Horace Tabor. Execution was first issued upon this judgment September 9, 1876. On May 27, 1876, suit was brought to foreclose the deed of trust. After a decree in such foreclosure, and on May 1, 1879, the property was sold on an order of sale, for $916,100, to John I. Blair and others. Subsequent to April 2, 1880, but within the year prescribed by statute, the Chicago and Pacific Railroad Company redeemed the property from the sale under the foreclosure decree, the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company having advanced the money therefor. On the 19th of February, 1880, which was after the foreclosure sale but before the redemption, the Third National Bank of Chicago brought suit in the same court against the Chicago and Pacific Railroad Company, upon notes given by the company to the Bank for money loaned. On the 3d of April, 1882, judgment was rendered in that suit, in favor of the Bank, for $36,165.36; and on the 15th of July, of the same year, execution was issued thereon. On the 25th day of June, 1881, which was after the redemption from the foreclosure sale, the property of the Chicago and Pacific Railroad Company was sold, under an execution issued upon the Tabor judgment, to Albert Keep, to whom the certificate of sale was executed. The property so sold was described as follows:

"All and singular the railroad of the Chicago and Pacific Railroad Company, as the same is now surveyed, laid out, constructed and located in the Counties of Cook, DuPage, Kane, DeKalb, Ogle and Carroll, in the State of Illinois, including the road-bed, stations or station-houses, depot grounds, rails, ties, fences, bridges, viaducts and culverts, and all other buildings and structures, as well as engine-houses, machine and other shops used in connection with said railroad."

On June 4, 1882, Albert Keep, the purchaser, assigned the certificate of sale to Alexander Mitchell, the president of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company. The judgment debtor, not redeeming within the year, the Bank, as judgment creditor, on September 25, 1882, redeemed from the execution sale by the payment to the marshal of the necessary sum, $5,304.20, and this redemption money was paid to and received by Alexander Mitchell. The Statute of Illinois, with reference to such redemptions, provides as follows:

"Sec. 20. If such redemption is not made, any decree or judgment creditor, his executors, administrators or assigns, may, after the expiration of twelve months and within fifteen months after the sale, redeem the premises in the following manner: Such creditor, his executors, administrators or assigns, may sue out an execution upon his judgment or decree, and place it in the hands of the sheriff or other proper officer to execute the same, who shall indorse upon the back thereof a levy of the premises desired to be redeemed; and the person desiring to make such redemption shall pay to such officer the amount for which the premises to be redeemed were sold, with interest thereon at the rate of eight per centum per annum from the date of the sale, for the use of the purchaser of such premises, his executors, administrators or assigns; whereupon such officer shall make and file in the office of the recorder of the county in which the premises are situated a certificate of such redemption, and shall advertise and offer the premises for sale under said execution as in other cases of sale on execution." Starr & Curtiss, Ill. Statutes, chap. 77.

The proceedings had were in conformity with this section, and the marshal advertised the sale accordingly, on October 24, 1882. As heretofore stated, the redemption by the Chicago and Pacific Railroad Company was with money advanced by the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company. This advancement was made in pursuance of these proceedings. On April 1, 1880, which was subsequent to the commencement of the suit by the Bank, resolutions were passed by the stockholders of the Chicago and Pacific Railroad Company, authorizing the leasing of its property and franchises to the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company, and also the execution of a new mortgage; and on the next day, the first-named company executed its lease to the last-named Company, and the two companies executed a joint trust deed upon the same property to secure the payment of $3,000,000 of bonds, payable in thirty years. By the lease, which was for 999 years, the lessor (which will for convenience be called the Pacific Company) not only disabled itself from performing the functions and discharging the duties of its incorporation, but also transferred all its property and franchises to the lessee (hereafter called the Milwaukee Company). The consideration of the lease was $1, and the performance of the covenants of the lease by the lessee. The Pacific Company was largely indebted outside of the amount secured by the trust deed; it therefore surrendered to the Milwaukee Company all the means it had of discharging its indebtedness. Among the recitals in the lease are these:

"Whereas certain other parties to whom the said party of the second part was so as aforesaid indebted have prosecuted their several demands in the Superior and Circuit Courts of Cook County, and other courts of the State of Illinois, and have procured divers judgments thereon, which now remain unpaid and unsatisfied of record, and are a lien upon the property of the said party of the first part, and other of said demands still remain unliquidated; and whereas the said party of the second part, at the request of the said party of the first part, now proposes to aid the party of the first part in procuring a sufficient sum of money to redeem said property from the aforesaid sale, and to protect said property from all the aforesaid valid judgment liens, and also to extend and construct the road of said party of the first part to the Mississippi River; . . . and also to pay all taxes, charges or assessments imposed or assessed, or which may be hereafter imposed or assessed, upon the property or premises of the party of the first part."

And among the covenants of the lessee are these:

"The said party of the second part, in consideration of the said demise and lease so as aforesaid made by the said party of the first part, hereby covenants and agrees that it will take up, pay, cancel, satisfy and discharge the said three thousand bonds of one thousand dollars each at maturity thereof, and will pay, cancel and discharge each and every of the coupons or interest warrants attached to the said bonds, and each of them, as the same shall become due and payable, so as aforesaid to be made and issued to the parties of the first and second parts, and will, during the continuance of this lease, at all times save the said party of the first part free and harmless therefrom, and from the mortgage so as aforesaid to be executed by the said parties of the first and second parts to the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company, on the second day of April, 1880, . . . and the said party of the second part shall and will, at its own proper cost and expense, preserve and keep the railway and premises hereby demised, and every part of the same, in thorough repair, working order and condition, and supplied with rolling-stock and equipment, so that the business of the said demised railway shall be preserved, encouraged and developed. . . . The said party of the second part hereby covenants, promises and agrees to and with said party of the first part that at the end of said term, or other sooner determination of this said lease, the said party of the second part shall redeliver and surrender up to the party of the first part, its successors or assigns, the said demised railway and premises in as good order and condition as the same shall be delivered to the said party of the second part under this lease, and with such additions, betterments and improvements as shall have been made thereto."

The bonds were sold at ninety-seven cents, and the amount necessary to redeem from the foreclosure sale was about $1,100,000. Out of the proceeds of these bonds the Milwaukee Company not only completed the construction of the entire road authorized by the charter of the Pacific Company, from Chicago to the Mississippi River, but also constructed a bridge over the Mississippi River, so as to connect this road with its own line in Iowa. Upon these facts can the validity of the decree requiring the Milwaukee Company to pay to the Bank, within a specified time, the amounts of the two judgments held by it, be successfully questioned? We think not. It would perhaps be difficult to point out any separate clause in the lease by which the Milwaukee Company obligated itself to pay the judgment in favor of the Bank, and yet there is force in the contention that, taken as a whole, the instrument casts this burden upon the Company. A part of the subject matter of the contract was claims against the Pacific Company. One recital is of the foreclosure debt; immediately following is one of the existence of claims, some of which had been sued on and passed into judgment and become liens, others still unliquidated; followed by the recital that the purpose of this arrangement is the redemption from said foreclosure sale, and the protection of the property from all the aforesaid valid judgment liens. Narrowly, the valid judgment liens referred to may include only those already existing, mentioned in the preceding recital; or, broadly, all valid judgment liens perfected on the claims named in that recital, whether already in judgment or not. If these were all the provisions, the narrow construction might be preferred; but the further and express covenants of the Milwaukee Company were to pay and discharge fully the proposed indebtedness of $3,000,000, and to return at the end of the lease, to the lessor, the demised property. Does not this indicate that the understanding and intent were that the Milwaukee Company should discharge all judgment liens founded upon existing claims, whether such liens had already been perfected, or should be created in subsequent suit? A judgment after a lease does not of its own right defeat the lease, or deprive the lessee of his interest and possession; but it operates against the lessor, and whatever interest, great or small, is retained in the leased premises. The purpose of this stipulation was not the protection of the lessee, but of the lessor. It was not that the lessee should be able to retain and enjoy the possession during the terms of the lease; but that the property should be freed from all burdens, so that at the termination of the lease the lessor might retake and enjoy it. The scope of the contract was not the payment of the debts of the lessor, for a mere debt, never passing into judgment, casts no burden upon the interest of lessor or lessee in the property, and the removal of all burdens was apparently the intent of the contracting parties. But again, the express lien on the lessor's property amounted only to about $1,100,000; yet, by the arrangement, a new lien was created from which nearly $3,000,000 was received, all of which sum passed into the hands of the lessee. Will not equity, for the payment of the debts of the lessor, follow this surplus into the hands of the lessee? Can a corporation in debt transfer its entire property by lease, so as to prevent the application of the property, at its full value, to the satisfaction of its debts? Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Pettus, 113 U. S. 116, 124 [28: 915, 918]; Mellen v. Moline M. Iron Works, 131 U. S. 352, 366 [33: 178, 182]. We do not care to pursue an inquiry into this question at length, or consider what limitations would surround this doctrine as applied generally, preferring to notice a single matter, which is significant and decisive. The contracting parties arranged, not merely for the discharge of the foreclosure lien, but for the completion of the road for which the lessor's franchise was granted. The lessee not only performed these stipulations, but with moneys arising from the sale of these bonds built, for its own benefit, a bridge across the Mississippi River, connecting this road with its line in Iowa, and thus making a continuous line of road to Omaha.

Neglecting to pay the debts of the lessor, it appropriated a large amount of the proceeds of the trust deed upon the lessor's property to its own benefit, and the improvement of its own property. Here clearly was a diversion of funds, which the creditors of the lessor might follow in equity. This is only the application of familiar doctrine. The properties of a corporation constitute a trust fund for the payment of its debts; and, when there is a misappropriation of the funds of a corporation, equity, on behalf of the creditors of such corporation, will follow the funds so diverted. The Milwaukee Company, from securities on the property of the Pacific Company, received nearly three millions of dollars; part it used for the benefit of the lessor company, and part it appropriated to its own benefit. Can it do this, and let the lessor company's debt go unpaid? Equity answers this question in the negative, and such was the ruling of the circuit judge. 26 Fed. Rep. 820.

Entertaining no doubt upon these matters, we pass to the consideration of certain questions of equity pleadings and procedure and evidence upon which the counsel for appellant largely relies. It will be remembered that after its redemption from sale under the Tabor judgment, the Bank, following the provisions of the Statute, advertised the property for sale on the execution issued upon its own judgment. The Railroad Companies filed their bill in equity in the circuit court to restrain such sale. The Bank, besides its answer, filed a cross-bill, which, after setting out the facts, prayed that its judgment might be decreed a valid equitable lien and incumbrance upon the property of the Pacific Company; that a receiver might be appointed, with power to apply the revenues to the judgment; and that the property be sold in satisfaction thereof, and for general relief. It is objected that such cross-bill was not germane to the original bill, and was therefore improperly filed. The case of Milwaukee & M. R. Co. v. Chamberlain, 78 U. S. 6 Wall. 748 [18: 859], fully answers this objection. In that case a bill was filed to set aside the judgment. One of the defendants, owner of the judgment, filed a cross-bill, praying that the judgment might be decreed a valid lien, and the property sold to satisfy it. The court dismissed both bills, the latter on the ground that the former having been dismissed on its merits, the latter could not be maintained, because the parties litigating were both citizens of the same State. This last ruling was reversed by this court, Mr. Justice Nelson, delivering the opinion, saying: "We think that the court erred in dismissing the cross-bill. It was filed for the purpose of enforcing the judgment, which was in the circuit court, and could be filed in no other court, and was but ancillary to and dependent upon the original suit—an appropriate proceeding for the purpose of obtaining satisfaction." In that case the original bill was to set aside a judgment—here, to restrain an execution sale under a judgment; but this difference does not affect the principle. Where in a court of equity an apparent legal burden on property is challenged, the court has jurisdiction of a cross-bill to enforce by its own procedure such burden. The court which denies legal remedies may enforce equitable remedies for the same debt; and an application for the latter is not foreign to a bill for the former.

Again, it is objected that an amendment to the cross-bill was allowed at the hearing, which changed the nature of the issues, and was therefore improper. This is the most serious question in the case. The amendment conformed the cross-bill to the proofs, and was in accord with the view of the law applicable to the facts, as indicated by the circuit judge, and as already approved by us in the fore part of this opinion; but it did work a change in the ground upon which relief was sought. The cross-bill, as originally framed, relied upon the fact that by redemption from the foreclosure sale by the mortgagor the lien of the foreclosure decree was wholly removed, leaving the Tabor judgment as a first lien upon the property; that, by the redemption from the sale under the Tabor judgment, the Bank became possessed of that lien; and that, holding that lien and its own judgment lien, it was entitled to enforce those liens in equity if not by execution at law. The misappropriation of a part of the proceeds of the $3,000,000 of bonds by the Milwaukee Company was not distinctively or separately alleged or counted on as the basis of relief. The amendment introduced this matter into the cross-bill; but the fact was distinctly stated in the original bill filed by the railroad companies, for it alleged "that said lessee, with the means provided by the execution of said last-named trust deed and bonds, and the proceeds of the sale thereof, by and with the consent of your orator, the Chicago and Pacific Railroad Company, has completed the construction of the entire road authorized by its charter, from the City of Chicago to the Mississippi River, and has also constructed a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Savanna." And proof of this was given by the railroad companies in their evidence. The fact was thus developed by the railroad companies, both by their bill and their proofs, and the amendment to the cross-bill was simply to enable the cross-complainant to avail itself of what had been alleged and proved by the original complainants. So, although thereby was presented a new and independent basis of relief, we think it must be held that there was no error in permitting the cross-complainant to avail itself of the fact thus furnished by its adversaries.

It is also objected that after this amendment, thus introducing new issues, the defendants to the cross-bill asked leave to file an answer thereto, which was denied; but the answer which was tendered contained no defense to the matter thus presented. It averred in substance that the Milwaukee Company had expended upon the road of the Pacific Company more than the entire proceeds of the $3,000,000 of bonds, to wit, about $4,000,000; but it contained no denial of the fact that it had used, as alleged, a part of the proceeds of the bonds in the construction of the bridge across the Mississippi River; in other words, it sought to excuse its misappropriation of a part of the proceeds of those securities by the fact that it had afterwards spent a large amount of its own money in improving the property of the Pacific Company. But that did not excuse the misappropriation, or release it from liability therefor. The misappropriation gave to the Bank, at the time at which it was made, the right to pursue the misappropriated proceeds into the hands of the Milwaukee Company. That right the Milwaukee Company could not thereafter defeat by spending money on the property of the Pacific Company; and it was unnecessary to enter into any inquiry as to the reasons for this subsequent expenditure, or as to how far the necessities of its own business on the through line from Chicago to Omaha compelled further improvements on that portion of the line east of the Mississippi River.

Still again, it is objected that there was no testimony showing how much of the proceeds of these bonds was expended in the construction of the bridge across the Mississippi River. The original bill alleged that the bridge was constructed out of the proceeds of these bonds; and it might almost be assumed that the construction of a bridge across such a great river would cost far more than the amount of the Bank's claims. But further in the hearing, the president of the Pacific Company (who is also the counsel in this case) was examined as a witness, and testified as to the construction of the bridge out of the proceeds of these bonds; that the Pacific Company had parted with all its property and had no earnings or income; that it was impossible for him to give any detailed statement of the manner in which the proceeds of the $3,000,000 of bonds was expended; and that he did not know whether any of the employés of either company could furnish such statement. Inasmuch, therefore, as the original bill alleged the construction of this bridge out of the proceeds of these bonds; as the answer to the amendment to the cross-bill did not deny the fact of such misappropriation, or aver that it was less than the amount of complainant's claims, and as the principal officer of the Pacific Company was unable to tell how much was thus expended, and did not know of anyone who could furnish the information, we do not think the court erred in assuming that the amount of such misappropriation was in excess of the Bank's claims, and rendering a decree accordingly.

We see no error in the record and the decree is therefore affirmed.

cure its bonds, and thereafter a contractor with the company erected a dock for the company on a part of the property covered by the mortgage, and filed a mechanic's lien for his pay, he is not entitled to priority of payment over the mortgage.

2. A recorded mortgage, given by a railroad company on its road-bed and other property, creates a lien whose priority cannot be displaced thereafter, directly by a mortgage given by the company, nor indirectly by a contract between the company and a third party for the erection of buildings or other works of original construction.
3. The mechanic's lien was subordinate to the lien of the prior mortgage; the mortgagee took a vested priority, beyond the power of the mortgagor or the Legislature thereafter to disturb.
4. The fact of the construction of the dock, and the consequent improvement of the mortgaged property, did not give to its constructor an equitable lien prior in right to the lien of the mortgage, nor furnish equitable reasons why the legal priority belonging to the mortgage should be displaced.
5. The equitable principles upon which the decisions rest, applying to the payment, out of the proceeds of the sale of railroad property, of debts for operating expenses and repairs, are not applicable to claims such as the present, for the original construction of a railroad while there was a subsisting mortgage upon it.
6. That the railroad company had only the equitable title to the land does not change the case. The mortgage, being one with words of general description, conveyed land held by a full equitable, as well as that held by a legal, title.

Fordick v. Schall, 99 U. S. 235 (25: 339).

Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court:

The question in this case arises between a mortgagee and a party claiming a mechanic's lien upon the mortgaged premises, as to priority of payment. The facts are these: On January 17, 1880, the Toledo, Delphos and Burlington Railroad Company executed and delivered its first mortgage to the Central Trust Company of New York, to secure the payment of $1,350,000 six per cent bonds. The description of the property conveyed by this mortgage is as follows: "Unto the Central Trust Company of New York, and to its successor or successors in trust, and for the uses and trusts hereby created, all and singular the line of railroad of the said party of the first part, as the same now is or hereafter may be constructed, between Toledo, Lucas County, Ohio, through the Counties of Lucas, Wood, Henry, Putnam, Allen and Van Wert, in the State of Ohio; and the Counties of Adams, Wells, Huntington, Wabash, Miami, Grant and Howard, in the State of Indiana, to the City of Kokomo, Indiana, being about one hundred and eighty miles in length; together with all and singular the right of way; road-bed, made and to be made; its track, laid or to be laid, between the terminal points aforesaid; together with all supplies, depot grounds, rails, fences, bridges, sidings, engine-houses, machinery, shops, buildings, erections, in any way now, or hereafter, appurtenant unto said described line of railroad; together with all the engines, machinery, supplies, tools and fixtures, now, or at any time hereafter, owned or acquired by said party of the first part, for use in connection with its line of railroad aforesaid; and all depot grounds, yards, sidings, turn-outs, sheds, machine shops, leasehold rights and other terminal facilities now, or hereafter, owned by the said party of the first part, together with all and singular the powers and franchises thereto belonging, and the tolls, and income, and revenue to be levied and derived therefrom."

The trust company accepted the trust created by this mortgage, and the bonds were issued by the Railroad Company, certified by the trustee and sold on the market. The mortgage was, within a few days after its execution, duly recorded in the proper counties. In October, 1883, default having occurred in the payment of interest, the trust company brought suit to foreclose. There being a conflict of interest between the bondholders under this and those under a terminal trust mortgage subsequently executed by the Railroad Company, a committee of bondholders under the first mortgage, consisting of James M. Quigley, Charles T. Harbeck and John McNab, was appointed to represent the interest of such bondholders, and by order of the court duly made co-complainants. Thomas H. Hamilton, appellee, intervened, and filed his petition claiming a mechanic's lien. On March 20th, May 9th and June 2d, 1888, respectively, he had entered into three several contracts with the Railroad Company for the erection of a dock on the Maumee River, in the City of Toledo. Under these contracts he had built the dock, and, receiving only partial payment, had filed a claim for a mechanic's lien for the balance. The lot on which the dock was built was a part of the railroad property covered by the first mortgage above referred to. The circuit court sustained his claim of lien, and decreed prior payment of the amount due him out of the proceeds of the sale of the railroad property as an entirety. No question is made as to the amount due him by the Railroad Company for the work he did; but the contention of the appellants is that he is not entitled to priority of payment. His claim of priority depends upon either a legal right given by his mechanic's lien, or an equitable right arising from the construction of the dock and consequent improvement of the railroad property. The master, who reported upon the intervening petition, based his award of priority upon the latter ground, holding that the fact of construction, and consequent improvement of the railroad property, gave an equitable right to priority of payment, while the court, giving the same priority, rested it upon the fact of a mechanic's lien. We think that the views of neither the master nor the court can be sustained, and that it was error to give appellee priority over the mortgagee. It will be noticed, and it is a fact which lies at the foundation of this case, that the contracts for the construction of the dock were not made till more than three years after the execution and record of the mortgage. The record imparted notice to Hamilton, and to all others, of the fact and terms of the mortgage; and the question is thus presented, whether a railroad company, mortgagor, can, three years after creating by recorded mortgage an express lien upon its property, by contract with a third party displace the priority of the mortgage lien. It would seem that the question admits of but a single answer. Certainly as to ordinary real estate, no one would have the hardihood to contend that it could be done; and there is in this respect no difference between ordinary real estate and railroad property. A recorded mortgage, given by a railroad company on its road-bed and other property, creates a lien whose priority cannot be displaced thereafter, directly by a mortgage given by the company, nor indirectly by a contract between the company and a third party for the erection of buildings or other works of original construction.

It is enough to refer to the decisions of this court. In the case of Dunham v. Cincinnati, P. & O. R. Co., 68 U. S. 1 Wall. 354 [17:594], there was presented a question of priority between a mortgagee and a contractor who had expended money and labor in building a railroad, under a subsequent agreement with the company that he should have possession of the road until he was fully paid, and who had never surrendered the possession, and the priority of the mortgage was sustained. Upon this point the court observed: "Counsel of respondents concede that the mortgage to the complainant was executed in due form of law, and the case also shows that it was duly recorded on the ninth day of March, 1855, more than eight months before the contract set up by the respondent was made. All of the bonds, except those subsequently delivered to the contractor, had long before that time been issued, and were in the hands of innocent holders. Contractor, under the circumstances, could acquire no greater interest in the road than was held by the company. He did not exact any formal conveyance, but, if he had, and one had been executed and delivered, the rule would be the same. Registry of the first mortgage was notice to all the world of the lien of the complainant, and in that point of view the case does not even show a hardship upon the contractor, as he must have known when he accepted the agreement that he took the road subject to the rights of the bondholders. Acting as he did with a full knowledge of all the circumstances, he has no right to complain if his agreement is less remunerative than it would have been if the bondholders had joined with the company in making the contract. No effort appears to have been made to induce them to become a party to the agreement, and it is now too late to remedy the oversight. Conceding the general rules of law to be as here laid down, still an attempt is made by the respondents to maintain that railroad mortgages made to secure the payment of bonds issued for the purpose of realizing means with which to construct the road, stand upon a different footing from the ordinary mortgages to which such general rules of law are usually applied. Authorities are cited which seem to favor the supposed distinction, and the argument in support of it was enforced at the bar with great power of illustration, but suffice it to say, that in the view of this court the argument is not sound, and we think that the weight of judicial determination is greatly the other way. Pierce v. Emery, 32 N. H. 484; Pennock v. Coe, 64 U. S. 23 How. 180 [16:441]; Field v. Mayor, 6 N. Y. 179; Seymour v. Canandaigua and N. F. R. Co. 25 Barb. 286; Redf. Railways, 578; Langton v. Horton, 1 Hare, 549; Re Howe, 1 Paige, 129; Mitchell v. Winslow, 2 Story, C. C. 644; Domat, 649, art. 5; 1 Pow. Mort. 190; Noel v. Bewley, 8 Sim. 108."

See also, on this general proposition, the cases of Galveston, H. & H. R. Co. v. Coudrey, 78 U. S. 11 Wall. 459 [20:199]; Dillon v. Barnard, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 480, 440 [22:673, 678]; Porter v. Pittsburg Bessemer Steel Co. 120 U. S. 649 [30:830]; and 122 U. S. 267 [30:1210]; Thompson v. Whitewater Valley R. Co. 132 U. S. 68 [33:256]. Reference may be had to a decision of the Supreme Court of Ohio, the State in which this lien was attempted to be created and enforced (Choteau v. Thompson, 2 Ohio St. 114), in which the court, speaking of a mechanic's lien, says: "The lien does not override or interfere with prior bona fide liens. The idea that the builder, or materialman, may have a lien upon the house to the exclusion of a mortgagee, or judgment creditor, whose lien attached before the house was erected, altered or repaired, is inadmissible, and could not, in practice, be carried out." And again: "We do not suppose that the law relating to mortgages, or to judgments and executions, was in any way affected by the enactment of the Lien Law. And we are of opinion, as before stated, that liens under this law do not, in any case or in any manner, interfere with prior bona fide liens." So that if a mechanic's lien could have been placed upon the railroad, or any part thereof, under the Ohio Statute, and by the proceedings taken was in fact perfected, it would not operate to displace the priority of the earlier mortgage.

To what extent, if at all, a mechanic's lien could, under the statutes of Ohio in force at the time Hamilton attempted to file his lien, be placed upon a railroad, or any part of it, may be a matter of doubt. Rutherford v. Cincinnati & P. R. Co. 85 Ohio St. 559; Smith Bridge Co. v. Bowman, 41 Ohio St. 87; Revised Statutes of Ohio, 1880, sections 3184 and 3185 and sections 3207 to 3211, inclusive; also Laws of 1883, amended sections 3207 to 3211, inclusive, and Laws of 1884, page 126. It is unnecessary in this case to express any opinion about the matter, for if a mechanic's lien was effected, it was subordinate to the lien of the prior mortgage. There was no statute in force at the time the mortgage was executed, giving any priority to subsequent mechanic's liens; and by the mortgage the mortgagee took its vested priority beyond the power of the mortgagor or the Legislature thereafter to disturb.

Neither did the fact of the construction of the dock, and the consequent improvement of the mortgaged property, give, as reported by the master, to Hamilton an equitable lien prior in right to the lien of the mortgage, or furnish equitable reasons why the legal priority belonging to the mortgage should be displaced. It is true cases have arisen in which, upon equitable reasons, the priority of a mortgage debt has been displaced in favor of even unsecured subsequent creditors. See St. Louis, A. & T. H. R. Co. v. Cleveland, C. C. & I. R. Co., 125 U. S. 658, 673 [81: 832, 837], in which many of these cases are collected and the equitable principles underlying them stated. But those principals have no application here. The work which Hamilton did was in original construction, and not in keeping up, as a going concern, a railroad already built. The amount due him was no part of the current expenses of operating the road. There was, as to him, no diversion of current earnings to the payment of current expenses.

The distinction is so well expressed by Mr. Justice Blatchford, in given the opinion of the court in the case of Porter v. Pittsburgh Bessemer Steel Co., 120 U. S. 649, 671 [30: 830, 838], that it is sufficient to quote his language: "The claims of the appellees are for the original construction of the railroad. This is not a case where the proceeds of the sale of the property of the railroad, as a completed structure, open for travel and transportation, are to be applied to restore earnings which, instead of having been applied to pay operating expenses and necessary repairs, have been diverted to pay interest on mortgage bonds and the improvement of the mortgaged property, the debts due for the operating expenses and repairs having remained unpaid when a receiver was appointed. The equitable principles upon which the decisions rest, applying to the payment, out of the proceeds of the sale of railroad property, of such debts for operating expenses and necessary repairs, are not applicable to claims such as the present, accrued for the original construction of a railroad while there was a subsisting mortgage upon it. These five appellees gave credit to the company for their work. It was construction work, and none of it was for operating expenses or repairs, and none of it went towards keeping a completed road in operation, either in the way of labor or material. When these claims accrued, the road of the company had not been opened for use. The claims accrued after the mortgage had been executed and recorded, and after $1,000,000 of the bonds secured by it had been issued and pledged to innocent bona fide holders for value. We are not aware of any well-considered adjudged case, which, in the absence of a statutory provision, holds that unsecured floating debts for construction are a lien on a railroad superior to the lien of a valid mortgage duly recorded, and of bonds secured thereby, and held by bona fide purchasers for value. The authorities are all the other way."

It is urged by the appellee, in objection to the force of these propositions, as applied to the facts in this case, that at the time this mechanic's lien was created the legal title was not in the Railroad Company, but in one George W. Ballou; that as the mortgagor had no legal title, the mortgage created no legal lien; that while by the decree of foreclosure the legal title was transferred to the mortgagor, it was transferred subject to the burden of the mechanic's lien; and the cases of Williamson v. N. J. Southern R. Co., 28 N. J. Eq. 277, also 29 N. J. Eq. 811, and Botsford v. New Haven, M. & W. R. Co., 41 Conn. 454, are especially relied upon. But the facts in those cases are very different from those in this. In the New Jersey case, the defendant railroad company had executed a mortgage with the "after-acquired property" clause in it, duly recorded. It was also the owner of a large majority of the stock in the Long Branch and Sea Shore Company, and was in possession of and operating the latter company's road. No consolidation in fact of the two companies had taken place; but being in possession of the latter company's road, it had contracted for the building of certain docks, walls and piers, at the terminus of such road. Having failed to make payment for such work, a mechanic's lien was perfected upon the latter company's road. Upon a suit to foreclose the mortgage given by the defendant railroad company, the chancellor, laying hold of the fact that the defendant railroad company was the owner of this large majority of the stock—was in possession of and operating the latter company's road—decreed that such road, with its property and franchises, belonged to the defendant railroad company, and as after-acquired property was subject to complainant's mortgage, but subordinate to the mechanic's lien. On review in the court of errors and appeals, as reported in 29 N. J. Eq., supra, the decision of the chancellor was sustained, the court saying: "Until that decree was signed, the right of the complainant in the lands of the Sea Shore Company under his mortgage was a mere unexecuted equity, to have the benefit of such equities as his mortgagor had in the premises, without any legal title in himself or in his mortgagor upon which his mortgage as a conveyance could operate.

When the decree of the chancellor was signed, which established the lien of complainant's mortgage on the property of the Long Branch and Sea Shore Company, Berthoud & Co. had, by force of the provisions of the Mechanic's Lien Act, acquired a lien on the premises which related back to the commencement of the building, and was entitled to priority over all conveyances, mortgages or incumbrances subsequent thereto. This lien was not displaced by the chancellor's decree, which, in the absence of fraud, could be effective only to bring under the complainant's mortgage the lands of the Sea Shore Company, subject to such liens as were lawfully acquired while the legal estate was in that company. The chancellor's decree adjudging the validity and priority of the claim of Berthoud & Co. should be affirmed." Unquestionably such ruling was correct. The owner of a majority of the stock in a railroad corporation has no title to the road. The title is in the corporation, and he is not the corporation. A mortgage by the owner of such stock is no lien upon the road, and does not prevent the casting of any legal lien upon it. So that while, for the many equitable reasons stated in the opinion, the decree vested the property in the latter road in the defendant railroad company, yet it perfected and transferred that title subject to all legal liens then existing upon it. As the court of errors and appeals well said, until that decree was signed the right of the complainant, the mortgagee, was a mere unexecuted equity, to have the benefit of such equities as his mortgagor had in the premises.

In the Connecticut case the facts were these: After giving the mortgage the railroad company desired to erect a depot on land adjoining its track. The owner agreed to give the company the land provided it would build a depot. Upon the building a mechanic's lien was filed. The owner had never made a conveyance. Upon a foreclosure of the mortgage the mechanic's lien upon the building and the ground upon which it was constructed was held prior to the mortgage. The decision was based upon the ground that the full equitable title never passed to the railroad company until the completion of the building, and then it passed subject to the burden of the mechanic's lien. Hence, though after-acquired property, and subject to the lien of the mortgage, it was when acquired already burdened with a lien.

But in the case at bar, as appears from the testimony and the decree, only the naked legal title remained in Ballou; the full equitable title was in the Railroad Company—and in that Company before the contracts were entered into. The Railroad Company had the same title when it made the contracts that it had when the work was done and the decree rendered. Hamilton's contracts were with the Railroad Company, and of course gave a lien upon the lands only to the extent of the title that the railroad company had. The mortgage being one with words of general description, conveyed land held by a full equitable, as well as that held by a legal, title. Jones, Mortgages, section 138; Massey v. Papin, 65 U. S. 24 How. 362 [16: 784]; Farmers L. & T. Co. v. Fisher, 17 Wis. 114; Lincoln Bldg. & Sav. Assn. v. Hass, 10 Neb. 581; Laughlin v. Braley, 25 Kan. 147. We conclude, therefore, that there is nothing in this fact to justify an award of priority to appellee.

It is further objected by the appellee that the ground upon which this dock was built was never acquired by the Company which executed the mortgage, but by a new Company into which the mortgagor Company passed by consolidation. In view of the condition of the record we are compelled to accept the statement of the court in its decree, which is, that the property was covered by the mortgage in suit. Again, it is urged that a part of the work was done after the receiver was appointed, and by his authority. The report of the master does not sustain this claim; neither does the account filed by the intervenor for the purpose of securing his mechanic's lien. And while there is testimony tending to show that he did some work after the appointment of a receiver, there is also contradictory testimony. And even in that part of the testimony which tends to show that work was done after the appointment of a receiver, there is nothing to indicate how much was done, or whether it was done by the authority and direction of the receiver, or simply in completion of a contract theretofore entered into with the Company.

These are all the facts we deem it necessary to mention. The decree of the Circuit Court will be reversed, with instructions for further proceedings in accordance with the views herein expressed.

MICHAEL GORMLEY, Appt.,

v.

ALFRED CORNING CLARK.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 388-350.)

Illinois Burnt Records Act—state decisions, when followed as rules of property, etc.—state statutes—remedies in U. S. courts—statute remedy, extent of—equity jurisdiction—legal remedy—restoration of record—bill in equity, relief under—homestead rights.

1. The Illinois "Burnt Records Act" was in effect a Statute of Limitations, and was not unreasonable, nor unconstitutional because not providing for trial by jury or otherwise.
2. Upon the construction of the Constitution and laws of a State, this court, as a general rule, follows the decisions of her highest court, unless they conflict with or impair the efficacy of some provision of the Federal Constitution, or of a federal statute, or a rule of general commercial law.
3. And this is so where a course of those decisions, whether founded on statutes or not, have become rules of property within the State; also in regard to rules of evidence in actions at law; and also in reference to the common law of the State, and its laws and customs of a local character.

4. Substantially conclusive effect is given to such decisions upon the construction of state statutes, as affecting title to real estate within the State.
5. Remedies in the courts of the United States are, at common law or in equity, according to the essential character of the case, uncontrolled in that particular by the practice of the state courts.
6. An enlargement of equitable rights by state statute may be administered by the circuit courts of the United States as well as by the courts of the State.
7. Where the deed of land in Chicago, and its record, has been destroyed, the petitioner is entitled to the establishment of the record by the proceeding authorized under the said Statute, and, when the court has once acquired jurisdiction, it can adjudicate upon all claims to the property in controversy, as therein provided.
8. As this case comes within the provisions of the Statute, and equity can alone afford the entire relief sought, the fact that legal questions are also involved cannot oust the court of jurisdiction.
9. The jurisdiction in equity attaches unless the legal remedy, both in respect to the final relief and the mode of obtaining it, is as efficient as the remedy which equity would afford under the same circumstances.
10. Under this Statute, the restoration of the record title is matter essentially of equitable cognizance, while the declaration of the invalidity of the ordinance of January 3, 1882, the removal of the cloud caused by recording a copy thereof, and the abatement of the obstruction to the streets, were matters in respect to which the petitioner could properly resort to a court of equity.
11. A bill in equity may be retained for the purpose of granting full relief when jurisdiction exists.
12. There was no error in the direction for the removal of the buildings from the portion of the street in disregard of the homestead rights of appellant and his wife: the proofs establish such a dedication as created an easement in the petitioner which the court was justified in protecting.

Submitted Jan. 27, 1890. Decided Mar. 17, 1890.

A PPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois in favor of Clark, plaintiff, that he was vested with title to the premises in dispute and had an easement in the use of Adams Street, and that defendant, Gormley, and his wife had no homestead rights in the premises or in said street, and that possession of said premises be surrendered to plaintiff. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

Michael Gormley, the appellant, on the 5th day of March, 1874, made a subdivision, into blocks and lots, of certain property within the limits of the Village of Glencoe, Cook County, Illinois, entitled "Gormley's Addition to Glencoe;" acknowledged the plat before a justice of the peace; and had it certified to by the county surveyor, and duly recorded in the recorder's office of said county. He derived title to so much of the property as is involved in this case under a warranty deed from his father, Marcus Gormley, the patentee, dated May 4, 1861, and recorded in the office of said recorder June 5th of that year. On the 15th of May, 1877, Gormley and his wife executed a trust deed, which was duly recorded, to one Loeb as trustee, conveying certain blocks and lots in Gormley's

Addition to Glencoe, to secure a promissory note described therein, which trust deed was duly acknowledged, and released in due form of law all homestead rights of the grantors in the property conveyed. The premises were subsequently sold under the powers of sale in the trust deed for default in payment, and conveyed by deeds dated September 10, 1878, some of the blocks to Edward Clark, a block and some of the lots to Sarah J. Condon, and some to others. Edward Clark died October 14, 1882, and Alfred Corning Clark acquired title to the portion conveyed to him, as his sole heir-at-law. On the 29th day of March, 1884, Sarah J. Condon conveyed the premises deeded to her to Alfred Corning Clark, who by that conveyance, and as heir to Edward, became the owner of blocks 3, 4, 5, 8 to 24 inclusive, and lots 8, 4, 5, 6, 11 and 12 in block 6, in Gormley's Addition to Glencoe, in the County of Cook and the State of Illinois.

By the charter of the Village of Glencoe, it was provided that printed or written copies of all ordinances passed by the council of the village should be posted up in at least three of the most public places therein, within thirty days after their passage, and should take effect at the expiration of ten days after such posting. On the 4th day of October, 1881, on a petition signed by Michael Gormley, the council of Glencoe vacated Adams Street, between Grove Street and Bluff Street, in Gormley's Addition, which ran between blocks 8 and 9 of that addition, and upon which Gormley's house, barn and outbuildings then stood. This portion of the street formed the means of ingress and egress to some twenty-four lots in these two blocks. The ordinance was posted and a certified copy filed in the recorder's office by Gormley on October 17, 1881. On the 8d of January, 1882, the council of Glencoe passed an ordinance, which was in Gormley's own handwriting, vacating some ten streets and parts of streets in Gormley's Addition, which surrounded the property in controversy, and the evidence tended to show that this was done upon representations made by Gormley that he owned the property through which the streets passed, and that, at all events, such was the belief of the members of the council in taking the action in question. On the 12th day of January, 1882, the vote on the passage of the ordinance was reconsidered and again reconsidered on January 24, 1882; and on the 7th of February, 1882, the council passed an ordinance providing "that any and all ordinances heretofore passed by this council, vacating any streets or parts of streets in Gormley's Addition to Glencoe, or purporting so to do, are hereby repealed, and all the streets and parts of streets shown in the first and originally recorded plat of said addition are hereby declared to be public streets." The ordinance of January 8, 1882, was never posted by the clerk, and although the charter required ordinances to be entered at length in an ordinance book, neither the ordinance of October 4, 1881, nor that of January 3, 1882, nor any of the repealing or rescinding resolutions or ordinances, were entered at length in such book. Shortly after the passage of the ordinance of January 3, 1882, Gormley applied to the clerk of the village to post the ordinance, and the clerk replied that he should take the full time allowed him by law to do so, namely, thirty days. He also applied for a certified copy of the ordinance, but the clerk did not give it to him. He then copied the minutes of the meeting of January 3, 1882, and posted such copy and made oath thereto, January 24, 1882, and filed the same on that day in the recorder's office of Cook County. On the 17th of January, 1882, Gormley filed in the Superior Court of Cook County, Illinois, a petition for a mandamus upon the clerk of the village to immediately post certified copies of the ordinance passed on January 3, 1882, as required by law, and to file for record, in the recorder's office of Cook County, a duly certified copy of the ordinance, or to furnish to him (Gormley) a duly certified copy upon tender of his legal fees. This petition was answered by the clerk, and a replication filed, and the cause tried, a jury being waived, by Gary, J., who rendered judgment dismissing the petition at Gormley's costs. The case was taken to the Appellate Court for the First District of Illinois, by which court the judgment of the superior court was affirmed. After the commencement of this action, Gormley sued out from the Supreme Court of Illinois a writ of error to review the judgment of the appellate court, and the judgment of that court was thereupon affirmed. Gormley v. Day, 114 Ill. 185.

Gormley sold several lots and blocks of his subdivision to different parties; put down sidewalks, and threw up various streets with a plow; street and sidewalk work in the addition was done by the village; and portions of various streets were graded and ditched. After the foreclosure the taxes upon the premises in dispute were paid by Alfred Corning Clark.

On the 31st of March, 1884, Clark filed his petition under the "Burnt Records Act" so called, being chapter 116 of the Revised Statutes of Illinois, setting up his title to the property in controversy; alleging the destruction of the records of Cook County and of his record title on October 8 and 9, 1871, by fire; the proceedings of the council of the Village of Glencoe, of the clerk and of Michael Gormley; and the suits in the superior and appellate courts; and charging fraud on Gormley's part and threatened irreparable injury; averring that Gormley was in possession of petitioner's land and about to destroy its market value by procuring a vacation of the streets around it; and asking that council and clerk be enjoined. Petitioner made the Village of Glencoe, its council and clerk, Michael Gormley and wife and others, who had claimed some interest in the property, parties, "and all whom it may concern," and prayed that the ordinances of October 4, 1881, and January 3, 1882, be declared null and void and of no effect whatsoever, and for a decree confirming and establishing his title in fee simple to the lots and blocks mentioned as aforesaid, and that he be put in possession; and that the village, its council and clerk, be restrained from passing or posting any ordinance or ordinances vacating streets or parts of streets adjoining petitioner's lots and blocks. Many of the defendants defaulted, and some answered, including Gormley and wife, upon whose answer the only questions in issue here arise. Upon hearing, the court entered a final decree in favor of Clark, adjudging that he was, at the date of filing the petition, vested with title in fee simple absolute to the premises in dispute, and confirming and establishing the same; that Gormley was estopped from claiming any informality or defect in the plat of his addition to Glencoe; that he and his wife had no homestead rights in any of the lots and blocks decreed to Clark, or in any streets or parts thereof on which any of the said lots or blocks abutted, as against said Clark, his representatives, heirs and assigns; that the ordinance of January 3, 1882, was null and void; that title to that portion of Adams Street between Grove Street and Bluff Street was vested in Gormley, but subject to an easement in the use of it by said Clark, his heirs, legal representatives and assigns, as the owner of lots or parts of lots abutting thereon; that said Gormley and wife remove from that portion of Adams Avenue on or before a date named, and in default of such removal the marshal remove the buildings thereon located; and that possession of the property in dispute be surrendered to petitioner. The decree dissolved a preliminary injunction which had been granted against the village and its authorities, and awarded no relief in respect to them.

From this decree Gormley appealed to this court, and assigns as errors (1) that the court erred in not dismissing the bill for want of equity; (2) that petitioner had a complete and adequate remedy at law, and a court of chancery had no jurisdiction; (3) that the court erred in decreeing void the ordinance vacating said streets in said Gormley's Addition to Glencoe; (4) that the court erred in decreeing that said Michael and Eliza Gormley remove their house, barn and shop from said portion of Adams Avenue, between Grove and Bluff Streets; (5) that the court erred in decreeing to the petitioner an easement in the right of use of Adams Avenue, between Grove and Bluff Streets, as a street, by said petitioner; (6) that the court erred in decreeing the petitioner entitled to the possession of said lots and blocks in said petition described; (7) that the court erred in decreeing that the appellant surrender up possession of said streets, lots and blocks to the petitioner.

Mr. Millard F. Riggle, for appellant:

Whenever a court of law affords a plain, adequate and complete remedy, without the aid of a court of equity, the plaintiff must proceed at law.

Killian v. Ebbinghaus, 110 U. S. 568 (28: 246); Fussell v. Gregg, 113 U. S. 550 (28: 998); Holland v. Challen, 110 U. S. 15 (28: 52); Hutchings v. Higgins, 59 Ill. 29.

A law that would take the property of one and transfer it to another without compensation would be unconstitutional.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

Upon the 8th and 9th of October, 1871, a memorable conflagration destroyed a large part of the City of Chicago, including the courthouse and the entire records of the County of Cook in the State of Illinois, in which the City of Chicago was situated. An Act was thereupon passed by the General Assembly of that State, approved April 9, 1872, to remedy the evils consequent upon the destruction of public records (Laws Ill. 1871, 1872, p. 652), which Act is now chapter 116 of the Revised Statutes of Illinois. (2 Starr and Curtis, 1993.) That Act provided that in case of such destruction, the courts of the county wherein it occurred, having chancery jurisdiction, should have power to inquire into the condition of any title to or interest in any land in such county, and to make all such orders, judgments and decrees as might be necessary to determine and establish said title or interest, legal or equitable, against all persons known or unknown, and all liens existing on such lands, whether by statute, mortgage, deed of trust or otherwise; that it should be lawful for any person claiming title to any lands in the county at the time of the destruction of its records, and for all claiming under such person, to file a petition in any court in the county having chancery jurisdiction, praying for a decree establishing and confirming his said title, which petition should set out the character and extent of the estate in the land in question claimed by the complainant or petitioner, and from whom and when and by what mode he derived his title thereto;

the names of all persons owning or claiming any estate in fee in, or who should be in possession of, said lands or any part thereof, and also all persons to whom any such lands had been conveyed, and the deed or deeds of such conveyance recorded in the office of recorder of deeds since the time of destruction of the records and prior to the filing of the petition; and their residences, so far as the same were known; that all persons so named in the petition should be made defendants and notified of the suit by summons or publication in the same manner as required in chancery proceedings in the State, unknown owners or claimants to be brought in under the designation of "to whom it may concern;" that any person interested might oppose the petition, demur to or answer it, or file a cross-petition if he desired to do so; and that the decree entered in the proceeding should be, as to the title found, forever binding and conclusive, except against minors and insane persons, and persons in possession or to whom the lands had been conveyed and the deeds recorded since the destruction of the records and prior to the filing of the petition, and not made parties defendant by name. The Act also contained various provisions in protection of married women, insane persons and minors, and all defendants not served with summons were given one year after entry of decree to ask its vacation on petition; and the rules and regulations governing courts of chancery in Illinois were declared to apply to proceedings under the Act so far as not inconsistent therewith.

By numerous decisions of the Supreme Court of the State of Illinois it has been determined that a petition to establish title, under what is known as the "Burnt Records Act," need not show that the petitioner was in possession of the land or that it was vacant and unoccupied, as required in a bill to quiet title, the Act authorizing the petitioner to make all parties in possession or claiming an interest in the land parties defendant to the petition, creating a clear and marked distinction between a case of this character and such a bill; that the court is authorized and required to investigate the interest of all the parties in the premises in question, and to decree in favor of the better title; that all that is required in respect to adverse claimants or their titles is, that such claimant shall be named in the petition and made defendant; that nothing more is required to give the court jurisdiction under the Statute to investigate the claims of title to the premises, and by its decree establish and confirm the title in the person in whom it is found to be vested, and to make all such orders, judgments and decrees as shall be necessary to that end; that decrees so entered are, as to the title so found, forever binding and conclusive between the parties; that the Statute was in effect a Statute of Limitations, and under the circumstances was not unreasonable, but demanded as a matter of safety in a great emergency; that it was not open to the objection of unconstitutionality, because not providing for trial by jury or otherwise; and that the question whether a jury should be allowed could not arise unless a jury was demanded. Gage v. Caraher, 125 Ill. 447; Heacock v. Hosmer, 109 Ill. 245; Heacock v. Lubuke, 107 Ill. 396; Robinson v. Ferguson, 78 Ill. 588; Bradish v. Grant, 119 Ill. 606, 6 West. Rep. 525; Bertrand v. Taylor, 87 Ill. 285.

The subject received much consideration from Judge Blodgett, holding the Circuit Court for the Northern District of Illinois, in Smith v. Gage, 11 Biss. 217, in which he announced substantially the same conclusions. And he remarks "that the court, on the final hearing of such a case, may, in its discretion as a court of equity, where two conflicting titles are presented, the validity of which can be determined in a court of law, by the express terms of its decree, remit the parties holding such titles to a court of law for the trial of their rights; but this would be purely a matter of equitable discretion, and does not limit the power of the court in this proceeding to settle the entire title by its decree." In Gage v. Caraher, ubi supra, the Supreme Court of Illinois says: "Whatever may be the power of the court of chancery, where there are controverted titles, to restore, by its decree, the evidences of title in the respective parties as they were before the destruction of the record, and then, in its discretion, remit the parties to a court of law to there try their titles, it is manifest no such course was contemplated by the Statute, or necessary in cases under it." In Ward v. Farrell, 97 Ill. 613, in passing upon the right to demand a trial by jury in the particular instance there in hand, it is justly observed: "Where a new class of cases are, by legislative action, directed to be tried as chancery causes, it must appear that, when tested by the general principles of equity, they are of an equitable character, and can be more appropriately tried in a court of equity than in a court of law. And if of this character, when brought in a court of equity they stand upon the same footing with other causes, and the court will have the right, as in other cases, to determine all questions of fact without submitting them to a jury."

Upon the construction of the Constitution and laws of a State, this court, as a general rule, follows the decisions of her highest court, unless they conflict with or impair the efficacy of some provision of the Federal Constitution, or of a federal statute, or a rule of general commercial law. Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U. S. 425, 439 [30: 178, 185]. And this is so where a course of those decisions, whether founded on statutes or not, have become rules of property within the State; also in regard to rules of evidence in actions at law; and also in reference to the common law of the State, and its laws and customs of a local character when established by repeated decisions. Burgess v. Seligman, 107 U. S. 20 [27: 359]; Bucher v. Cheshire R. Co. 125 U. S. 555 [31: 795]. Substantially conclusive effect is given to such decisions upon the construction of state statutes, as affecting title to real estate within the State. Ridings v. Johnson, 128 U. S. 212 [32: 401]; Bacon v. Northwestern M. L. Ins. Co. 131 U. S. 253 [33: 128]; Hanrick v. Patrick, 119 U. S. 156, 169 [30: 396, 404].

And while the rule is thoroughly settled that remedies in the courts of the United States are at common law or in equity, according to the essential character of the case, uncontrolled in that particular by the practice of the state courts (New Orleans v. Louisiana Construction Company, 129 U. S. 45, 46 [32: 607]), yet an enlargement of equitable rights by state statute may be administered by the circuit courts of the United States as well as by the courts of the State; and when the case is one of a remedial proceeding, essentially of an equitable character, there can be no objection to the exercise of the jurisdiction. Broderick Will Case, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 508, 520 [22:599, 605]; Holland v. Challen, 110 U. S. 15, 25 [28: 52, 56]; Frost v. Spitley, 121 U. S. 552, 557 [30: 1010, 1012].

Tested by the conclusions of the Supreme Court of Illinois, the principal contention on appellant's behalf cannot be sustained. The record of the patent and the deed from the patentee to Michael Gormley had been destroyed, and the deed, which it turned out on this hearing was in Gormley's possession, had never been re-recorded. The petitioner was entitled to the establishment of the record by the proceeding authorized under the Statute, and, when the court had once acquired jurisdiction, it could go on and adjudicate upon all claims to the property in controversy, as therein provided. The character of the litigation sufficiently indicates that the petitioner legitimately invoked the aid of the Statute.

It is strenuously insisted that the remedy at law was adequate, and that as the right of possession was purely a legal question and for a jury, the court of chancery should have declined jurisdiction; but, inasmuch as the case came within the provisions of the Statute, and equity could alone afford the entire relief sought, the fact that legal questions were also involved could not oust the court of jurisdiction. The jurisdiction in equity attaches unless the legal remedy, both in respect to the final relief and the mode of obtaining it, is as efficient as the remedy which equity would afford under the same circumstances (Kilbourn v. Sunderland, 130 U. S. 505, 514 [32:1005, 1008]); and it is quite clear that under this Statute the restoration of the record title is a matter essentially of equitable cognizance, while the declaration of the invalidity of the ordinance of January 8, 1852, the removal of the cloud caused by recording a copy thereof, and the abatement of the obstruction to the streets, were matters in respect to which, under the averments of the petition and the evidence adduced at the hearing, the petitioner could properly resort to a court of equity. Undoubtedly the rule that a bill may be retained for the purpose of granting full relief when jurisdiction exists, should not be abused by being employed as a mere pretext for bringing into chancery causes proper for a court of law; but under the local law, this could not be predicated of a petition which the petitioner was entitled to file under the "Burnt Records Act," and, as already stated, we administer, where adverse citizenship gives us jurisdiction of a case, the equitable relief which state legislation accords.

It is objected that there was error in the direction for the removal of the buildings from the portion of Adams Street between blocks eight and nine, in disregard of the homestead rights of appellant and his wife; but we do not think so. Whether the plat was a statutory plat or not, as to which some issue is made by the answer, the proofs establish such a dedication as created an easement in the petitioner, the existence of which Gormley was estopped to deny, and which the court was justified in protecting. Maywood Co. v. Maywood, 118 Ill. 61 [5 West. Rep. 529]; Matthiessen & H. Zinc Co. v. La Salle, 117 Ill. 411 [5 West. Rep. 178]; Little v. Lincoln, 106 Ill. 858; Hamilton v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 124 Ill. 285.

The right of way, as appurtenant to these blocks and lots, passed to the purchasers under the sale upon the trust deed, which was executed by Gormley and his wife, and by which both had released the homestead claim, and the decree recognized the fee as still in Gormley subject to the burden thus imposed. Trickey v. Schlader, 52 Ill. 78; Kittle v. Pfeiffer, 22 Cal. 484.

As to the remaining errors assigned, we are of opinion that the court correctly held the second ordinance duly annulled, and the easement as existing in the petitioner, so far as respected the property described in the first of the two ordinances referred to, and properly granted the writ of assistance to put the petitioner into possession of his blocks and lots as prayed; and while the bill did not specifically pray for similar relief in respect to the streets in question, such relief was agreeable to the case made by the bill, and could be awarded as within the prayer for general relief. The writ of assistance was simply in effectuation of the decree, and was in accordance with the recognized practice in equity and the Ninth Equity Rule. We are satisfied upon the whole case that the circuit court committed no error, and the decree will therefore be affirmed.

3. The county having levied a tax of one half of one per cent, including as part thereof twenty cents on one hundred dollars levied by the township boards for township and bridge purposes, the county can be compelled to levy an additional tax of twenty cents on one hundred dollars to pay the balance of said judgment and other county debts pro rata.

Argued Jan. 17, 20, 1890. Decided Mar. 17, 1890.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Missouri to review a judgment for a peremptory mandamus compelling an increase of the county tax levy from thirty cents to fifty cents by a further levy of twenty cents on every hundred dollars of valuation of taxable property in the county, and application of such levy to the payment of the warrant for relator's judgment and other registered warrants against the county. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Justice Field:

On the 19th of November, 1879, the relator, Alfred Huidekoper, recovered in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern Division of the Western District of Missouri, a judgment against Macon County, in that State, for $28,088, and costs, upon interest coupons detached from certain bonds issued May 2, 1870, by that county to the Missouri and Mississippi Railroad Company under the authority of the 18th section of the Act incorporating the company, approved February 20, 1865. The judgment not having been paid, and pursuant to a mandate of the court, a warrant was issued, dated April 29, 1884, upon the treasurer of the county, directing him to pay to the relator $35,677.47 out of the general funds of the county in payment of that judgment. This warrant represented the judgment with interest and costs. It was on the same day presented for payment to the treasurer of the county, and its payment was refused for alleged want of funds.

The 18th section of the Act incorporating the Missouri and Mississippi Railroad Company provided that "it shall be lawful for the corporate authorities of any city or town, or the county court of any county, desiring to do so, to subscribe to the capital stock of said company, and may issue bonds therefor and levy a tax to pay the same not to exceed one twentieth of one per cent upon the assessed value of taxable property for each year." It was under the authority thus conferred that the County Court of Macon County subscribed for stock in that company and issued the bonds in payment of its subscription, upon coupons of which the judgment of the relator was recovered.

The laws of the State of Missouri existing at the time of the issue of the bonds and coupons, namely, May 2, 1870, authorized the County Court of Macon County to levy and collect annually a tax of one half of one per cent upon all the taxable wealth of the county for county revenue, in addition to the one twentieth of one per cent tax authorized by the charter of the railroad company.

In United States v. Clark County, 96 U. S. 211 [24: 628], it was held that bonds similar to those upon which the coupons were issued for 184 U. S.

which the judgment here was recovered, were debts of the county as fully as any other of its liabilities, and that if any balance remained due on them for principal or interest, after application of the proceeds of the specific tax of one twentieth of one per cent, the holders were entitled to its payment out of the general funds of the county. And in the decision of five cases arising upon similar bonds before the court at the October Term of 1888 (109 U. S. 229), it was held that the payment of any such balance was demandable out of funds raised by taxation for ordinary county uses.

It appears that for the year 1885 the County Court of Macon County ordered that the levy upon every one hundred dollars of valuation of taxable property in that county for county revenue should be thirty cents, instead of fifty cents authorized by law, and that the revenue should be apportioned as follows: to the salary fund, one third; to the contingent fund, one fifth; to the poor-house fund, one fifth; to the road and bridge fund, one sixth; and to the jury and election fund the balance,—and that its clerk certify that order to the treasurer. The relator thereupon made a demand upon the county to annul and rescind this order of apportionment, and to increase the tax levy for the current year of 1885 from thirty cents to the fifty cents authorized by law upon every one hundred dollars valuation of taxable property in the county, and to apply the proceeds of such tax to the payment of the relator's judgment and warrant. This demand being refused, he prayed for a further writ of mandamus directing the County Court and the justices thereof to make the order and take the proceedings demanded.

Subsequently, on motion of the relator, the court entered an order requiring the County Court of Macon County and its treasurer to make and file in court on the first Monday in March, 1886, full returns and statements under oath relative to the administration of the county revenue after the first of January, 1884, to the date of filing their returns, stating the value of the property assessed for the years 1884 and 1885, what taxes were levied thereon for county revenue and when, what amounts were collected on said levies, what dispositions were made of the amounts so collected, what subdivisions into special funds had been made of the county revenue, what payments had been made to each fund, and what balance remained on hand to the credit of each of the funds, and to the credit of the general fund, and what warrants had been theretofore issued and registered drawn on the general fund, and what, if any, payments had been made thereon.

In November, 1885, the County Court filed an amended return to the mandamus issued, its original return having been lost, admitting that the county is a municipal corporation whose financial affairs are administered by a county court, that the relator recovered the judgment stated, and procured the warrant on its treasurer in the manner alleged, that the warrant was unpaid, and that by the law of Missouri, at the time of the issue of the bonds, the County Court was authorized to levy and collect a tax of one half of one per cent upon all the taxable wealth of the county for county revenue, in addition to the one twentieth of one per cent authorized by the charter of the company. But it set up that the county had levied for the year 1885 upon all the taxable wealth of the county of every kind and description the full sum of fifty cents on the one hundred dollars valuation thereof as would appear by the exhibits which it presented, and made a part of its return, and stated that it had apportioned the revenue as above mentioned. It appeared also that the township boards for the several townships in that county had levied for township and road purposes for the year 1885 twenty cents on the one hundred dollars valuation of taxable property, and that the County Court had directed the clerk of the county to extend on the several tax books of the respective townships the rates which had been thus levied for township purposes. It was only in this way that the County Court had levied fifty cents on the hundred dollars of valuation of taxable property, that is, by treating as a part of such sum the amount which the township boards had levied for township and road purposes, namely, twenty cents on the one hundred dollars of valuation of taxable property.

It also appeared from that return that the amount of money remaining in the treasury of Macon County was $14,894.44, and that there were outstanding and unpaid warrants largely in excess of that sum, issued on the general fund of the county for the years 1884 and 1885, and that before the issue of the relator's warrant and its registration, a school-fund warrant for the sum of $7,848.90 had been issued by the county and registered.

The relator demurred to the return, and the circuit court sustained the demurrer, and ordered a peremptory mandamus to issue, compelling the County Court to annul the order apportioning the revenue for 1885 into separate and distinct funds, to increase the tax levy for that year from thirty cents to fifty cents by a further levy of twenty cents on every one hundred dollars of valuation of taxable property in the county, such levy to be made and collected with the regular annual levies required by law, and to apply the proceeds of such levy pro rata towards the payment of all registered warrants of even date and registration with relator's warrant, and to divide the surplus in the treasury of $14,894.44, after deducting therefrom the amount of the warrant in favor of the school fund, between the relator's warrant and other warrants of even date of registration with that warrant issued under and by virtue of mandamus proceedings in said circuit court.

A motion for a rehearing was denied. To review this judgment the case is brought to this court on writ of error.

Mr. Joseph Shippen, for defendant in error:

The court below was correct in ordering the annulling of the apportionment of the county revenue for the year 1885 into separate and distinct funds.

State v. Macon County Ct. 41 Mo. 453; Curren v. Arkansas, 56 U. S. 15 How. 820 (14: 712); U. S. v. Clark County, 96 U. S. 211 (24: 628).

Mr. Justice Field delivered the opinion of the court:

According to the law of Missouri under which the bonds of Macon County were issued to the Missouri and Mississippi Railroad Company, in payment of its subscription of stock to that company, as stated above, the balance due upon the judgment of the relator, after application of the moneys raised by the special tax of one twentieth of one per cent upon the assessed value of taxable property, stood on the same footing as any other liability of the county to be paid out of its general funds. To raise revenue to meet its expenses, which included that liability, the county was authorized to levy a tax of fifty cents on every one hundred dollars of valuation of taxable property in the county. United States v. Clark County, 96 U. S. 211 [26: 628]; Knox County Ct. v. United States, 109 U. S. 229 [27: 915].

In this case it appears that for the year 1885 the county had levied only thirty cents on every one hundred dollars of property, but it set up in its answer that it had levied fifty cents, treating the twenty cents which had been levied by the boards of townships for township and bridge purposes as part of the fifty cents. The township is a separate organization from that of the county, with authority to purchase and hold real estate and make contracts and control its corporate property, and its taxes levied for those purposes over which it has control can in no just sense be termed taxes for county purposes. There can be, therefore, no valid objection to the county's levy of an additional twenty cents on the one hundred dollars to make up the fifty cents which it is authorized to levy to meet its expenses and liabilities.

The apportioning of the funds collected to distinct and separate purposes does not affect the question presented. The proceeding is to obtain a further levy and the appropriation of its proceeds upon the judgment of the relator among other debts of the county.

That the surplus remaining in the treasury over the payment of the warrant for the school fund, which is of prior registration, should be appropriated, pro rata, upon all the warrants of even date and registration, is a simple measure of justice. All the warrants were issued and registered on the same day, and if they could only be paid in the order of their registration, and a payment could not be made on any one without its surrender, as contended, the treasurer would be obliged to retain the funds in his possession until he had a sufficient amount to pay them all before applying any portion thereof. As the circuit court said, this is an absurd position, and it held that whenever any reasonable amount has accumulated it should be distributed, and added that the order of the court would be a full protection to the officer. In that respect, as well as in other particulars, concurring with the court, we affirm its judgment.

Practice—second appeal, when taken—failure to file record, effect of—dismissal—time of filing record.

1. Where an appeal is taken to this court and the record is not filed at the term at which it is returnable, the appeal is of no avail, and a second appeal may be taken.
2. Where a second appeal is taken by its allowance by the circuit court within the two years it is operative if the second is filed during the succeeding term.
3. Neither the signing of the citation nor the approval of the bond is necessary to the jurisdiction of this court, but it is essential that the record be filed during the term at which the appeal is returnable.
4. It is appellant's duty to docket his case and file the record with the clerk of this court within the first six days of the term, where the decree was rendered thirty days before the commencement of the term.
5. If this is not done the appellee may have the case docketed and dismissed, but the court may, even then, permit appellant to docket the case and file the record after such dismissal.
6. If the case is not so docketed and dismissed by appellee, the appellant is in time if the record be filed during the return term.
7. The filing of the record in this case under the second appeal, during the term succeeding its allowance, though on one of the last days of that term and more than two years from the rendition of the decree, the appeal having been allowed within the two years, gave this court jurisdiction, which was not defeated by the failure to obtain a citation or give the bond within the two years.

APPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Louisiana in favor of defendant, dismissing the bill with costs.

On motion to dismiss. Denied.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. James McConnell and W. Hallet Phillips for motion.

Messrs. J. J. Johnson, A. H. Garland and H. J. May in opposition.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

The decree in this case was rendered on the 19th of June and a rehearing refused on the 6th of July, 1885. On the 8th of July of that year an order was entered allowing Mrs. Evans and her husband, who were complainants below, an appeal to this court upon giving bond with security as directed; and upon the same day the bond was filed and approved. Nothing further was done, and the record not having been filed in this court during the succeeding term the appeal became of no avail, because not duly prosecuted. Credit Co. v. Arkansas Cent. R. Co. 128 U. S. 258 [82:448]. On the 21st of May, 1887, Mr. and Mrs. Evans petitioned the circuit court to allow an appeal from said decree, which was on that day allowed and entered of record, on the petitioners furnishing bond conditioned according to law. This bond was accordingly given and approved on the 3d of October, 1887, and citation issued and served, returnable at October Term, 1887. The record was filed here on the 31st of March, 1888, one of the days of that term.

A motion is now made to dismiss the appeal, upon the grounds that it could not be granted, because the court had exhausted its power by the allowance of the first appeal, and because, if this were not so, the second appeal was not taken within two years from the entry of the decree. As to the first of these grounds it may be remarked, that when the term elapsed at which the first appeal was returnable, without the filing of the record, that appeal had spent its force, and the matter was open to the taking of a second appeal, as it would have been if the appellee had docketed the cause and had it dismissed. As to the second appeal, this was taken within the two years, by its allowance by the circuit court, and not lost, as appellants did not fail to file the record during the succeeding term. Neither the signing of the citation nor the approval of the bond was necessary to our jurisdiction, but it was essential that the record should be filed during the term at which the appeal was returnable.

Under the Ninth Rule, it is the duty of an appellant to docket his case and file the record with the clerk of this court within the first six days of the term, where the decree was rendered thirty days before the commencement of the term, and if this is not done, the appellee may have the case docketed and dismissed as therein provided, though even then the court may by order permit the appellant to docket the case and file the record after such dismissal. And it has always been held that if the case is not so docketed and dismissed by the appellee, the appellant is in time if the record be filed during the return term.

The filing of the transcript of record in this case under the second appeal, during the term succeeding its allowance, sufficed for the purposes of jurisdiction, which was not defeated by the failure to obtain a citation or give the bond within two years from the rendition of the decree. Edmonson v. Bloomshire, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 306 [19: 91]; Richardson v. Green, 180 U. S. 104 [32: 872], and cases cited.

The motion to dismiss is therefore denied.

Service of summons by publication, in suit as to lands—state law—jurisdiction—constructive service.

1. A State has power by statute to provide for the adjudication of titles to real estate within its limits as against nonresidents who are brought into court only by publication.

2. The procedure established by the State, in this respect, is binding upon the federal courts.

3. The disposition of immovable property, whether by deed, descent or any other mode, is exclusively subject to the government within whose jurisdiction the property is situated.

4. The court can acquire jurisdiction to quiet title by constructive service against nonresident defendants by publication where the statutes of the State provide for and allow such mode of service in such cases.

The mere fact that the real estate is within the territorial limits of the court's jurisdiction does not give the court jurisdiction of the property.

Eaton v. Badger, 33 N. H. 228.

Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court:

The statutes of Nebraska contain these sections: Sec. 57, chap. 73, Compiled Statutes 1885, p. 493: "An action may be brought and prosecuted to final decree, judgment or order, by any person or persons, whether in actual possession or not, claiming title to real estate, against any person or persons who claim an adverse estate or interest therein, for the purpose of determining such estate or interest, and quieting the title to said real estate." Sec. 58: "All such pleadings and proofs and subsequent proceedings shall be had in such action now pending or hereafter brought, as may be necessary to fully settle and determine the question of title between the parties to said real estate, and to decree the title to the same, or any part thereof, to the party entitled thereto; and the court may issue the appropriate order to carry such decree, judgment or order into effect." Sec. 77, Code of Civil Procedure, Compiled Statutes 1885, p. 637: "Service may be made by publication in either of the following cases: Fourth. In actions which relate to, or the subject of which is, real or personal property in this State, where any defendant has or claims a lien or interest, actual or contingent, therein, or the relief demanded consists wholly or partially in excluding him from any interest therein, and such defendant is a nonresident of the State or a foreign corporation." Sec. 78 of the Code: "Before service can be made by publication, an affidavit must be filed that service of a summons cannot be made within this State, on the defendant or defendants, to be served by publication, and that the case is one of those mentioned in the preceding section. When such affidavit is filed the party may proceed to make service by publication." Sec. 82 of the Code: "A party against whom a judgment or decree has been rendered without other service than by publication in a newspaper, may, at any time within five years after the date of the judgment or order, have the same opened and be let in to defend; . . . but the title to any property, the subject of the judgment or order sought to be opened, which by it, or in consequence of it, shall have passed to a purchaser in good faith, shall not be affected by any proceedings under this section, nor shall they affect the title to any property sold before judgment under an attachment." Sec. 429 of the Code: "When any judgment or decree shall be rendered for a conveyance, release or acquittance, in any court of this State, and the party or parties against whom the judgment or decree shall be rendered do not comply therewith within the time mentioned in said judgment or decree, such judgment or decree shall have the same operation and effect, and be as available, as if the conveyance, release or acquittance had been executed conformable to such judgment or decree."

Under these sections, in March, 1882, Charles L. Flint filed his petition in the proper court against Michael Hurley and another, alleging that he was the owner and in possession of the tracts of land in controversy in this suit; that he held title thereto by virtue of certain tax deeds, which were described; that the defendants claimed to have some title, estate, interest in or claim upon the lands by patent from the United States, or deed from the patentee, but that whatever title, estate or claim they had, or pretended to have, was divested by the said tax deeds, and was unjust, inequitable and a cloud upon plaintiff's title; and that this suit was brought for the purpose of quieting his title. The defendants were brought in by publication, a decree was entered in favor of Flint quieting his title, and it is conceded that all the proceedings were in full conformity with the statutory provisions above quoted.

The present suit is one in ejectment, between grantees of the respective parties to the foregoing proceedings to quiet title; and the question before us, arising upon a certificate of division of opinion between the trial judges, is whether the decree in such proceedings to quiet title, rendered in accordance with the provisions of the Nebraska statute, upon service duly authorized by them, was valid and operated to quiet the title in the plaintiff therein. In other words, has a State the power to provide by statute that the title to real estate within its limits shall be settled and determined by a suit in which the defendant, being a nonresident, is brought into court only by publication? The Supreme Court of Nebraska has answered this question in the affirmative—Watson v. Ulbrich, 18 Neb. 186, in which the court says: "The principal question to be determined is whether or not the decree in favor of Gray, rendered upon constructive service, is valid until set aside. No objection is made to the service, or any proceedings connected with it. The real estate in controversy was within the jurisdiction of the district court, and that court had authority, in a proper case, to render the decree confirming the title of Gray. In Castrique v. Imrie, L. R. 4 H. L. 414-429, Mr. Justice Blackburn says: 'We think the inquiry is, first, whether the subject matter was so situated as to be within the lawful control of the state under the authority of which the court sits; and, secondly, whether the sovereign authority of that state has conferred on the court jurisdiction to decide as to the disposition of the thing, and the court has acted within its jurisdiction. If these conditions are fulfilled, the adjudication is conclusive against all the world.' The court, therefore, in this case, having authority to render the decree, and jurisdiction of the subject matter, its decree is conclusive upon the property until vacated under the statutes or set aside."

Sec. 57, enlarging as it does the class of cases in which relief was formerly afforded by a court of equity in quieting the title to real property, has been sustained by this court, and held applicable to suits in the federal court. Holland v. Challen, 110 U. S. 15 [28:52]. But it is earnestly contended that no decree in such a case, rendered on service by publication only, is valid or can be recognized in the federal courts; and Hart v. Sansom, 110 U. S. 151 [28:101], is relied on as authority for this proposition. The propositions are, that an action to quiet title is a suit in equity; that equity acts upon the person; and that the person is not brought into court by service by publication alone.

While these propositions are doubtless correct as statements of the general rules respecting bills to quiet title, and proceedings in courts of equity, they are not applicable or controlling here. The question is not what a court of equity, by virtue of its general powers and in the absence of a statute, might do, but it is, What jurisdiction has a State over titles to real estate within its limits, and what jurisdiction may it give by statute to its own courts, to determine the validity and extent of the claims of nonresidents to such real estate? If a State has no power to bring a nonresident into its courts for any purposes by publication, it is impotent to perfect the titles of real estate within its limits held by its own citizens; and a cloud cast upon such title by a claim of a nonresident will remain for all time a cloud, unless such nonresident shall voluntarily come into its courts for the purpose of having it adjudicated. But no such imperfections attend the sovereignty of the State. It has control over property within its limits; and the condition of ownership of real estate therein, whether the owner be stranger or citizen, is subject to its rules concerning the holding, the transfer, liability to obligations, private or public, and the modes of establishing titles thereto. It cannot bring the person of a nonresident within its limits—its process goes not out beyond its borders—but it may determine the extent of his title to real estate within its limits; and for the purpose of such determination may provide any reasonable methods of imparting notice. The well-being of every community requires that the title to real estate therein shall be secure, and that there be convenient and certain methods of determining any unsettled questions respecting it. The duty of accomplishing this is local in its nature; it is not a matter of national concern or vested in the general government; it remains with the State; and as this duty is one of the State, the manner of discharging it must be determined by the State, and no proceeding which it provides can be declared invalid, unless in conflict with some special inhibitions of the Constitution, or against natural justice. So it has been held repeatedly that the procedure established by the State, in this respect, is binding upon the federal courts. In United States v. Fox, 94 U. S. 815, 820 [24: 192], it was said: "The power of the State to regulate the tenure of real property within her limits, and the modes of its acquisition and transfer, and the rules of its descent, and the extent to which a testamentary disposition of it may be exercised by its owners, is undoubted. It is an established principle of law, everywhere recognized, arising from the necessity of the case, that the disposition of immovable property, whether by deed, descent or any other mode, is exclusively subject to the government within whose jurisdiction the property is situated." See also McCormick v. Sullivan, 23 U. S. 10 Wheat. 202 [6: 308]; Beauregard v. New Orleans, 59 U. S. 18 How. 497 [15: 469]; Snyder v. Williamson, 65 U. S. 24 How. 427 [16: 742]; Christian Union v. Yount, 101 U. S. 352 [25: 888]; Lathrop v. Commercial Bank, 8 Dana (Ky.) 114.

Passing to an examination of the decisions on the precise question, it may safely be affirmed that the general, if not the uniform, ruling of state courts has been in favor of the power of the State to thus quiet the title to real estate within its limits. In addition to the case from Nebraska, heretofore cited, and which only followed prior rulings in that State—Scudder v. Sargent, 15 Neb. 102; Keene v. Sallenbach, 15 Neb. 200—reference may be had to a few cases. In Cloyd v. Trotter, 118 Ill. 391, the Supreme Court of Illinois held that under the statutes of that State the court could acquire jurisdiction to quiet title by constructive service against nonresident defendants. A similar ruling as to jurisdiction acquired in a suit to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent as to creditors was affirmed in Adams v. Coules, 95 Mo. 501. In Wunzel v. Landry, 39 La. Ann. 812, it was held that a nonresident party could be brought into an action of partition by constructive service. In Ewing v. Lower, 120 Ind. 289, the Supreme Court of Indiana thus expressed its views on the question: "It is also argued that the decree in the action to quiet title, set forth in the special finding, is in personam and not in rem, and that the court had no power to render such decree on publication. While it may be true that such decree is not in rem, strictly speaking, yet it must be conceded that it fixed and settled the title to the land then in controversy, and to that extent partakes of the nature of a judgment in rem. But we do not deem it necessary to a decision of this case to determine whether the decree is in personam or in rem. The action was to quiet the title to the land then involved, and to remove therefrom certain apparent liens. Section 318, Rev. Stat. 1881, expressly authorizes the rendition of such a decree on publication." This was since the decision in Hart v. Sansom, as was also the case of Dillon v. Heller, 89 Kan. 599, in which Mr. Justice Valentine, for the court, says: "For the present we shall assume that the statutes authorizing service of summons by publication were strictly complied with in the present case, and then the only question to be considered is whether the statutes themselves are valid. Or, in other words, we think the question is this: Has the State any power, through the Legislature and the courts, or by any other means or instrumentalities, to dispose of or control property in the State belonging to nonresident owners out of the State, where such nonresident owners will not voluntarily surrender jurisdiction of their persons to the State or to the courts of the State, and where the most urgent public policy and justice require that the State and its courts should assume jurisdiction over such property? Power of this kind has already been exercised, not only in Kansas, but in all the other States. Lands of nonresident owners, as well as of resident owners, are taxed and sold for taxes; and the owners thereby may totally be deprived of such lands, although no notice is ever given to such owners, except a notice by publication, or some other notice of no greater value, force or efficacy. Beebe v. Doster, 36 Kan. 666, 675, 677. Mortgage liens, mechanics' liens, materialmen's liens and other liens are foreclosed against nonresident defendants upon service by publication only. Lands of nonresident defendants are attached and sold to pay their debts; and, indeed, almost any kind of action may be instituted and maintained against nonresidents to the extent of any interest in property they may have in Kansas, and the jurisdiction to hear and determine in this kind of cases may be obtained wholly and entirely by publication. Gillespie v. Thomas, 28 Kan. 138; Walkenhorst v. Lewis, 24 Kan. 420; Rowe v. Palmer, 29 Kan. 337; Venable v. Dutch, 37 Kan. 515, 519. All the States by proper statutes authorize actions against nonresidents, and service of summons therein by publication only, or service in some other form no better; and, in the nature of things, such must be done in every jurisdiction, in order that full and complete justice may be done where some of the parties are nonresidents. We think a sovereign State has the power to do just such a thing. All things within the territorial boundaries of a sovereignty are within its jurisdiction; and, generally, within its own boundaries a sovereignty is supreme. Kansas is supreme, except so far as its power and authority are limited by the Constitution and laws of the United States; and within the Constitution and laws of the United States the courts of Kansas may have all the jurisdiction over all persons and things within the State which the Constitution and laws of Kansas may give to them; and the mode of obtaining this jurisdiction may be prescribed wholly, entirely and exclusively by the statutes of Kansas. To obtain jurisdiction of everything within the State of Kansas, the statutes of Kansas may make service by publication as good as any other kind of service."

Turning now to the decisions of this court: In Bonwell v. Otis, 50 U. S. 9 How. 336 [13: 164], was presented a case of a bill for a specific performance and an accounting, and in which was a decree for specific performance and accounting; and an adjudication that the amount due on such accounting should operate as a judgment at law. Service was had by publication, the defendants being nonresidents. The validity of a sale under such judgment was in question; the court held that portion of the decree, and the sale made under it, void; but with reference to jurisdiction in a case for specific performance alone, made these observations: "Jurisdiction is acquired in one of two modes: first, as against the person of the defendant, by the service of process; or, second, by a proceeding against the property of the defendant within the jurisdiction of the court. In the latter case the defendant is not personally bound by the judgment, beyond the property in question. And it is immaterial whether the proceeding against the property be by an attachment or bill in chancery. It must be substantially a proceeding in rem. A bill for the specific execution of a contract to convey real estate is not strictly a proceeding in rem, in ordinary cases; but where such a procedure is authorized by statute, on publication, without personal service or process, it is substantially of that character."

In the case of Parker v. Overman, 59 U. S. 18 How. 187 [15: 318], the question was presented under an Arkansas statute, a statute authorizing service by publication. While the decision on the merits was adverse, the court thus states the statute, the case and the law applicable to the proceedings under it: "It had its origin in the state court of Dallas County, Arkansas, sitting in chancery. It is a proceeding under a statute of Arkansas, prescribing a special remedy for the confirmation of sales of land by a sheriff or other public officer. Its object is to quiet the title. The purchaser at such sales is authorized to institute proceedings by a public notice in some newspaper, describing the land, stating the authority under which it was sold, and 'calling on all persons who can set up any right to the lands so purchased, in consequence of any informality, or any irregularity or illegality connected with the sale, to show cause why the sale so made should not be confirmed.' In case no one appears to contest the regularity of the sale, the court is required to confirm it, on finding certain facts to exist. But if opposition be made, and it should appear that the sale was made 'contrary to law,' it became the duty of the court to annul it. The judgment or decree, in favor of the grantee in the deed, operates 'as a complete bar against any and all persons who may thereafter claim such land, in consequence of any informality or illegality in the proceedings.' It is a very great evil in any community to have titles to land insecure and uncertain; and especially in new States, where its result is to retard the settlement and improvement of their vacant lands. Where such lands have been sold for taxes there is a cloud on the title of both claimants, which deters the settler from purchasing from either. A prudent man will not purchase a law suit, or risk the loss of his money and labor upon a litigious title. The Act now under consideration was intended to remedy this evil. It is in substance a bill of peace. The jurisdiction of the court over the controversy is founded on the presence of the property; and, like a proceeding in rem, it becomes conclusive against the absent claimant, as well as the present contestant. As was said by the court in Clark v. Smith, 88 U. S. 13 Pet. 203 [10: 127], with regard to a similar law of Kentucky: 'A State has an undoubted power to regulate and protect individual rights to her soil, and declare what shall form a cloud over titles; and, having so declared, the courts of the United States, by removing such clouds, are only applying an old practice to a new equity created by the Legislature, having its origin in the peculiar condition of the country. The State Legislatures have no authority to prescribe forms and modes of proceeding to the courts of the United States; yet, having created a right, and at the same time prescribed the remedy to enforce it, if the remedy prescribed be substantially consistent with the ordinary modes of proceeding on the chancery side of the federal courts, no reason exists why it should not be pursued in the same form as in the state court.' In the case before us the proceeding, though special in its form, is in its nature but the application of a well-known chancery remedy; it acts upon the land, and may be conclusive as to the title of a citizen of another State."

In the case of Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 727, 784 [24: 565, 570, 573], in which the question of jurisdiction in cases of service by publication was considered at length, the court, by Mr. Justice Field, thus stated the law: "Such service may also be sufficient in cases where the object of the action is to reach and dispose of property in the State, or of some interest therein, by enforcing a contract or lien respecting the same, or to partition it among different owners, or, when the public is a party, to condemn and appropriate it for a public purpose. In other words, such service may answer in all actions which are substantially proceedings in rem. . . . It is true that, in a strict sense, a proceeding in rem is one taken directly against property, and has for its object the disposition of the property, without reference to the title of individual claimants, but, in a larger and more general sense, the terms are applied to actions between parties, where the direct object is to reach and dispose of property owned by them, or of some interest therein. Such are cases commenced by attachment against the property of debtors, or instituted to partition real estate, foreclose a mortgage or enforce a lien. So far as they affect property in the State, they are substantially proceedings in rem in the broader sense which we have mentioned." These cases were all before the decision of Hurt v. Sansom.

Passing to a case later than that (Huling v. Kaw Valley R. & Imp. Co. 130 U. S. 539 [32: 1045]), it was held that, in proceedings commenced under a statute for the condemnation of lands for railroad purposes, publication was sufficient notice to a nonresident. In the opinion, Mr. Justice Miller, speaking for the court, says: "Of course, the statute goes upon the presumption that, since all the parties cannot be served personally with such notice, the publication, which is designed to meet the eyes of everybody, is to stand for such notice. The publication itself is sufficient if it had been in the form of a personal service upon the party himself within the county. Nor have we any doubt that this form of warning owners of property to appear and defend their interests, where it is subject to demands for public use when authorized by statute, is sufficient to subject the property to the action of the tribunals appointed by proper authority to determine those matters. The owner of real estate, who is a nonresident of the State within which the property lies, cannot evade the duties and obligations which the law imposes upon him in regard to such property, by his absence from the State. Because he cannot be reached by some process of the courts of the State, which, of course, have no efficacy beyond their own borders, he cannot therefore hold his property exempt from the liabilities, duties and obligations which the State has a right to impose upon such property; and, in such cases, some substituted form of notice has always been held to be a sufficient warning to the owner, of the proceedings which are being taken under the authority of the State to subject his property to those demands and obligations. Otherwise the burdens of taxation, and the liability of such property to be taken under the power of eminent domain, would be useless in regard to a very large amount of property in every State of the Union." In this connection, it is well to bear in mind that, by the statutes of the United States, in proceedings to enforce any legal or equitable lien, or to remove a cloud upon the title of real estate, nonresident holders of real estate may be brought in by publication (18 Stat. 472); and the validity of this Statute, and the jurisdiction conferred by publication, has been sustained by this court. Mellen v. Moline M. Iron Works, 131 U. S. 352 [33: 178].

These various decisions of this court establish that, in its judgment, a State has power by statute to provide for the adjudication of titles to real estate within its limits as against nonresidents who are brought into court only by publication; and that is all that is necessary to sustain the validity of the decree in question in this case.

Nothing inconsistent with this doctrine was decided in Hart v. Sansom, supra. The question there was as to the effect of a judgment. That judgment was rendered upon a petition in ejectment against one Wilkerson. Besides the allegations in the petition to sustain the ejectment against Wilkerson, were allegations that other defendants named had executed deeds, which were described, which were clouds upon plaintiffs' title; and in addition an allegation that the defendant Hart set up some pretended claim of title to the land. This was the only averment connecting him with the controversy. Publication was made against some of the defendants, Hart being among the number. There was no appearance, but judgment upon default. That judgment was, that the plaintiffs recover of the defendants the premises described; "that the several deeds in plaintiffs' petition mentioned be, and the same are hereby, annulled and canceled, and for naught held, and that the cloud be thereby removed;" and for costs, and that execution issue therefor. This was the whole extent of the judgment and decree. Obviously in all this there was no adjudication affecting Hart. As there was no allegation that he was in possession, the judgment for possession did not disturb him; and the decree for cancellation of the deeds referred specifically to the deeds mentioned in the petition, and there was no allegation in the petition that Hart had anything to do with those deeds. There was no general language in the decree quieting the title as against all the defendants; so there was nothing which could be construed as working any adjudication against Hart as to his claim and title to the land. He might apparently be affected by the judgment for costs, but they had no effect upon the title. So the court held, for it said: "It is difficult to see how any part of that judgment (except for costs) is applicable to Hart; for that part which is for recovery of possession certainly cannot apply to Hart, who was not in possession; and that part which removes the cloud upon the plaintiffs' title appears to be limited to the cloud created by the deeds mentioned in the petition, and the petition does not allege, and the verdict negatives, that Hart held any deed."

An additional ground assigned for the decision was that if there was any judgment (except for costs) against Hart, it was, upon the most liberal construction, only a decree removing the cloud created by his pretended claim of title, and therefore, according to the ordinary and undisputed rule in equity, was not a judgment in rem, establishing against him a title in the land. But the power of the State, by appropriate legislation, to give a greater effect to such a decree was distinctly recognized, both by the insertion of the words "unless otherwise expressly provided by statute," and by adding: "It would doubtless be within the power of the State in which the land lies to provide by statute that if the defendant is not found within the jurisdiction, or refuses to make or to cancel a deed, this should be done in his behalf by a trustee appointed by the court for that purpose." And of course, it follows that if a State has power to bring in a nonresident by publication for the purpose of appointing a trustee, it can in like manner bring him in and subject him to a direct decree. There was presented no statute of the State of Texas providing directly for quieting the title of lands within the State, as against nonresidents, brought in only by service by publication, such as we have in the case at bar, and the only statute cited by counsel or referred to in the opinion was a mere general provision for bringing in nonresident defendants in any case by publication; and it was not the intention of the court to overthrow that series of earlier authorities heretofore referred to, which affirm the power of the State, by suitable statutory proceedings, to determine the titles to real estate within its limits, as against a nonresident defendant, notified only by publication.

It follows, from these considerations, that the first question presented in the certificate of division, the one heretofore stated, and which is decisive of this case, must be answered in the affirmative.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed, and the case remanded for further proceedings in accordance with the views herein expressed.

JOHN C. DEPUTRON, Plff. in Err.,
v.

ROWENA YOUNG.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 241-260.)

Nebraska practice—jurisdiction as to parties—collusive suit—dismissal of suit—review of findings—title by patent—tax deed, when void—color of title—possession of land—constructive and mixed possession—power to convey—proof—estoppel—title of purchaser at execution sale—vacating order of confirmation—rights of purchaser.

1. Where the averment of diverse citizenship was not controverted by the answer, the averment must be taken as true under the practice in Nebraska.
2. Where the jurisdictional allegation is not traversed, no question involving the capacity of the parties in the cause to litigate in the circuit court can be raised before the jury. The court may proceed to judgment, although the special verdict contains no finding upon this point.
3. The objection that the title had been placed in plaintiff collusively, to enable the suit to be brought in the United States court, should be raised at the first opportunity; a delay to raise it, such as a delay for a year and a half after a second trial until motions for new trial by both parties on special verdict, will be considered on motion to dismiss on that ground, although defendant avers ignorance of the facts before the trial.
4. A suit cannot properly be dismissed by a circuit court of the United States, as not involving a controversy within the jurisdiction of the court, unless the facts when made to appear on the record create a legal certainty of that conclusion.
5. This court cannot review the action of the circuit court in reference to findings of the jury objected to, and, no exceptions having been saved, is restricted to the question whether there was error in giving judgment for the plaintiff upon the facts as found.
6. The finding that plaintiff obtained title to the land by patent from the United States to his grantor, who conveyed to plaintiff, makes out his title, and to prevent his recovery defendant must prove some affirmative defense alleged.
7. In Nebraska, a tax deed not executed by the treasurer under his seal of office is void.
8. A tax deed, though void upon its face, is sufficient color of title in Nebraska to support an adverse possession to the property; the possession, however, which bars a recovery must be continuous, uninterrupted, open, notorious, actual, exclusive and adverse.
9. Where the rightful owner is in the actual occupancy of a part of his tract, he is in the constructive and legal possession and seisin of the whole, unless he is dispossessed by actual occupation and dispossession.
10. Where the possession is mixed, the legal seisin is according to the legal title, and there can be no constructive possession in defendant, even if that might exist if he had actual possession of a part and no one had possession of the remainder.
11. In the case of a naked power to convey, not coupled with an interest, the law requires that every prerequisite to the exercise of that power should precede it.
12. If the validity of a deed depends on an act in pais, the party claiming under it is bound to prove the performance of the act.
13. If the power to convey is general and the conveyance is a fraud upon the power, no estoppel arises in favor of the grantee unless he paid value without notice.

14. In Nebraska, the title of a purchaser at an execution sale depends not alone upon his bid or payment of the purchase money, but upon the confirmation of the sale, and the sale, though temporarily confirmed, may be set aside, where no rights of a third party accrue in the mean time.
15. Where the order of confirmation was vacated before there was any change in the relation of the parties, the sheriff's deed fell with it.
16. The purchaser can move for confirmation or to set the sale aside, and can appeal from the order thereon, and may be compelled to perform his bid, and is concluded by the result of the proceedings to confirm or annul the same.

Submitted Jan. 6, 1890. Decided Mar. 10, 1890.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Nebraska to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action of ejectment. Affirmed.

Opinion below, 37 Fed. Rep. 46.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

This was an action of ejectment brought in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Nebraska, June 14, 1884, by Rowena Young, a citizen of Ohio, against John C. Deputron, a citizen of Nebraska, to recover certain premises in the petition named. The defendant answered, denying plaintiff's ownership and right to possession; and setting up title under a tax deed and purchase in good faith and without notice for $10,000 paid, being the full value, and ten years' adverse possession. To this answer a reply, specifically denying its averments, was filed by the plaintiff. At the November Term, 1885, of said court, a trial was had, which resulted in a verdict for the defendant and judgment thereon, which was set aside on motion of plaintiff, and a new trial awarded. In March, 1883, the cause was tried a second time, and a special verdict of forty-one findings rendered by the jury as set forth in the margin.*

*1st. That Jane Y. Irwin obtained title to said lands by patent from the United States December 15, 1862, and on the 9th of August, 1867, conveyed the same to William P. Young, who on the 5th of February, 1874, reconveyed the same to Jane Y. Irwin, who, on the 11th day of June, 1884, conveyed said lands to the plaintiff, Rowena Young.

2d. On the 31st of March, 1874, Jane Y. Irwin and husband entered into a contract with N. S. Scott, Samuel Boyd and Milton La Master for the selling and subdivision of said lands.

3d. And said Scott, Boyd and La Master soon after entered upon said lands under said contract, and staked out the block corners and street intersections, being engaged in the survey on the lands in controversy and other lands for a period of about two months, finishing their survey about the last of May, 1874.

4th. On the 12th of August, 1875, Jane Y. Irwin and her husband executed a power of attorney to William T. Donovan to enable him to make conveyances to purchasers when sales were made by Scott, Boyd and La Master, and to facilitate their operations under their contract of March 31st, 1874.

5th. We find that there was no assessment of the land in controversy for taxes in the year 1867, nor was the same borne upon the tax-list of that year.

6th. We find the tax deed of June 12, 1871, executed by John Cadman, county treasurer, was not sealed by the county treasurer with his official seal, nor did the county treasurer then have an official seal.

7th. We find that the county treasurer's deed exe-

'The defendant excepted to the tenth, seventeenth and nineteenth findings, and moved to set aside each of the same, and for a judgment for the defendant and against the plaintiff upon the verdict as thus amended; and the plaintiff filed his motion for judgment on the verdict according to the prayer of the petition. On the 10th day of May, 1886, these motions, coming on to be heard, were submitted to the court on briefs to be filed within sixty days, and on the 24th day of June, 1886, the court entered an order by agreement of the parties, that the time to settle and sign a bill of exceptions be, and the same was thereby, extended to the second Monday in November following. The record contains no such bill of exceptions. On the 9th day of November, 1887, Deputron filed his petition, alleging that Rowena Young was not the real party in interest, and that the title of the property in controversy was collusively and fraudulently transferred to her for the sole purpose of vesting apparent jurisdiction in the federal court; that the case did not really and substantially involve a dispute or controversy properly within its jurisdiction; and that Rowena Young had been improperly and collusively made a plaintiff for the purpose of creating a case cognizable under the laws of the United States; and praying that the cause be dismissed; to which the plaintiff answered, denying any fraud and collusion, and averring that she was the real party interested. On the 16th day of November, 1888, the following order was entered:

"This cause, coming on for hearing on the petition and application of the defendant to dismiss for want of jurisdiction, was tried by the court, Messrs. Hall and Webster appearing for the plaintiff and Messrs. Lamb, Ricketts and Wilson and Harwood, Ames and Kelly for the defendant; whereupon, after hearing the evidence and argument of counsel, and being fully advised in the premises, it is now, on this day, ordered and adjudged by the court that said petition and application be and the same are hereby denied; to which ruling and order of the court said defendant, by his attorneys, then and there duly excepted."

An opinion on the merits was given by the circuit judge December 17, 1888 (37 Fed. Rep. 46), and thereupon the motion of the defendant for judgment was overruled, the motion of the plaintiff for judgment sustained, and judgment entered that the plaintiff recover from the defendant the real property described in the petition and the costs of the action. A bill of exceptions containing the petitions, answers and proceedings, and evidence adduced upon the question of jurisdiction, was signed and filed in due time. The pending writ of error was then sued out from this court.

Messrs. Walter J. Lamb, Arnott C. Ricketts and Henry H. Wilson, for plaintiff in error:

Where the subject matter of the controversy has been transferred to a nominal plaintiff who has no real interest in it, and the litigation is carried on and controlled by the grantor or assignor for his own use and benefit, such cuted by R. A. Bain, dated September 15, 1871, was not sealed by the county treasurer, nor did the county treasurer then have an official seal.

8th. We find the forty acres of land sold by the sheriff to E. J. Curson and conveyed by deed October 10, 1877, was at that time of the value of $20,000.

9th. That the confirmation of sale was set aside by the District Court of Lancaster County, in which it had been made November 3, 1877, before E. J. Curson had made any conveyance to anyone, and was never afterwards confirmed.

10th. The jury find that Nelson C. Brock and his grantees had mixed possession of the west half of the southwest quarter of section 24, township 10, range 6, in Lancaster County, Nebraska, for ten years prior to the commencement of this suit, but the jury find that parties claiming under defendants' grantors held portions of said property and parties holding under plaintiff's grantors held portions of said property, so that said possession was in controversy and disputed and mixed down to the year 1877.

11th. That up to the year 1876, the said defendants and their grantors had mixed possession of the land in dispute, to wit, the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 24, township 10, range 6, but said land was open, vacant and unoccupied, except by the city pest-house, and was used as a common.

12th. The jury also find that parties held mixed possession of portions of the west half of the southwest quarter of section 24, township 10, range 6, during the years 1874 and 1875, who did not attorn to or acknowledge possession in either the plaintiff or the defendants or anyone under or by whom they claim.

13th. The jury find that the conveyance from Jane Y. Irwin and John Irwin by William T. Donovan, attorney-in-fact, to J. P. Lantz was a fraud upon the power held by said Donovan, and was given by Donovan and taken by Lantz with the intention of defrauding Jane Y. Irwin, and that Samuel W. Little had full knowledge of such facts, and procured such conveyance to be made with such knowledge and design.

14th. That the said deed by Donovan to Lantz and the deed of same by Lantz to Little were excuted at the same time and were parts of one transaction, and that the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 24, township 10, range 6, was on the 25th day of October, 1879, worth $30,000, and that the balance of the land then by Donovan conveyed would exceed $70,000 in value at that time.

15th. That during the years 1874, 1875 and 1876 parties holding under the grantors of plaintiff held portions of the west half of the southwest quarter of section 24, township 10, range 6.

16th. We find that all the defendants had full knowledge of the revocation of the power of attorney aforesaid upon the record by Jane Y. Irwin, and of the facts therein stated prior to any purchase made by them or either of them.

17th. That one N. C. Brock, through whom the defendant traces one chain of his title, on the 12th day of June, 1871, received from the county treasurer of Lancaster County, Nebraska, a tax deed of that date of the north half of and 20 acres off the west side of the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 24, township 10, range 6 east, in Lancaster County, Nebraska, the premises in controversy being in the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter aforesaid, which tax deed purported to be issued for the taxes assessed against the above-described parcels of land, respectively, for the year 1867, which tax deed was on the 18th day of June, 1871, recorded in the county clerk's office of Lancaster County, Nebraska.

18th. That on the 15th day of December, 1871, the county treasurer of Lancaster County, Nebraska, delivered to said Nelson C. Brock a second tax deed of that date covering the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 24, township 10, range 6 east, in Lancaster County, Nebraska, including the property in dispute, which deed was issued for the tax of the year 1868, and which tax deed was on the 18th day of December, 1871, recorded in the county clerk's office of Lancaster County, Nebraska.

19th. That on the 18th day of December, 1871, said Nelson C. Brock made, executed and delivered to one Charles T. Boggs a lease in writing of that date of the north half of and the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 24, township 10, transfer will be held colorable only and vests no jurisdiction in the federal courts.

Williams v. Nottawa, 104 U. S. 211 (26: 720); Haves v. Oakland, 104 U. S. 459 (26: 831); Detroit v. Dean, 106 U. S. 541 (27: 301); Hayden v. Manning, 106 U. S. 586 (27: 306); Farmington v. Pillsbury, 114 U. S. 188 (29: 114); Little v. Giles, 118 U. S. 602 (30: 271); Bernards Twp. v. Stebbins, 109 U. S. 335 (27: 962); Greenwalt v. Tucker, 10 Fed. Rep. 884; *Coffin v. This want of jurisdiction will not be varied or cured by going to trial without objection, and this court when satisfied that the apparent jurisdiction of the circuit court was fraudulently obtained will reverse the judgment and dismiss the case.

Cashman v. Amador & S. Canal Co. 118 U. S. 58 (30: 72).

Objections to the jurisdiction never come too late and will be raised by the court on its own motion.

Hilton v. Dickinson, 108 U. S. 165 (27: 688); Grace v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 109 U. S. 278 (27: 932); Cameron v. Hodges, 127 U. S. 825 (32: 183); Chapman v. Barney, 129 U. S. 681 (32: 801).

After verdict and before judgment the jurisdiction may be called in question by motion or by pleading tendering an issue on facts dehors the record.

Hartog v. Memory, 116 U. S. 588 (29: 725); Greenwalt v. Tucker, 10 Fed. Rep. 884.

Badges of a colorable transfer for the purpose of vesting the federal courts with apparent jurisdiction are: (1) want of knowledge on the part of the plaintiff of the property; (2) indifference of the grantee and activity of the grantor in the suit; (3) want or inadequacy of consideration; (4) grantor's control of the property after the alleged transfer; (5) the family relationship of the grantee and grantor; (6) the non-production of the correspondence by which the transfer was effected; (7) the grantor furnishing means to conduct the litigation; (8) the fact that the petition was neither signed nor sworn to by the nominal plaintiff, and even the answer to the petition of the defendant below to dismiss was filed without any verification whatever.

Hayden v. Manning, 106 U. S. 587 (27: 306); Coffin v. Haggin, 11 Fed. Rep. 220; M'Lean v. Clark, 81 Fed. Rep. 504; Little v. Giles, 118 U. S. 606 (30: 272); Haves v. Oakland, 104 U. A finding as to the citizenship of the parties was necessary to enable the court to render judgment.

Halsted v. Buster, 119 U. S. 841 (30: 463); Menard v. Goggan, 121 U. S. 253 (30: 914); Eberhart v. Huntsville, 120 U. S. 223 (30: 628); Chapman v. Barney, 129 U. S. 681 (32: 801).

All the facts necessary to a recovery must be found in the special verdict, or the judgment will be reversed.

Chesapeake Ins. Co. v. Stark, 10 U. S. 6 Cranch, 273 (3: 321); Barnes v. Williams, 24 U. S. 11 Wheat. 415 (6: 508); Prentice v. Zane, 49 range 6 east, in Lancaster County, Nebraska, for the term of two years from that date, which lease contained a leave or license to the lessee to remove all buildings placed upon said premises by him on or before the termination of said lease, which said lease was recorded in the county clerk's office of Lancaster County, Nebraska, on the 2d day of January, 1872.

20th. That on the 18th day of December, 1873, the said Nelson C. Brock made, executed and delivered to said Charles T. Boggs a second lease in writing of that date of the north half and the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 24, township 10, range 6 east, in Lancaster County, Nebraska, for the term of two years from that date, which said lease contained a similar provision permitting the lessee to remove all buildings and improvements by him erected or permitted to be erected on said premises off from the same at any time before the expiration of the said term therein granted, which lease was on the 5th day of January, 1874, recorded in the county clerk's office of Lancaster County, Nebraska.

21st. That in the month of December, 1871, the said Charles T. Boggs, claiming title under the said lease first aforesaid, entered into the mixed possession of the said premises by assuming control and ownership over the same, and by collecting rents from squatters and persons then located upon said premises, and subleased other portions of said premises, and continued to exercise mixed possession of said premises, down to the time he yielded his mixed possession of the same to Samuel W. Little, and that he paid the rent to N. C. Brock for the said premises during the terms of the two leases above mentioned.

22d. That at the expiration of his term under said leases he yielded his mixed possession of the said premises to Samuel W. Little.

23d. That on the 18th day of May, 1874, said Nelson C. Brock and his wife, by their deed of quit-claim, conveyed all the said premises, the north half of the southwest quarter and the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 24, township 10, range 6 east, to Samuel W. Little, which deed was duly recorded in the county clerk's office of Lancaster County, Nebraska, on the 26th day of May, 1874.

24th. That in or about the month of May, 1873, Charles T. Boggs subleased the north half of the southwest quarter of section 24, township 10, range 6 east, to one D. A. Gilbert, who, on or about that date, entered upon the mixed possession of the same and erected a ranch for cows, or milk ranch, on the northwest quarter of said quarter section, all the said north half of said southwest quarter being at the time he entered therein wholly vacant and unoccupied lands, and that he continued under said lease in the mixed possession and occupation of the same until in or about the year 1878, when he moved off his cattle ranch and surrendered his mixed possession of the same at the instance of S. W. Little, having during that period attorned and paid rent to Charles T. Boggs.

25th. That in the year 1876 Samuel W. Little began breaking up and actually improving the northeast quarter of said quarter-section and erected windmills and placed other valuable improvements thereon, planted trees and shrubbery and set out hedges and other fences, and thence, until he delivered his mixed possession of the said property to his several grantees, had the mixed possession of the said premises, said northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 24, township 10, range 6 east.

26th. That on the 19th day of May, 1877, in the District Court of Lancaster County, in the State of Nebraska, at the April Term of the said court, in a certain action therein pending, wherein Milo H. Sessions was plaintiff and John Irwin and Jane Y. Irwin were defendants, a judgment was obtained in the said action in favor of the said H. M. Sessions and against said John Irwin and Jane Y. Irwin by the consideration of said court, wherein it was considered by said court that the said plaintiff therein should recover from and against the said defendants, John Irwin and Jane Y. Irwin, the principal sum of $350, besides costs therein, taxed at the sum of $41.23, and for which said sums execution was awarded out of the said court; that thereafter execution was issued upon said judgment against the said John Irwin and Jane Y. Irwin, and the same coming to the hands of the sheriff of the said county, for want of goods and chattels whereon to levy the said writ, he seized and caused to be appraised, advertised and sold as the property of the said Jane Y. Irwin the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 24, township 10, range 6, to one E. J. Curson, for the sum of $30; that thereafter he made due return of his said sale unto the said district court; and afterwards on the 2d day of October, 1877, the following proceedings were had in the said court, to wit: "H. M. Sessions against John Irwin and Jane Y. Irwin. This case comes on upon motion of plaintiff for confirmation of sale heretofore had in this case, and it is hereby ordered by the court that cause be shown by Tuesday next, October 9th, why sale should not be confirmed."

That afterwards, on the 10th day of October, 1877, that being the 9th day of the October, 1877, Term of said court, the following proceedings were had in said action therein: "H. M. Sessions v. John Irwin and Jane Y. Irwin. This case comes on upon the motion of plaintiff for confirmation of sale heretofore had under former order of this court, and the court, upon a careful examination of the proceedings thereof, finds that the same have been had in all respects in conformity to law and the orders of this court. It is ordered that the said proceedings and sale be, and they are hereby, approved and confirmed; and it is further ordered by the court that the said sheriff convey to the purchaser by deed in fee simple the lands and tenements so sold." That afterwards and on the 10th day of October, 1877, pursuant to the foregoing proceedings, Sam. McClay, sheriff of said county, made, executed and delivered to said E. J. Curson, purchaser, a sheriff's deed of conveyance of the said premises, the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 24, township 10, range 6 east, in Lancaster County, Nebraska; which deed was by the said E. J. Curson filed and recorded in the county clerk's office of Lancaster County, Nebraska, on the 10th day of October, 1877, at 5 o'clock P. M.

27th. That on the 9th day of November, 1877, said Elijah J. Curson and Anna M. Curson, his wife, by deed of general warranty and for the consideration of the sum of $30, expressed to be in hand paid, granted, bargained, sold and conveyed the said premises, the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 24, in township 10, range 6 east, to Samuel W. Little; which deed of conveyance was, on the 26th day of November, 1877, filed and recorded in the county clerk's office of Lancaster County, Nebraska.

28th. On the 12th of August, 1875, Jane Y. Irwin and her husband executed a power of attorney to William T. Donovan to enable him to make conveyances to purchasers when sales were made by Scott, Boyd and La Master, and to facilitate their operations under their contract of March 31st, 1874.

29th. That on the 25th day of October, 1879, the said Jane Y. Irwin and John Irwin, by W. T. Donovan, their attorney-in-fact, for the purported consideration, as expressed upon the face of said deed, of $1,000, made, executed and delivered to one John P. Lantz their warranty deed conveying the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 24, township 10, range 6 east, and all that portion of the west half of the said southwest quarter of section 24, township 10, range 6 east, lying north of the centre line of R Street, in the City of Lincoln, extended east through said lands; and also the following-described parcels of land, situated in the southwest quarter of said southwest quarter of section 24, township 10, range 6 aforesaid: Commencing at the southwest corner of said section 24, thence running east 520 feet; thence north 460 feet; thence west 520 feet; thence south 460 feet to the place of beginning, and also commencing at a point 460 feet east of the southeast corner of block No. 38, in the City of Lincoln; and 470 feet north of the south line of O Street, in said City of Lincoln; thence running east 780 feet; thence north 400 feet; thence west, 780 feet; thence south 400 feet to the place of beginning; which said deed was recorded in the county clerk's office in Lancaster County, Nebraska, on the 25th day of October, 1879, at 4 o'clock and twenty-five minutes P. M.

30th. That on the 25th day of October, 1879, said John P. Lantz and Hannah Lantz, his wife, by their deed of general warranty and for the consideration of $1,000, as expressed in said deed, paid by Samuel W. Little to said John P. Lantz, conveyed the property in the last finding above described to the said Samuel W. Little; which deed was, on the 25th day of October, 1879, at 4 o'clock and thirty minutes P. M., recorded in the county clerk's office of Lancaster County, Nebraska.

33d. That on the 9th day of August, 1887, John Irwin and Jane Y. Irwin, by their deed of general warranty, conveyed to one William P. Young the north half of the southwest quarter and the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 24, township 10, range 6 east, for the purported consideration expressed on the face of the said deed of $400, which said deed was filed and recorded in the county clerk's office of Lancaster County, Nebraska, on the 10th day of August, 1887.

34th. That on the 9th day of January, 1875, said Samuel W. Little, by a deed of quit-claim, pursuant to an arrangement made between Jane Y. Irwin and one George Smith and said Samuel W. Little, made, executed and delivered, for the consideration of $100, a part of the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 24, township 10, range 6 east; that said S. W. Little had consented to the entry of said George Smith upon the said parcel of land under the contract for the purchase of the same from Messrs. Scott, Boyd and La Master.

35th. That in the year 1873 one Hickman entered upon the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 24, township 10, range 6 east, under a lease from Charles T. Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

It is contended that the circuit court erred in entering judgment on the special verdict because the citizenship of the parties was not found by the jury. But that fact stood admitted on the record. The plaintiff averred in her petition that she was "a citizen and resident of the State of Ohio," and that the defendant was "a citizen and resident of the State of Nebraska." The answer set up three defenses: (1) An affirmative claim of title under a tax deed. (2) Ten years' adverse possession. (3) "And this defendant, further answering, denies that the said plaintiff is the owner of the the premises described in her petition; and this defendant also denies that the plaintiff is entitled to the possession of the said premises, and prays to be hence dismissed with his costs to be taxed." The averment of diverse citizenship was not controverted by the answer, and, as the petition would have been insufficient without that allegation, the averment must be taken as true under the practice in the courts of record in Nebraska. (Neb. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 184, 185; Comp. Stat. 1885, p. 645.)

Clearly, where the jurisdictional allegation is not traversed, no question involving the capacity of the parties in the cause to litigate in the circuit court can be raised before the jury (Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Quigley, 62 U. S. 21 How. 203, 214 [16: 73, 77]), or treated as within the issues they might be empaneled to determine. The circuit court properly proceeded to judgment, although the special verdict contained no finding upon this point.

After the case had been twice tried on its merits, and stood on the special verdict upon motions by the parties for judgment in their favor respectively, the defendant assailed the jurisdiction of the court by petition, upon the ground that the title had been placed in the plaintiff collusively and with the view of enabling suit to be brought in the United States court, when in fact the plaintiff did not own the property and had accepted the title only for the collusive purpose aforesaid. Prior to the passage of the Act of 1875, such a question could only be raised by a plea in abatement in the nature of a plea to the jurisdiction; but the fifth section of that Act provided that if "it shall appear to the satisfaction of said circuit court at any time after such suit has been brought that such suit does not really and substantially involve a dispute or controversy properly within the jurisdiction of said circuit court, or that the parties to said suit have been improperly or collusively made or joined, either as plaintiffs or defendants, for the purpose of creating a case cognizable under this Act, the said circuit court shall proceed no further therein, but shall dismiss the suit; but its order dismissing the cause shall be reviewable by the supreme court on writ of error or appeal, as the case may be." 18 Stat. 472. The application here was made more than a year and a half after the second trial, and although the petitioner avers that he "did not have knowledge of the above facts before the trial of this cause," we remark in passing that such an objection ought to be raised at the first opportunity, and delay in its presentation should be considered in examining into the grounds upon which it is alleged to rest.

The issue of fact raised upon this petition was tried by the circuit court without a jury, and the application denied. No question of law was reserved by the defendant during the hearing, but he entered an exception to the final order, and now asks us to hold that it was the duty of the circuit court to dismiss the case because collusively brought. We do not care to enter upon a discussion as to how far in an action at law, where there are no special findings upon an issue of fact such as this, a party has the right to demand a review of the final order of the circuit court on the merits, as, upon the evidence in this record, we are content with the conclusion arrived at. In Barry v. Edmunds, 116 U. S. 550 [29: 729], it was held that a suit cannot properly be dismissed by a circuit court of the United States, as not involving a controversy within the jurisdiction of the court, unless the facts when made to appear on the record create a legal certainty of that conclusion. "Nothing less than this," said Mr. Justice Matthews, "is meant by the Statute when it provides that the failure of its jurisdiction, on this account, 'shall appear to the satisfaction of said circuit court.'"

The question was whether the conveyance by Jane Y. Irwin to Rowena Young was colorable merely. The plaintiff testified positively that she was the real owner of the land, and that it was conveyed to her by her sister, Mrs. Irwin, partly in consideration of what Mrs. Irwin owed her, and partly because she herself had a share in it; that "the land was entered with money coming out of my father's estate belonging in part to me, being the joint fund of Jane and myself." And her testimony is corroborated by that of her brother, William P. Young.

We have carefully examined the evidence, and especially the matters urged as constituting badges of colorable transfer, but do not find any substantial ground for overthrowing the deed, or questioning the passing of the title. Such conflict as exists has been determined by the circuit court, and it would subserve no useful purpose to restate the circumstances in detail, as we think the facts fell far short of establishing petitioner's contention.

Upon the rendition of the special verdict the defendant moved to set aside the 10th, 17th and 19th findings as not supported by the evidence, and for judgment upon the verdict as so amended, but the court overruled the motion, and entered judgment for the plaintiff upon the special verdict as returned. We cannot review the action of the court in reference to the findings objected to, and, no exceptions having been saved, are restricted to the question whether there was error in giving judgment for the plaintiff upon the facts as found.

From the first finding it appears that Jane Y. Irwin "obtained title to said lands by patent from the United States December 15, 1862, and on the 9th of August, 1867, conveyed the same to William P. Young, who, on the 5th of February, 1874, reconveyed the same to Jane Y. Irwin, who, on the 11th day of June, 1884, conveyed said lands to the plaintiff, Rowena Young." This made out the title of defendant in error, and to prevent her recovery the plaintiff in error was obliged to sustain one or more of his affirmative defenses, in respect to which he had the burden of proof.

These defenses were: claim under two tax deeds, coupled with ten years' adverse possession; conveyance by Jane Y. Irwin, by William T. Donovan as her attorney-in-fact; sheriff's deed on execution sale to Curson, deed of Curson to Little, and of Little to plaintiff in error.

As to the tax deeds, it was found that one was issued upon a sale made for the taxes of a year when the land was not assessed for taxes, and that neither of them was "sealed by the county treasurer with his official seal, nor did the county treasurer then have an official seal." The circuit court held that, under the decisions of the Supreme Court of Nebraska, these tax deeds were void for want of the seal, and cited many decisions of that court to that effect. In Gue v. Jones, 25 Neb. 634, 637, January Term, 1889, the court say: "At the trial the defendant produced a tax deed covering the premises in question, issued to Smith by the treasurer of Douglas County, August 4, 1865, for the taxes of 1862. This deed was objected to by the plaintiff on several grounds, among others, that it was not executed under the official seal of the treasurer. The Act of 1861, under which the deed was executed, provides, at section 60, 'that such conveyance shall be executed by the county treasurer, under his hand and seal;' then follows the statutory form of such deed, concluding with the words of attestation, 'In testimony whereof the said . . . treasurer of said county has hereunto set his hand and seal, on the date and year aforesaid. [Seal.]' The Statute has been substantially carried forward throughout all the changes of the Revenue Laws to the present day. Under its provisions it has been held by this court in cases too numerous for citation, of which several are cited by counsel for defendant in error, that a tax deed not executed by the treasurer under his seal of office is void. It will not be expected that this line of decision can be departed from now. The deed introduced in the case at bar, if legal and proper in all other respects, as to which we pass no opinion, is open to the fatal objection that it does not purport to have been executed by the county treasurer under his seal of office."

No title, therefore, was transmitted by these deeds; but a tax deed, though void upon its face, is sufficient color of title in Nebraska to support an adverse possession to the property therein described (Gatling v. Lane, 17 Neb. 77); while a tax certificate is not. McKeighan v. Hopkins, 14 Neb. 384. The possession, however, which bars a recovery must be continuous, uninterrupted, open, notorious, actual, exclusive and adverse. Armstrong v. Morrill, 81 U. S. 14 Wall. 120, 145 [20: 765, 773]. From the findings it appears that Little was holding in January, 1875, which was within ten years prior to the commencement of this suit, under a tax certificate; that up to the year 1876 the possession of the land in dispute was "mixed," but it "was open, vacant and unoccupied except by the city pest house, and was used as a common;" that some portions of the whole tract were in possession of squatters, some portions in possession of parties holding under Mrs. Irwin, and a part in the possession of the grantee in the tax deeds or under him; and the jury find the possession of the premises delivered to the defendant and held by him to have been only a mixed possession. Where the rightful owner is in the actual occupancy of a part of his tract, he is in the constructive and legal possession and seisin of the whole, unless he is disseised by actual occupation and dispossession; and where the possession is mixed, the legal seisin is according to the legal title, so that in the case at bar there could be no constructive possession on the part of the defendant or his grantors, even if that might exist if he had had actual possession of a part and no one had been in possession of the remainder. Huntteutt v. Peyton, 102 U. S. 333, 368 [26: 118, 120]; Barr v. Gratz, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 213, 223 [4: 553, 556]. Nothing is clearer upon the face of this record than that the jury refused to find the possession relied on by defendant to have been actual, undisputed, exclusive, open, notorious and adverse, but found, on the contrary, that the possession was mixed. The judgment cannot be reversed on the ground of error in this regard.

The plaintiff in error also asserted title under a conveyance by Donovan as her attorney in fact. The 2d, 3d, 4th, 13th, 14th, 16th, 23th, 29th, 30th, 37th and 40th findings present the facts on this branch of the case, and establish that on the 31st day of March, 1874, Jane Y. Irwin entered into a contract with Scott, Boyd and La Master for the subdivision and sale of this and other land, and that they entered upon, platted and surveyed it by the last of May, 1875; that (4th and 28th), "on the 12th of August, 1875, Jane Y. Irwin and her husband executed a power of attorney to William T. Donovan to enable him to make conveyances to purchasers when sales were made by Scott, Boyd and La Master, and to facilitate their operations under their contract of March 31, 1874;" that on the 25th day of October, 1879, a deed was executed by Donovan, as attorney in fact, for tracts which included that in dispute, to one Lantz, for "the purported consideration, as expressed upon the face of said deed, of $1,000," and on the same day Lantz, "for the consideration of $1,000, as expressed in said deed, paid by Samuel W. Little to said John P. Lantz," conveyed the same to Little; that these deeds were parts of one transaction, and the entire property conveyed was worth over $100,000; that the conveyance by Donovan to Lantz "was a fraud upon the power held by said Donovan, and was given by Donovan and taken by Lantz with the intention of defrauding Jane Y. Irwin, and that Samuel W. Little had full knowledge of such fact, and procured such conveyance to be made with such knowledge and design;" that the defendant had full knowledge of the revocation of the power of attorney aforesaid upon the record by Jane Y. Irwin and of the facts therein stated prior to any purchase by him that Little and wife, for the recited consideration of $10,500, sold and conveyed to Deputron, who was a brother-in-law of Little, "and that there is no proof of any consideration paid by Deputron to Little for such conveyance." It is not pretended that the deed to Lantz was made to carry out or effectuate any sale of the property which had been made by Scott, Boyd and La Master, and the findings show that it was made in fraud of the power of attorney and with the intention of defrauding Jane Y. Irwin. We cannot agree with the counsel for plaintiff in error that it is to be inferred that the power to Donovan was a power to convey generally and at discretion. We do not understand the language of the fourth and twenty-eighth findings, which are identical, as merely indicating the purpose for which the power of attorney was given, but regard it as expressing the limitations of the power. It was the scope of the power that the jury must have had in mind in stating that it was executed to enable Donovan to make conveyances to purchasers "when sales were made by Scott, Boyd and La Master, and to facilitate their operations under their contract of March 31, 1874." We think it sufficiently clear that it was only a naked power to convey when a sale had been made. The deed by Donovan was a fraud upon the power, because it was in violation of the authority thereby vested. The rule is well settled that "in the case of a naked power, not coupled with an interest, the law requires that every prerequisite to the exercise of that power should precede it. The party who sets up a title must furnish the evidence necessary to support it. If the validity of a deed depends on an act in pais, the party claiming under it is as much bound to prove the performance of the act as he would be bound to prove any matter of record on which the validity of the deed might depend." Williams v. Peyton, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 77 [4: 518]; Ransom v. Williams, 60 U. S. 2 Wall. 318, 319 [17: 303, 305]. It behooved the plaintiff in error to have the power made part of the findings, if the conclusion we have reached as to its contents was open to dispute, and not to have accepted the fourth and twenty-eighth findings without objection. In the language used in Williams v. Peyton, the power was a link in his chain which was essential to its continuity, and which it was incumbent on him to preserve. The findings in reference to this power not only do not justify the contention of plaintiff in error, but are inconsistent with it, for the Donovan deed was not simply found fraudulent in fact, but "a fraud upon the power." This, coupled with the finding that the power was to enable Donovan to convey when sales were made by Scott, Boyd and La Master shows that Donovan's act, when compared with the words of the power, was not warranted by the terms used. Nor under those findings is there any ground for the assumption that Deputron believed that Scott, Boyd and La Master had made sale of the property to Lantz or Little.

Even if the power had been general the conveyance was found fraudulent, and no estoppel arises in favor of plaintiff in error in the absence of findings that he paid value without notice.

It is impossible to conclude that the circuit court erred in putting aside this attempt to bolster up the title by the deed of Donovan.

In addition to the Donovan deed and the tax deeds, it is urged on behalf of the plaintiff in error that he made out title under a sale on execution. One Sessions, on May 19, 1877, recovered a judgment in the District Court of Lancaster County, Nebraska, against Jane Y. Irwin, upon which execution was issued and levied on forty acres, of which the premises in controversy were a part, and sale made to one Curson for $80, which sale was confirmed October 10, 1877, and a deed of the forty acres made by the sheriff and recorded on the same day, the land being worth at that time $20,000. The order confirming the sale was set aside by the court November 3, 1877, before Curson "had made any conveyance to anyone, and was never afterwards confirmed." On the 9th of November, 1877, Curson conveyed this land for $80 to S. W. Little, which deed was recorded on the 26th day of November.

The opinion of the circuit court upon this point is as follows: "It is the settled law of Nebraska that the title of a purchaser at an execution sale depends, not alone upon his bid or payment of the purchase money, but upon the confirmation of the sale; also that one purchasing at an execution sale submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court as to matters affecting that sale, and that a court has power during the term to vacate or modify its own orders or to rescind decrees. Phillips v. Dawley, 1 Neb. 320; Bank v. Green, 10 Neb. 184; Volland v. Wilcox, 17 Neb. 50; Gregory v. Tingley, 18 Neb. 322. It follows from these facts and decisions that the sale, though temporarily confirmed, was finally set aside, and that no rights of a third party accrued during the time that the sale was apparently confirmed. Hence this chain of title presented by defendants must fail." We are entirely satisfied that this expresses the law on the subject in the State of Nebraska. In State Bank v. Green, 10 Neb. 180, the Supreme Court of Nebraska says: "Under our law governing sales of property on execution the title of the purchaser depends entirely upon the sale being finally confirmed, and until this is done the rights of the execution debtor are not certainly divested." The final order confirming is subject to review as the confirmation of a sale in equity is (Parrat v. Neligh, 7 Neb. 459); and the purchaser submits to the jurisdiction of the court as to all matters connected with such sale or relating to him in the character of purchaser. This order of confirmation was vacated before there was any change in the relation of the parties, and the sheriff's deed fell with it. Counsel for plaintiff in error refers to section 508 of the Civil Code, which reads as follows: "If any judgment or judgments, in satisfaction of which any lands or tenements are sold, shall at any time thereafter be reversed, such reversal shall not defeat or affect the title of the purchaser or purchasers, but in such case restitution shall be made by the judgment creditor, of the moneys for which such lands or tenements were sold, with lawful interest from the day of sale." Comp. Stat. 1885, p. 695. This section relates to the judgment, as to which the purchaser is not affected by irregularity or error, and to which he is not a party; but we are considering the order of confirmation, which may be reviewed on appeal (7 Neb. 459); though the merits of the original case are not open to re-examination. State Nat. Bank v. Scofield, 9 Neb. 499.

The cases cited by the circuit judge show that the purchaser can move for confirmation, or to set the sale aside, and can appeal from the order thereon; that he may be compelled to perform his bid, and that he is concluded by the result of the proceedings to confirm or annul the same. And see Paulett v. Peabody, 8 Neb. 197; Shann v. Jones, 19 N. J. Eq. 251; Requa v. Rea, 2 Paige, 839; Barker v. Richardson, 41 N. J. Eq. 656. That such is the rule in Nebraska is quite convincingly shown by the case of Sessions v. Irwin, 8 Neb. 5, which was an appeal by Curson from the order setting aside the confirmation and the sale under consideration here, which order was, however, affirmed. If Sessions, the judgment creditor, received $80 from Curson, respecting which there is no finding, he became Curson's debtor to that amount, and, as argued for defendant in error, Curson might have a right to be compensated out of the moneys collected upon the judgment, but the operation of the order setting aside the confirmation was to defeat any claim of title on the part of Curson or his grantee. This accords with the decisions and settled practice of the state courts in reference to sales under process issuing out of them.

Finally, it is said that the judgment embraces property not described in the petition. The description was "the west half of the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section twenty-four."

The jury found title thereto in defendant in error, and also by the 37th finding described what was stated to be "the premises in dispute" by metes and bounds, as conveyed to Deputron. The judgment, though using somewhat different language, conforms to the finding. There was no motion to set aside the verdict and for a new trial, nor can we discover that any suggestion of mistake in its terms was made below.

The governmental subdivision would be, if accurate, eighty rods long by forty rods wide, and the finding and judgment describe a tract fourteen hundred feet in length by seven hundred and fifty feet in width, less a parcel in the southwest corner, but excess in acreage frequently occurs in government surveys, and as the finding is that the description there given and followed in the judgment is the description of the premises in dispute, we perceive no ground for interference.

There being no error, the judgment is affirmed.

JOSEPH BANIGAN, Plff. in Err.,
v.

CHARLES BARD, Receiver of the HAY-WARD RUBBER COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 291-296.)

Preferred stock—when money paid for same cannot be recovered back from receiver of insolvent corporation.

As against the receiver of an insolvent corporation, the owner of preferred stock, who, as director and general agent of the corporation, was active in passing the resolution authorizing the issue of the stock and inducing others to take it, and who has voluntarily subscribed and paid for it and received his certificate therefor, cannot, after holding it over two years, and voting on it, recover back the money paid by him for it from the effects of the insolvent corporation, on the ground that the corporation had no power to issue preferred stock.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a writ of error to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Connecticut. The suit was brought by Charles Bard, receiver of the Hayward Rubber Company, which was a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Connecticut, and located in the Town of Colchester in the County of New London. Being in an insolvent condition its affairs were placed in the hands of said Bard as receiver for the purpose of winding it up. Bard brought this suit in his character of receiver, in the Superior Court of New London County, and, on the application of Banigan, it was removed into the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Connecticut. The case was heard there by the court without the intervention of a jury, upon a stipulation by the parties that this should be done.

There is filed in the record what purports to be a finding of facts and opinion of the court (39 Fed. Rep. 13), in which the opinion and the statement of the evidence are mingled together in a way which it is difficult to separate, and which, if there were any objection to it, might not be found in accordance with sections 649 and 700 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. But as there does not seem to be any controversy about the special finding of facts, and as there is a bill of exceptions in the case which very fairly presents the only question at issue, we proceed to examine into it.

It appears that the Hayward Rubber Company prior to the year 1879 had been a profitable concern and paid large dividends, its last being made in 1881. Thereafter its business deteriorated and became unprofitable. Its capital stock was $400,000, and the par value of its shares was $25 each. In January, 1888, the stockholders, in endeavoring to secure some competent person to oversee and direct the management of its business, entered into negotiation with defendant, Banigan, who was president and general agent of the Woonsocket Rubber Company, and who was a well-known and successful manufacturer, the result of which was that they sold him four hundred shares of the stock at $12.50 per share. Mr. Banigan was appointed general agent of the company by the directors, and had full control of the manufactory, subject to their approval. He entered upon the oversight of the business, laid out and arranged for new buildings, bought new machinery, ordered new lasts, tools, rolls and cutting machinery, and had automatic sprinklers put in the mill, all at an expense of some $120,000.

In March, 1885, a committee of the directors, of which Mr. Banigan was a member, sent out a circular recommending an increase of the capital by the issue of preferred stock to the amount of $100,000, saying that it was advisable to have a unanimous vote in favor of the proposition, asking for proxies, and inclosing resolutions which were to be submitted to a stockholders' meeting, April 2, 1885. This meeting authorized the issue of preferred stock to the amount of $100,000, entitled to cumulative dividends at 8 per cent per annum, which issue took precedence of all dividends on the common stock and any future additions thereto. The order in regard to the issue of preferred stock was passed by a unanimous vote of the shares present or represented at the meeting, being 13,400 shares. The whole number of shares was 16,000. Each stockholder had the privilege of subscribing to said stock in proportion to the number of shares of existing stock owned by him. Mr. Banigan subscribed for 702 shares of the preferred stock, and on April 2 paid the company for it $17,550, and received a certificate for said shares, which contained in substance the provisions of the resolution voted. Shares to the amount of $25,000 in all were subscribed for. Banigan voted upon this stock at one or two annual meetings, and on June 26 thereafter he wrote to Potter, Lovell & Co., note brokers, of Boston, inclosing a statement of the company's affairs, and saying that it had arranged to issue $100,000 preferred stock, but "only one quarter of it has yet been issued, which I have taken principally." No claim for repayment of this $17,550 was made until 1888. Meantime Mr. Banigan continued to be the general agent of the company until it went into the hands of a receiver on August 9, 1887.

A considerable part of the evidence recited in the statement of facts by the court, and in its opinion, had relation to the question of the claim for salary or compensation for services which Mr. Banigan set up as a set-off to his admitted indebtedness to the corporation, which latter amounted to $26,051.98; being the balance due on account of sales made by Banigan for the Hayward Rubber Company, as its agent. But as the allowance made by the court to the defendant for his salary, of $10,000, which with the interest amounted to $12,085.83, is not in controversy, because the plaintiff has taken no writ of error to that judgment, and as the sum of $26,051.98 is not in controversy by Banigan, no further consideration of those matters which relate to the salary is necessary, and the only question raised before us is that growing out of the refusal of the court to allow Banigan the sum of $17,550, which he had paid for the preferred stock of the company, as a set-off to his indebtedness, which is not otherwise disputed.

The court below upon that subject says: "The claim for $17,550 rests upon a question of law. The contention of defendant is that, inasmuch as the statutes of Connecticut simply allow a joint-stock company to increase its capital stock, and the articles of association gave no authority to make preferred stock, it was beyond the power of the Hayward Rubber Company to create such a class of stock, and there was a total failure of consideration for the contract; that no estoppel can exist against the assertion of the invalidity of the stock; and that the defendant is entitled to recover the amount paid by him from the corporation."

The court then concedes the proposition that under the laws of Connecticut there was no authority to issue this preferred stock, but the judge further says: "I am not favorably impressed with the doctrine that, as against the assignee or receiver of an insolvent corporation, the owner of preferred stock, who has voluntarily subscribed and paid for it, for the purpose of promoting the scheme, and has received his certificate therefor, and the terms and conditions upon which the subscription was made have been fully complied with by the corporation, can recover the amount paid. In Winters v. Armstrong, 87 Fed. Rep. 508, Judge Jackson guards against such a broad principle, and it is not in accordance with the teaching of Seovill v. Thayer, 105 U. S. 143 [26: 968]."

He also says that if defendant can recover an amount from the insolvent estate in a case where there is no claim of an unfulfilled condition, it must be upon a theory of the rescission of the contract, because the stockholder received nothing of value. He then adds: "This rescission must be made within a reasonable time. In this case Mr. Banigan paid for his stock April 2, 1885, and was still a stockholder when the receiver was appointed, August 9, 1887. I do not think that the preferred stockholder who voluntarily creates stock of this kind—for this Mr. Banigan virtually did—can hold it for twenty-eight months in the hope of dividends, and then, upon finding the company insolvent, come in as a creditor and receive back his money." He accordingly refused to allow the claim of Banigan for the money paid for this stock.

Perhaps but little can be added to what was said by the judge of the circuit court. It may be well to call attention a little more pointedly to the fact that when Mr. Banigan attempted, a year after the insolvency of the corporation, to return his stock and demand the money which he had paid for it, and at the time he filed this claim as a set-off in the circuit court, the corporation with which he dealt, and of which he was in effect the dominant spirit, had ceased to have existence for any other purpose than winding up its affairs, and all this matter had passed into the hands of the receiver, who represented especially the interests of creditors. It is in the face of the claim of these creditors, who must largely lose at any rate, that Mr. Banigan's claim is to be considered, and we are of opinion that, having received certificates for this stock on which he voted in control of the company, and which increased his power in regard to that control, and having been the chief agent in causing the issue of this stock and giving it credit and currency by his actions, he cannot now be permitted to withdraw the money which he had paid, from the fund out of which these creditors are to be paid.

The force of this proposition is increased by the length of time elapsing between the payment of the money and the twenty-eight months in which Mr. Banigan held this stock, and voted upon it, and took the chances of its finally being a valuable investment. As its validity was a question of law, he must be presumed to have known it as well as anybody else. The cases of Seovill v. Thayer, 105 U. S. 143 [26: 968], and the very recent case of Aspinwall v. Butler, Receiver of the Pacific National Bank of Boston, 183 U. S. 595 [33: 779], while they are not so precisely analogous to the present case as to be considered conclusive of it, do yet enforce the general principle, that a person subscribing for stock under circumstances almost similar to the present is bound for the obligations which the law imposes upon the holders of such stock for the benefit of the creditors of the insolvent corporation. We base our decision in the present case upon the view that Mr. Banigan, who was a controlling spirit in the Hayward Rubber Company, was active in passing the resolution which authorized the issue of the stock and inducing other persons to take it, and in giving credit to the corporation on the ground that such stock had been taken and that he had actually paid his money into the company, which its creditors had a right to consider as so much of its paid-up capital; that he held this stock for over two years, when the corporation was in struggling circumstances; that he voted upon it at two elections; and that he cannot now be permitted to recover back the money paid by him, from the effects of the insolvent corporation, which by law are devoted to the bona fide creditors of the institution.

Judgment affirmed.

THE HENDERSON BRIDGE COMPANY. Ptff. in Err.,

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 260-276.)

Alteration of contract—construction of ditch—authority of engineer to make contract—question for jury—making of contract—implied promise—error in charge.

1. Upon the facts, the court holds that the construction of the continuous drainage ditch parallel to the embankment of a section of the railroad was not covered by the original contract of plaintiffs to do the grading, masonry and trestle work of such section.
2. To dig the earth on a surface rolling and broken for the sole purpose of constructing a level embankment is a different problem from the digging with the double view of constructing the embankment and the making of a continuous ditch with prescribed directions and uniform bottom level.
3. The resident engineer of defendant, a corporation, who superintended the construction of the work and was directed by the chief engineer to have the plan of drainage carried out, had power to make the contract with plaintiffs who had contracted to make the embankment, for the making of the ditch.
4. It was for the jury to say whether such contract did in fact exist. It was not for the court to assume and instruct the jury as matter of law that it did not exist.
5. It was for the jury to say whether a conversation between the resident engineer and one of the plaintiffs in respect to the piling, in which the former said (in answer to the question by the latter whether plaintiffs would be paid for it) that the chief engineer "would do what was right," was with a contractual intent and was a contract or not.

6. If the resident engineer as the representative of the Company made no express promise to pay, the law would imply one, he having power to direct the work, and there being no claim that he exceeded his authority in doing so.
7. Where, in the charge to the jury, there was no material error to the injury of the party excepting, the court will not consider whether the language used in the charge was technically accurate.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Indiana to review a judgment in favor of plaintiffs to recover a balance due them for the construction of a section of a railroad. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Justice Lamar:

This was an action at law brought by the defendants in error against the plaintiff in error in the Circuit Court of Vanderburgh County, Indiana, and removed into the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Indiana.

The Henderson Bridge Company is a corporation of the State of Kentucky, organized for the purpose of building a bridge over the Ohio River from the City of Henderson, Kentucky, to the Indiana bank of the river, and a railroad thence to the City of Evansville, Indiana, a distance of about nine miles.

On the 8th of July, 1884, a contract was made between the Company and the defendants in error for the grading, masonry and trestling of the railroad for a distance of something over six miles, measuring from Evansville to the bridge, designated as sections 1 to 6 inclusive, and a part of section 7, each section being one mile long. No formal written contract was executed between the parties; but the agreement arrived at consisted of, (1) specifications and profile of the work to be done, on the part of the Company; (2) proposals on the part of the contractor; and (3) acceptance of the proposals by the Company.

The specifications prepared by the chief engineer of the defendant classified the work as "Clearing and Grubbing," "Excavations," "Embankments," "Masonry" and "Pile Trestle."

Defendant in error completed the work about the 1st of March, 1885, and the Company accepted it. On the final settlement a controversy arose as to the amount of the balance due the defendants in error after crediting the partial payments made as the work progressed; and this suit was brought to recover the amount of $23,667, claimed by them to be due, which the Company had refused to pay.

The bills of exception taken below, however, and the errors assigned, narrow the controversy in this court to two items—one being in respect to a drainage ditch, which was ordered to be made; the other in regard to the value of certain extra pile work. Our statement of the case will be confined to an examination of those points.

(1) The work contracted for lay, all except the two sections nearest to Evansville, through the bottoms of the Ohio River, which were subject to overflow. On that portion in the bottoms the profiles showed several stretches of trestling which aggregated 1,486 feet. The specifications, however, provided that "the quantities marked on profile are approximate, and not binding. The relative amounts of trestle and earthwork may be changed at option of the engineer without prejudice."

While the work was in progress the Company determined to modify the plan so as to omit the trestle and make a continuous embankment with underlying drain-pipes. This modification necessitated a different system of surface drainage; and it was determined that the borrow-pits (that is to say, the excavations along the line of the railroad from which the earth was taken to form the embankment) should form a drainage ditch on the eastern side for about two thirds of the way. Mr. Hurlburt, who was the Company's third engineer in rank, and had immediate supervision of the work in the field, was directed to have these modifications carried out.

In consequence of this change in the plan, Mr. Vaughan, the Company's chief engineer, on the 16th of August, 1884, telegraphed O. F. Nichols, the resident engineer at Henderson, directing him to notify the defendants in error that "all trestle on portion of line embraced in their contract will be dispensed with." And on the 26th of August following Nichols wrote them as follows: "As directed by the chief engineer, Mr. F. W. Vaughan, I hereby notify you that the trestle shown north of station three hundred and thirty-three (333) on profile of the Henderson Bridge Railroad will be omitted. The corresponding space will be filled by solid embankment. Arrangements have been completed for additional borrow-pits necessary to complete these embankments." No objection was made to that change by the defendants in error.

In regard to the ditch, however, it was different. Defendants in error maintain that no such ditch was called for either by the specifications or by the profile, and that therefore they were under no contract to make it. They claim further, and there is testimony in the record to the point, that on the day after the receipt of Mr. Nichols' letter, Hurlburt, the local engineer in charge, came to see them, and notified them that they would be required to make said ditch on the eastern side of the embankment from section three to section seven, inclusive, for the purposes of draining the borrow-pits, such ditch to be two feet wide on bottom in section three, three feet at bottom in section four, four feet wide on bottom in section seven, and to run through the borrow-pits, and have a slope of one and a half feet, horizontal measurement, to one foot perpendicular. Defendants claim further that they objected, on the ground that they could not make the ditch without compensation, and that thereupon Hurlburt replied that they would be paid for it at the same price they had bid for excavation, and that it would be estimated from the top of the ground down.

The Company, on the other hand, denies both the fact of the making of such alleged supplementary contract, and the authority of the engineer, Hurlburt, to make it. It maintains that the evidence shows only an expression of opinion made by Hurlburt.

The annexed rude diagram of a cross-section of the work will illustrate the situation:

Defendants in error do not deny the fact of the coincidence, as stated, between the ditch and the borrow-pits, but they justify by saying that the basis of measurement adopted in their contracts, while it is to a certain extent arbitrary, yet is not a cheating or improper basis, for the reason that it is a commutation, and was necessitated by the introduction of the continuous parallel ditch. The digging of such a ditch introduced, they claim, an entirely new element into the work; it peremptorily demanded the careful maintenance of the ditch level throughout its whole extent, and required long hauls of dirt; and whereas, before the ditch was ordered, the excavation was made entirely with reference to the convenience of depositing the dirt in the embankment, afterwards it had to be made with reference to the ditch.

(2) The defendants in error were required to make certain trestle approaches on one side of the road for some of the road crossings, and farm crossings, into which were put 2,800 lineal feet of piling. The profile did not indicate that these approaches were to be made of piling; and defendants in error claim that they were not, therefore, included in the bid, but were made under a new agreement that they should be paid for "as was right." The contract price for trestles was 80 cents per lineal foot, but the evidence of defendants in error tended to show that the construction of these trestles was worth from 60 cents to $1.50 per lineal foot.

The engineer's estimate for February, 1885, contained this item: "Secs. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. Piles driven, 2,108 lineal feet, 30 cents per lineal foot, $680.90." This was part of the piling in controversy; and on this estimate the defendants in error settled with the Company for February and receipted it. The Company now claims that said settlement and receipt, and the original agreement as to value in the bid accepted, conclusively fixes the price at 30 cents per lineal foot for the whole 2,800 feet; while the defendants in error, on the other hand, claim that the receipt in February was merely for a payment for 2,108 lineal feet, and that they can, as to the other 700 feet, still prove value on a quantum meruit.

Under these forms of the controversy, not necessary to be further adverted to here, the case was tried below. On the trial the court instructed the jury as follows: "The taking out of the trestles and the requirement of earthwork in their place created no basis for a claim for extra compensation; so that, for the purpose of the question we are now coming to, the case is the same as though the specifications and profile in the first instance had shown continuous embankment. The Bridge Company, having come to the conclusion to make this embankment, deemed it proper to make a change in the requirements in respect to ditches, but there is no reservation in the contract in regard to that. Of course, the general terms of the contract in respect to the right of the engineer to oversee the work may embrace the power to direct reasonable changes in regard to ditches, but there is nothing authorizing the Bridge Company to substitute a continuous ditch for the ditches defined upon the original profile; so when they determined to require this continuous ditch to be made, it necessarily put the parties into a position for negotiation on the subject, and Mr. Hurlburt, the engineer in charge, being authorized to have this ditch constructed, had incidental authority to agree upon the price or mode of measurement."

The defendant at the time excepted to so much of that instruction as is contained in the following words, viz.: "But there is nothing authorizing the Bridge Company to substitute a continuous ditch for the ditches defined upon the original profile; so when they determined to require this continuous ditch to be made, it necessarily put the parties into a position for negotiation on the subject, and Mr. Hurlburt, the engineer in charge, being authorized to have this ditch constructed, had incidental authority to agree upon the price or mode of measurement."

The court also gave the jury the following instructions, viz.: "But when it was proposed to make a continuous ditch on the east side of the track at the same time the embankment was being made, that introduced a new element into the problem. If the parties were to make an embankment and ditch also, it became desirable to take the dirt for the embankment from such localities as would be most effective in producing the ditch, and it necessarily resulted from this state of things that a party making embankment would, or might at least, make embankment and ditch at the same time. He might be taking earth out for the purpose of making embankment which he could have taken from another place more economically if he was not intending to make this ditch. It follows that earth taken from the same place may represent embankment, and also ditch. The excavation made might be borrow-pit, and it might be ditch, and consequently it became proper for the parties concerned to adopt some system by which they would compute the respective amounts to be credited to each phase of the work. The same work being effective, both towards making the embankment and making the ditch, to treat it as all embankment or as all ditch would be unjust. So it was for the parties, the Bridge Company and plaintiffs, to agree upon some plan upon which they could make a computation; and so I instruct you upon the facts as they appear without dispute that it was within the power of Mr. Hurlburt, the resident engineer, who was superintending the construction of the work, to make a contract with the plaintiffs, who were under contract to make the embankment, for the making of this ditch, to agree that they should do this work, and how much of the excavation should be deemed to be for the purpose of embankment and how much for the ditch."

The defendant also excepted at the time to so much of that instruction as is in the words following, viz.: "And so I instruct you upon the facts as they appear without dispute that it was within the power of Mr. Hurlburt, the resident engineer, who was superintending the construction of the work, to make a contract with the plaintiffs, who were under contract to make the embankment, for the making of this ditch, to agree that they should do this work, and how much of the excavation should be deemed to be for the purpose of embankment and how much for the ditch."

The court also gave to the jury the following instructions, viz.: "From the duty imposed upon him as resident engineer of the defendant arose Mr. Hurlburt's power to make an adjustment of the question. Plaintiffs claim he did make arrangements with them by which it was agreed that the portion of excavation to be regarded as such should be considered as starting from the lower level of the ditch along its whole length and be measured at a certain slope to the surface of the earth as it was before work was commenced, and upon that they claim 37,256 cubic yards of excavation as ditch. Defendant claims that Hurlburt did not make any such agreement, and this is an issue of fact which the jury must determine upon the evidence. I will say, however, that under the circumstances Mr. Hurlburt did have power to make the agreement if he saw fit so to do. If you find that he did so, and that the measurements he returned are correct, then the plaintiffs are entitled to compensation accordingly for 37,256 cubic yards at 18 cents per cubic yard." And to the giving of that instruction the defendant at the time excepted.

The court also gave to the jury the following instruction: "If Mr. Hurlburt did not make such agreement with these parties, but simply told them what mode of measurement he thought would be adopted, but that it would have to be left to the chief engineer in the end, it would follow that the work was done without any special agreement, and you will be compelled to estimate it upon its fair and reasonable worth. You will then consider from the proof how much excavation was made for the ditch, and how much more to make the embankment than if the continuous ditch had not been required, and for the number of yards of earth excavated in consequence allow 18 cents per cubic yard. In this view the figures of Mr. Hurlburt, though relevant, would not be conclusive as evidence. If he made the agreement, as the plaintiffs claim he did, and his estimates were correct, that is an end of the question. If he did not make the agreement and the question was left open, then you must determine the number of yards excavated for the ditch upon the proof and allow accordingly the contract price of 18 cents a yard."

The defendant at the time excepted to so much of that instruction as is in the following words, viz.: "If he made the agreement, as the plaintiffs claim he did, then that is an end of the question."

The defendant requested the court, in writing, to give to the jury the following instruction, viz.: "As to the ditch claimed by plaintiffs to have been made by them on the easterly side of the railroad of defendant, the plaintiffs are entitled to recover only for so much excavation as was actually done for the purpose of making such ditch, excluding any portion of the borrow-pits dug exclusively for the purpose of making the embankments, and that the jury can find for plaintiffs only the contract price of eighteen cents per cubic yard for the excavation, which they may find from the evidence was so made for the purpose of making such ditch." But the court refused to give that instruction; whereupon the defendant at the time excepted.

As to the claim of the defendants in error for a price extra to the original contract for the trestles built by them the court gave to the jury the following instructions: "The next item is the piles in the bridges. The contract price for piles is thirty cents per lineal foot. The profile and specifications, as originally drawn, or as they now stand, show considerable trestle work, and show generally highway crossings across the track at different places, but there is no statement in the specifications or in the profile with respect to what kind of crossing it shall be, whether of earth or of timber. There is a dispute between the parties arising out of this fact upon the question whether these bridges, made for the purpose of carrying highways over the embankment, are within the contract. The contract in that respect is ambiguous. The court, looking at the contract, cannot say what kind of crossing was intended. There is no proof of custom in this case sufficient to settle this point. We are therefore left to the construction which the contractors themselves have adopted, as shown by their conduct under the contract. When parties have made an ambiguous contract and have acted under it, and their joint actions show their understanding of it, courts and juries will follow the construction thus indicated. In this case the evidence shows that in respect to 2,100 feet, in round numbers, the plaintiffs themselves treated the piles as coming within the terms of the contract in respect to price by receipting for that price upon the estimates. There has been evidence before the jury—I cannot rehearse it—as to what was said between the engineer of defendant and plaintiffs at the time this work was done. Perhaps the plaintiffs made some protest against doing this work at the price stated, but, nevertheless, they went on and did the work under that price and receipted for it, and I think the jury should accept that as conclusive upon that point. A subordinate engineer, working in behalf of a corporation, as Mr. Hurlburt was, has no right to waive the effect of receiving pay upon monthly estimates under a contract like this. Such a contract would have but little force or value if a subordinate agent has the power to waive the terms, and this contract declares the estimates made by the engineer and furnished to the parties to be final, except for fraud or mistake. If the defendant had been an individual instead of a corporation he could have been there in person and waived the contract by saying 'We will leave that open; we will not make that conclusive;' but I instruct you that this subordinate agent, Mr. Hurlburt, working for the Bridge Company, a corporation whose affairs must have been conducted by agents appointed to act for it—Mr. Hurlburt acting in this capacity—could not waive this stipulation in the contract, that the monthly and final estimates should be conclusive. Therefore, in respect to the piling included in the estimate, about 2,100 lineal feet, plaintiffs have precluded themselves from claiming extra pay. In respect to the work on the embankment, the act of accepting pay at the contract price raises the presumption that that was the proper price for the whole amount, and, in the absence of proof to the contrary, the contract price should govern; but the presumption is not conclusive as to the 700 feet of piling not in the estimates, and if you find upon the proof that there was an agreement between plaintiffs and Mr. Hurlburt that these piles should be paid for at what they were reasonably worth, and not by the contract price, you may allow the reasonable value as shown by the proof on the subject."

The defendant at the time excepted to so much of that instruction as is contained in the following words, viz.: "But the presumption is not conclusive as to the 700 feet of piling not in the estimates, and if you find upon the proof that there was an agreement between plaintiffs and Mr. Hurlburt that these piles should be paid for at what they were reasonably worth, and not by the contract price, you may allow the reasonable value as shown by the proof on the subject."

The defendant in writing requested the court to give the jury the following instruction, viz.: "Where any of the work done by plaintiffs and sued for in their complaint has been included in any of the monthly estimates of such work read to them, and such work is therein valued at the contract price, such fact is conclusive evidence that such work was done under the contract and the prices fixed there final and conclusive."

But the court refused to give that instruction; to which ruling of the court the defendant at the time excepted.

It is claimed that, by reason of those instructions, the jury were authorized to find, and did find, for the defendants in error, for the alleged ditch, five thousand six hundred and thirty-six dollars and fifty-five cents, and for the piling eight hundred and fifty dollars, in excess of any rightful claim they had; and to that extent the plaintiff in error, which was the defendant below, avers the verdict to be erroneous.

The verdict of the jury upon which the judgment was rendered was for $13,470 in favor of the defendants in error.

The assignments of error are: (1) that the court erred in refusing to charge the jury in behalf of the defendant below, as stated; and (2) that the court erred in those parts of the charge given, which were objected to by the defendant below, as stated.

Messrs. James M. Shackelford and S. B. Vance, for plaintiff in error:

If the work was done without a new contract, the compensation would be only for the excavation actually done at the rate fixed by the original contract.

Evanston v. Gunn, 99 U. S. 660 (25: 306).

Mr. Justice Lamar delivered the opinion of the court:

The main questions to be determined in the first branch of this case are these:

(1) Did the modification of the original specifications and profile, made in August, 1884, fall within the original contract, or did it create a feature in the work to be done so different from that originally contracted for as to put the defendants in error in a position to make as to that feature a new contract?

(2) Did the engineer, Hurlburt, have authority to make such new contract?

(3) Did the court err in refusing to charge, as prayed, "that the plaintiffs [below] are entitled to recover only for so much excavation as was actually done for the purpose of making such ditch, excluding any portion of the borrow-pits dug exclusively for the purpose of making the embankments?"

We shall briefly consider those questions seriatim.

First. A careful examination of the specifications and profile, and of the testimony in the case, all set forth in the bills of exceptions, satisfies us that the requirement to construct a continuous drainage ditch parallel to the embankment, four and one third miles long, and of the dimensions ordered, did create a new problem in the work not covered by the original contract. The ditch was required to have a fall of nearly two feet to the mile; to be two feet wide at the bottom at one end, and to increase in size to six feet bottom width at the other end; and throughout, the sides were required to be scaled one and one-half foot horizontal measure to one foot perpendicular. The testimony shows that in one portion, at least, it was nine feet deep. It was made to drain off the water from the prescribed area, and to take the place of the county ditches. On this point McGrath, one of the defendants in error, testified that "to make the borrow-pits serve for a ditch it was necessary to haul the earth from the high ground, where the embankment was low, to the low grounds, where the embankment was high, whereas but for the ditch the earth from the embankment would have been taken directly from the sides; that this in many places necessitated a longer haul of earth, and increased the cost of the embankment."

Wasson, who was a sub-contractor, testified that before the change was made he "had taken earth from borrow-pits about twenty inches deep, and afterwards had to dig to the depth of nine feet to make the ditch, and was required to haul this extra excavation, some of it six hundred feet."

Robinson testified that "if the work was changed so as to require a continuous ditch, it could not be done as cheaply as it could if done as provided for in the specifications, because where the embankment would be low you would have to make a shallow borrow-pit, and in making a continuous ditch you would have to deepen that borrow-pit to bring it to the ditch level and would have to carry the dirt forward, necessitating a haul. There was no continuous ditch contemplated in the profile of the work."

Fisher, a witness for defendants in error, testified that he was "a civil engineer of thirty-five years' experience, and largely as railroad engineer. If the specifications provided that the earth for embankment should be borrowed equally from both sides, and then a continuous ditch should be required to be made on one side of the embankment, it would necessitate a greater haul and would be more expensive. In consequence of the ditch a greater amount of earth would have to be taken from the side on which the ditch is made. One cannot work to such an advantage in a narrow ditch as in a board borrow-pit. The deeper you go, the harder the earth is to work."

Outside of the testimony of the witnesses, it is manifest that to dig earth on a surface rolling and broken, as the profile shows the surface to have been in this instance, for the sole purpose of constructing a level embankment, and without regard to the depth or extent or level of the pits thereby made, is a very different problem from the digging with the double view of the construction of such an embankment, and the making of a continuous ditch with prescribed directions and uniform bottom level for a length of more than four miles.

It is true that, as the plaintiff in error says, the profile shows ditching in these same sections, covered by the original contract, to the amount of 4,660 cubic yards; but it also is true that those ditches were of a very different character, and imposed no such burden on the contractor as did the one in question. Indeed, the plaintiff in error itself treated the modification as a serious change, and especially so considered the ditch, before the controversy arose. In the correspondence between the two engineers of the Company, which determined on it, it is spoken of as a new system.

Second. We also think the engineer, Hurlburt, had authority to make a new contract for the ditching. The plaintiff in error insists that a subordinate engineer has no such authority by virtue of his employment. That may be conceded; but it is not the ground assumed by the defendants in error. They contend that Hurlburt was especially authorized to make the contract; and support that position by quoting the second engineer Nichols, who says, "that the plan of drainage suggested in my letter to Mr. Vaughan was accepted by him, and Mr. Hurlburt was directed to have it carried out." This view is fortified by the fact that in Vaughan's letter to Nichols whereby the proposed changes were sanctioned (16th of August, 1884), and numerous items of adjustment and arrangement made necessary by such changes suggested, Vaughan himself clearly recognized the situation as one admitting of new terms with the contractors. He wrote, inter alia, of the change, "this solid bank business" he called it, "we might get a low rate for extra earth in consideration of the same."

In Damon v. Granby, 2 Pick. 345, the inhabitants of the Town of Granby had voted that certain persons (thirteen in number) should be a committee to procure a master builder, and superintend the building of a meeting-house for the town. On the trial of the case (which was an action of debt by the builder of the meeting-house on the contract made with the committee) the defendants objected that the superintending committee had no authority to contract for the building of the house. The court held that the vote of the inhabitants gave to this committee the authority to enter into the contract. "To superintend the building of the house," says the court, "includes the power to make the necessary contracts," etc. See also Story on Agency, sec. 79.

Third. Nor do we think the court below erred in refusing to charge the jury that the defendants in error were only entitled to recover for such excavation as was actually done for the purpose of making such ditch, as distinguished from such portion of the ideal ditch as coincided in space with the borrow-pits, as portions thereof. In some cases, nay, in most cases, that would be a proper charge, perhaps, but not in this case. Here the plaintiffs below claimed before the jury, as a matter of fact, that they held a valid contract with the defendant below, by the terms of which they were entitled to pay for the whole volume of the ditch (calling it "imaginary" in part makes no difference), from the bottom up to the original ground surface through its whole length; and that whether said volume coincided with the spaces of borrow-pits or not. It was for the jury to say whether such contract did in fact exist. It was not for the court to assume and instruct the jury as a matter of law that it did not exist. Such a contract was not legally impossible. It was not claimed that the contractors defrauded the Company, or in any way took advantage of it; and the basis of measurement, even if artificial and to an extent "imaginary," is not legally unreasonable, in view of the testimony of the witnesses as to the onerous and complicated labors of such a ditch. As a substitute and equivalent for all the items of demand—in increased volume of excavation, increased hauls, increased hardness of earth to be worked, etc.—it may have been a very proper system. We cannot say that it was not.

As to the second branch of the case, viz., that in respect to the piling, it is objected by the plaintiff in error that the instruction of the court was erroneous for the following reasons: First. Because in speaking of the 700 feet still not paid for, the court said: "If you find upon the proof that there was an agreement between plaintiffs and Mr. Hurlburt that these piles should be paid for at what they were reasonably worth," etc.; while there was no evidence tending to show that Hurlburt made the agreement therein supposed. But there was such evidence. Ryan, one of the plaintiffs below, had testified that "we had no contract for this work, and before we began it I had a conversation with Mr. Hurlburt about it. I wanted to know what we would be paid for it, and he said that Mr. Vaughan would do what was right." This was claimed to be a contract for reasonable compensation. It was for the jury to say whether the conversation was with a contractual intent or not. The court had no right to assume as a matter of law that it was not, and refuse a charge on that aspect of the case. Second. Because Hurlburt had no authority to make a contract in reference to this matter. But the contract spoken of, being for a compensation on a quantum meruit, and not for a specified price, it is immaterial whether Hurlburt had such an authority or not. If, as the representative of the Company, he had made no express promise to pay, the law would imply one. There is no question as to his power to direct the work, and no claim that he exceeded his authority in directing the crossings to be made of trestle and pile work. Such being the case, we do not consider it necessary to discuss the abstract question of whether the language used by the court was technically accurate as applied to the case; if it was not there was yet no material error—none that could have injured the defense.

We do not think that the acceptance of thirty cents for some of the trestles precluded the plaintiffs as to the value of others.

The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

New York Statute of Limitations—suit against nonresident—laws of his residence—resident of State, who is—domicil.

1. By New York Code of Civil Procedure, sec. 380, an action which does not involve title or possession of real property in the State cannot be brought in the State against a nonresident of the State, after the time limited by the laws of his residence for bringing a like action, except by a resident of the State or one who becomes so before the expiration of the time so limited.
2. One having a cause of action against a Tennessee corporation, for personal injury in that State, and being a resident of Missouri when the injury occurred, is barred by said section 380 from bringing his action in New York unless he became a resident of that State before the expiration of the one year limited by the laws of Tennessee for the commencement of such an action, although in New York the period of limitation is three years.
3. A traveling salesman, residing in St. Louis, Missouri, who sent his wife and children to Brooklyn, New York, where they took up their residence and commenced to keep house and have since resided, did not become a resident of

New York when he sent his family into that State nor until he joined them there.

4. By retaining his residence for purposes of business in St. Louis, he did not become a resident of New York, within the meaning of its Statutes of Limitation, until he changed his actual residence to that State, although his domicil might be there.

Argued Jan. 30, 1890. Decided March 17, 1890.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of New York to review a judgment in favor of defendant, The Chesapeake, Ohio and Southwestern Railroad Company, in an action to recover damages for a personal injury. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Rufus M. Williams, for plaintiff in error:

Residence has, wherever the question has arisen, been uniformly construed to mean legal residence or domicil.

Jacobs, Law of Dom. § 53, chap. 2, p. 89; Putnam v. Johnson, 10 Mass. 488; Blanchard v. Stearns, 5 Met. 298; Holmes v. Greene, 7 Gray, 299; Crawford v. Wilson, 4 Barb. 504; Fry's Election Case, 71 Pa. 302; State v. Hallett, 8 Ala. 159; Dale v. Irwin, 78 Ill. 170; Vanderpool v. O'Hanton, 53 Iowa, 246; Cooley, Const. Lim. 600.

By domicil is meant the permanent home.

Moorhouse v. Lord, 10 H. L. Cas. 272, 284; Jacobs, Law of Dom. §§ 57, 59, 60, 62, 69, 71, 73, pp. 97, 101, 103, 106, 113, 115, 120; Story, Conf. Laws, §§ 41, 43, 47; Phillimore, Law of Dom. No. 11, p. 11; Putnam v. Johnson, 10 Mass. 488, 501; Tanner v. King, 11 La. 175; Whart. Conf. Laws, §§ 21, 69, 74; Lord v. Colvin, 4 Drew. 866.

The words "domicil" and "home" are substantially equivalent.

Whicker v. Hume, 7 H. L. Cas. 124; Mitchell v. U. S. 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 350 (22: 584); Ezzer v. Brighton, 15 Me. 58; Shaw v. Shaw, 98 Mass. 158; State v. Aldrich, 14 R. I. 171; Chasne v. Wilson, 1 Bosw. 673; Jacobs, Law of Dom. chap. 3, p. 113, § 70.

Residence commonly imports something less fixed and stable than, and to that extent different from, domicil; and a distinction is taken between the actual and legal residence, the latter being generally deemed equivalent to domicil.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought in March, 1884, in the Supreme Court of New York, Kings County, by the plaintiff in error against the Chesapeake, Ohio and Southwestern Railroad Company, a corporation created under the laws of Kentucky and Tennessee. Its object was to recover damages alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff on the 30th of November, 1882, in the State of Tennessee, in consequence of the careless, negligent and wrongful conduct of the defendant and its servants, while he was a passenger upon one of its trains. Upon the petition of the Company the action was removed into the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of New York, where, after the evidence was concluded, the jury, under the direction of the court, returned a verdict for the defendant. This direction was given because, in the opinion of that court, the plaintiff's cause of action was barred by the Statutes of Limitation of New York.

The Statutes here referred to are in these words:

"The following actions must be commenced within the following periods, after the cause of action has accrued. . . . Within three years: . . . An action to recover damages for a personal injury, resulting from negligence." N. Y. Code of Civil Procedure, §§ 380, 388.

"Where a cause of action, which does not involve the title to, or possession of, real property within the State, accrues against a person who is not then a resident of the State, an action cannot be brought thereon in a court of the State, against him or his personal representative, after the expiration of the time limited by the laws of his residence for bringing a like action, except by a resident of the State, and in one of the following cases:

"1. Where the cause of action originally accrued in favor of a resident of the State.

"2. Where, before the expiration of the time so limited, the person in whose favor it originally accrued was, or became, a resident of the State, or the cause of action was assigned to, and thereafter continuously owned by, a resident of the State." Id. § 890.

A motion for a new trial having been overruled, a judgment was rendered for the Company. That judgment is here for review, the only error assigned being the court's instruction to find for the defendant.

It was agreed that at the trial the plaintiff gave testimony tending to show the following facts: He lived in Harlem, New York, when a boy of fourteen years of age, married in Brooklyn, removed from that city to Michigan, from the latter State to Illinois, and from Illinois to St. Louis, Missouri, where he had resided for about one year prior to the accident. At the time of the accident he was a traveling salesman for an agent of the Michigan Salt Association located in St. Louis, and when the trial took place was engaged in that capacity. When injured, he resided in St. Louis, with his wife and children. In August, 1883, he "sent his wife and children to Brooklyn, New York, where they took up their residence and commenced to keep house, and where they have resided ever since August, 1883, and do now reside." The plaintiff himself did not go to Brooklyn with his family in August, 1883, nor did he join them there until December 31, 1883, or January 1, 1884. "He remained with his family in Brooklyn for about three months, when he again went to St. Louis, and from there went traveling for said agency as said salesman." He "again joined his wife and children the next December, 1884, and remained with them some three months, when he again went out on the road." He joined his family in October, 1885, and was with them at the time of the trial. He lived with them when at home, and always lived with his wife since their marriage, except when absent on business. The attorney for the defendant addressed the plaintiff at his place of business in St. Louis, up to December 28, 1883, on which day the latter notified him by letter of his change of address to Brooklyn, for which place he was in the act of starting to join his family.

Upon the issue as to the residence of her husband, Mrs. Penfield's evidence was, that they had lived together constantly for about twenty-two years, and she was always with him except when he was traveling. Having stated that at the time of the accident, and during the sickness of her husband, resulting from the injuries received by him, they resided at St. Louis, her examination continued: "Q. How long did you continue to live there yourself after this sickness? A. Until the next August. Q. What year was that? A. 1883. Q. In August, 1883, what did you do? A. Came here to Brooklyn; hired a house and went to housekeeping; moved all my things I wished to retain, and have lived here ever since with my children. Q. What about your furniture? A. Part I sold in St. Louis and part I brought here. Q. And have you been residing here ever since? A. Yes, sir. Q. Your husband's place of abode is here with you in your house? A. Yes, sir. Q. At the time you removed from St. Louis to Brooklyn,—will you state, if you know, the reason why your husband did not come on with you at that time?" This question was objected to as immaterial and irrelevant, and was not answered.

As the Railroad Company is a corporation of Tennessee, where the injury occurred, and as the plaintiff was not a resident of New York when the cause of action originally accrued to him, the suit was barred by section 890 unless he became a resident of the latter State before the expiration of the period limited by the laws of Tennessee for the commencement of actions like this, that is, before the expiration of one year from November 30, 1882. The contention of the plaintiff is that, although he was not in the State of New York for some years prior to December, 1883, he became, within the meaning of the Statute, a resident of that State, when, in August, 1883, he sent his family to the City of Brooklyn. We are not aware of any determination of this precise question by the highest court of New York. But there are decisions of that court construing statutes, other than Statutes of Limitation, which contain the words "resident" and "residence." Those decisions may throw some light upon the present case.

The earliest of those cases, to which our attention has been called, is Re Thompson, 1 Wend. 48. It arose under a Statute (1 Rev. Laws, 157), the 23d section of which provided "that the estate, real and personal, of every debtor who resides out of this State, and is indebted within it, shall be liable to be attached and sold for the payment of his debts, in like manner, in all respects, as nearly as may be, as the estates of debtors residing within this State." Chief Justice Savage, delivering the opinion of the court, said that the object of the Statute was to authorize creditors to prosecute for their debts when their debtors were abroad; and whether their absence from the State was permanent or temporary, whether voluntary or involuntary, the reason for giving this remedy to the creditor was the same. He said the question was "Where was his actual residence, not his domicile?" . . . The Act is intended to give a remedy to creditors, whose debtors cannot be served with process. If the debtor absconds or secretes himself, then an attachment issues. If he notoriously resides abroad, then the attachment issues. But if he goes openly to another State or country, and remains there doing business, but intending to return when his convenience will permit, he is not, as his counsel contends, an absent debtor, and his property cannot be attached. He may become a bankrupt abroad, as has Alexander Thompson; his property may be taken by his partners, and used by them, or transferred to his foreign creditors, as is attempted in this case; and the creditor may stand by and acknowledge and regret the insufficiency of our laws, but the property cannot be touched. Surely the Legislature never intended such a state of things. . . . The reason why this remedy is given against the property of debtors resident abroad is equally applicable whether the debtor is absent permanently or temporarily. No length of residence, without the intention of remaining, constitutes domicile. A debtor, therefore, by residing abroad, without declaring an intention to remain, might prevent his creditors from ever collecting their debts. In my judgment, the present case comes not only within the spirit of the Act, but also within its terms."

In Frost v. Brisbin, 19 Wend. 11, the court was required to determine the meaning of the word "resident," in the Act of 1831 (Statutes 1831, p. 896), providing that no person should be arrested on civil process in suits brought upon contracts, express or implied, except in cases where the defendant "shall not have been a resident of this State for at least one month previous to the commencement of a suit against him."

In that case it appeared that Brisbin, a citizen and resident of New York, purchased a stock of goods, took them to Milwaukee, and established himself in business in the latter city, leaving his wife and child to board at his former residence in New York. There was evidence tending to show that he went to Milwaukee with intent to make it his permanent residence. But there was also evidence tending to show that he had no fixed purpose, when he went to that city, of making it his permanent abode, unless he was successful in business, and that when arrested he had the purpose—not having been thus successful—to close up his business and return to his former residence, though without any certain plans as to his future course.

The court, speaking by Chief Justice Nelson, said that if the case turned upon the defendant's formed intention and purpose of mind, and not upon the fact of actual residence, the law was for him. But upon a review of former decisions, construing statutes regulating the rights and remedies of creditor and debtor, he said: "The cases cited above establish that the transient visit of a person for a time at a place does not make him a resident while there; that something more is necessary to entitle him to that character. There must be a settled, fixed abode, an intention to remain permanently at least for a time, for business or other purposes, to constitute a residence within the legal meaning of that term. . . . One of these cases expressly, and all of them virtually, decide that actual residence, without regard to the domicile of the defendant, was within the contemplation of the statutes. Whether, therefore, the defendant had so established himself at Milwaukee as to work a change of his domicile or not, is immaterial; for if we concede he has not, he may still be a resident there. The domicile of the citizen may be in one State or Territory, and his actual residence in another." After observing that upon the facts it must be assumed that the defendant commenced an actual and permanent residence in Milwaukee in the spring of 1886, but that since that date he had resolved to close his business there as soon as it could be conveniently done, and return to his former residence, the court said: "Has this change of intention worked a change of residence? For this is the most that can be pretended. If our exposition of the meaning of the term in the Statute is correct, it clearly did not. His actual residence is still at Milwaukee. He is still carrying on his business there, and may continue it for such time as he pleases. Change of mind may lead to change of residence, but cannot with any propriety be deemed such of itself."

In Haggart v. Morgan, 5 N. Y. 422, 428—which was the case of an attachment against the defendant as a nonresident debtor,—it was held that, although the defendant was domiciled in New York, he was, by reason of a continuous, though temporary, absence in New Orleans, for about three years, to be deemed a nonresident within the meaning of the Statute regulating attachments.

In Weitkamp v. Loehr, 53 N. Y. Sup. Ct. Rep. [21 Jones & S.] 82, the court said: "Residence, in Attachment Laws, generally implies an established abode, fixed permanently for a time, for business or other purposes, although there may be an intent existing all the while to return to the true domicile."

These cases show that, within the meaning of the Statutes regulating attachments against the property of debtors, as well as those regulating arrests on civil process for debts, it was the actual residence of the defendant, and not his domicile, that determined the rights of the parties.

A like construction appears to have been given, or assumed, by the courts of New York in regard to similar words in that clause of its Statute of Limitations which provides that if, after the cause of action shall have accrued, the defendant shall "depart from and reside out of the State, the time of his absence" shall not be included in the period of limitation. The Supreme Court of the State, discussing that provision, said: "The expressions 'and reside out of the State' and 'the time of his absence' have the same meaning; they are correlative expressions. So that while the defendant in this case resided out of, he was absent from, the State, and accordingly, until he again became a resident of the State, the suspension of the operation of the Statute continued." Burroughs v. Bloomer, 5 Denio, 582, 585. It was held in that case, as well as in two later and well considered opinions, the one of the Superior Court of the City of New York, delivered by Mr. Justice Duer, and the other of the court of appeals, delivered by Judge Selden, that where a defendant, after the cause of action accrued against him, departed from and resided out of the State several times, returning to the State in the intervening periods, all the times of absence or nonresidence were to be added together and deducted from the term of limitation. Ford v. Babcock, 2 Sandf. 518, 527, 531; Cole v. Jessup, 10 N. Y. 96, 104, 107. In each of those three cases it was not alleged or contended, and could not be inferred from any language in the pleadings, or in the opinion, that the defendant changed his domicile upon each departure and return. To the same effect is Satterthwaite v. Abercrombie, 23 Blatchf. 308. And, in a very recent case, the court of appeals said: "The law gives a creditor six years' continued presence of his debtor within the State after the cause of action has accrued." Engel v. Fischer, 102 N. Y. 400, 404, 3 Cent. Rep. 808.

To give a different meaning to the word "residence," or "resident," or "reside" in that clause of the New York Statute of Limitations which relates to plaintiffs, from that which the courts of the State have given it in that clause of the same Statute which relates to defendants, as well as in various statutes of the State on other subjects, would produce much confusion.

Assuming, without deciding, that the testimony introduced for the plaintiff in the present case would warrant the impression that he had obtained a domicile in the State of New York by virtue of his wife and family, with his consent, having made their home in that State, there is nothing in the evidence which had the slightest tendency to show that his own actual residence was in the State of New York for many years prior to his going there from St. Louis in December, 1883.

To illustrate by referring to other statutes, let us suppose that the plaintiff, while engaged in business in St. Louis, had brought this action in the Supreme Court of New York, immediately after his family took up their residence in Brooklyn. Could he not have been compelled to give security for costs, under section 3268 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which declares that "the defendant, in an action brought in a court of record, may require security for costs to be given, . . . where the plaintiff was, when the action was commenced, . . . a person residing without the State." Or, if the defendant in this action had, within the same period, brought, in one of the courts of New York, a suit against the present plaintiff, upon a cause of action, for an "injury to personal property, in consequence of negligence," it could not be doubted, in view of the decisions heretofore cited, that an attachment could have been sued out, and sustained, under sections 685 and 686 of the Code, which provide that a warrant of attachment against the property of one or more defendants in such an action may be granted upon the application of the plaintiff, where it appears by affidavit "that the defendant is . . . not a resident of the State." Could Penfield, in the last case supposed, have been deemed a nonresident of New York, when sued for "an injury to personal property in consequence of negligence," and under the same facts be regarded as a resident of New York if he sued the same party "for a personal injury resulting from negligence?" Could he be deemed a resident of the State for the purpose of bringing this action, immediately after his family reached Brooklyn, and a nonresident if the Railroad Company had, at the same time, sued him in New York, and taken out an attachment against his property? The answer to these questions suggests that, in view of the course of decisions in New York, the plaintiff by retaining his residence for purposes of business in St. Louis, did not become a resident of New York, within the meaning of section 390, until he changed his actual residence to that State. If he had, before the expiration of the period limited by the law of Tennessee, quit- ted his residence in Missouri and joined his family in New York for the purpose of mak- ing the latter State his residence in fact, he would have been entitled to bring his action within the period fixed by the laws of New York for the commencement of actions like this by one who is a resident of that State when the cause of action accrues.

As under the evidence the jury could not, by any reasonable inference from the proof, have found that the plaintiff became himself a resident of New York within a year after the cause of action accrued, the instruction to find for the defendant was right.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 361-372.)

Idaho Supreme Court, jurisdiction of—Legisla- ture of Idaho—federal question—authority exercised under United States—mandamus to correct records of Legislature—power of court to determine whether Legislature is lawfully constituted.

1. The Supreme Court of Idaho Territory has original jurisdiction to issue writs of mandate, review, prohibition, habeas corpus, and all writs necessary to the exercise of its appellate juris- diction.
2. The Legislature of Idaho has power to confer such jurisdiction on that court. Sec. 1910, U. S. Rev. Stat., does not forbid the conferring of such jurisdiction.
3. A mandamus issued upon the ground that bodies of persons claimed, but without right, to be, respectively, the lawful Council and House of Representatives of such Territory, usurped the legislative power conferred by Congress upon the Legislative Assembly of the Territory and passed enactments purporting to be laws of such Territory, draws in question the lawful existence of those bodies as such Council and House of Representatives, and the validity of the author- ity which they have assumed to exercise under the United States.

4. A court, by means of writs of mandamus oper- ating upon the officers of legislative bodies, can- not make up the records of the proceedings of those bodies, or cause alterations to be made in such records as prepared by the officer whose duty it was to prepare them.
5. The court, in a case that does not involve the private rights of litigants, cannot be required to determine whether or not particular bodies of persons constituted a lawful Legislative Assem- bly.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

These cases depend upon the same principles of law, and will be considered together.

It appears from the record of the first one (No. 1138) that upon the petition of the appellant to the Supreme Court of the Territory of Idaho, an alternative writ of mandamus was issued, stating substantially the following facts: The appellant was and is the president of the Council of the 15th session of the Legislature of Idaho, and the appellee is the secretary of that Territory. On the 60th day of that session, February 7, 1889, the Council continued in session until midnight, and thereafter until about one o'clock of the succeeding morning. About the latter hour in the morning of the 8th day of February, 1889, a communication was received from the chief clerk of the House of Representatives, announcing that that body had elected one George P. Wheeler as speaker pro tem. The petitioner declined to receive that message as a message from the House, for the reason that the latter body had no authority to elect a speaker after the expiration of the sixty days prescribed for the session by the Act of Congress; and the petitioner, as president of the Council, announced to that body and declared "that, because the hour of 12 o'clock and after had arrived, and the time had elapsed in which the said Legislature was permitted to transact business, therefore the said Council was adjourned without day." He then inquired of the chief clerk if the adjournment was recorded in the minutes of the proceedings of the session, and received from him the reply that it was. The Council then dispersed, and the petitioner and some of the members left the room, after which other members pretended to reorganize the Council, and to elect one S. F. Taylor president pro tem. thereof, and to elect other officers of the Council, and also assumed to transact legislative business, passing enactments which the persons, so pretending to be a legislature, claimed were Acts of the Legislature of the 15th session of the Territory. Seventeen Acts were so passed after the time had expired for holding the session of the Legislature.

The writ also stated that in making up a record of the sixtieth day of the legislative session the clerk did not thereafter show him the same; and petitioner never saw, until after the clerk had filed with E. J. Curtis, the secretary of the Territory, certain papers which he claimed were the proceedings of the sixtieth day of the session of the Council, but which, in fact, were a false and fictitious account of those proceedings, signed by S. F. Taylor, and not signed by petitioner, president of the Council, as required by its rules and practice. The petitioner found that a part of the minutes or records had been cut out, and that there were three stubs of leaves which had been a part of the former proceedings of the records or minutes of said session. The part of the minutes reciting that the president of the Council declared the session adjourned, and his reasons therefor, had been cut out and were omitted from the minutes as filed with the secretary of the Territory.

On the 14th of February, 1889, the petitioner, as the president of the Council, called the attention of the secretary of the Territory to said cut leaves, stating to him the proceedings that should have appeared therein, and handed to him a report thereof as they actually occurred, demanding that the same be incorporated with the proceedings of the Legislature, and recorded as a part of the proceedings of the Council. The defendant, Edward J. Curtis, declined to record the adjournment proceedings as a part of the proceedings of the Legislature. The petitioner then and there demanded that the report as furnished by him be certified to Congress as part of the proceedings of the Legislature of Idaho for the fifteenth session. But defendant refused to report the said adjournment as a part of the proceedings. The petitioner, after having stated and certified to him, as secretary of the Territory, that all of the alleged proceedings, wherein it was stated that S. F. Taylor was president pro tem., were had after the hour of 12 o'clock, and after the adjournment of the Council by the president thereof, demanded that the subsequent proceedings and pretended legislation be not recorded as a part of the proceedings of the Legislature; and, if already recorded, that the same be expunged from the record of the proceedings of the 15th session of the Legislature; all of which the secretary declined to do, and he still declines to treat the proceedings and Acts signed by S. F. Taylor, president pro tem., as null and void, and threatens to certify them to Congress as a part of the proceedings of the Council.

The record in the second case (No. 1134) shows that upon the petition of H. Z. Burkhardt, speaker of the House of Representatives of Idaho Territory, 15th session, an alternative writ of mandamus was issued against Charles H. Reed, chief clerk of that body, and Edward J. Curtis, secretary of the Territory, alleging the following facts:

The defendant Reed, as such chief clerk, has in his possession the minutes of the proceedings of the last day of the session of the House of Representatives, which minutes have been read and approved by that body, and so declared to it then and there by the speaker on the last day of such session. Thereafter the speaker asked the clerk if there was any further business before the house, and the latter replied there was none. After the hour of 12 o'clock midnight of the 7th day of February, 1889, being the 60th and last day of the session, the plaintiff, as speaker and acting as such, announced that the time had arrived when by the Act of Congress the session closed by limitation of time, and declared the House adjourned sine die. To that announcement there was no dissent by the House or by any member thereof, but all acquiesced therein, and the speaker, acting as such, actually adjourned the House after the hour of 12 o'clock at night of the 60th day of the session. Upon such adjournment he and a portion of the representatives left the assembly room, and thereafter several members of the Legislature elected a speaker and assumed to pass Acts and to perform the duties of the House.

The writ in this case also states that it was and is the duty of the defendant Reed, as chief clerk, to make and keep correct and true minutes of the doings and proceedings of the House, and upon their approval by the speaker it is his custom and duty to sign the same as speaker. But Reed wrongfully and fraudulently falsified said record of the minutes of the House on its last day's session, and took from and kept out of the minutes the fact that the speaker had them read and approved, and declared the same duly approved, and that the speaker asked the clerk if there was any further business, to which the latter replied that there was none, and that the speaker declared the House adjourned without day, according to the laws of the United States, the time for the limit of the session having expired. He wrongly and falsely put into the minutes of the last day's session the statement that, pending the reading of the journal, the speaker left the chair and went out of the House, when, in fact, he did not leave the House until after its final adjournment. The defendant Reed also neglected and refused to allow the speaker to inspect, revise, approve or sign the minutes, and obtained the signature thereto of one George P. Wheeler, a member of the Legislature, who was neither the speaker nor the actual speaker pro tem. of the House. He filed with the defendant Curtis, secretary of the Territory, said falsified minutes as the true minutes of the last day's session, although the same, as the defendant Curtis knows, were not signed by the speaker as the law and custom require. On the 7th day of February, 1889, demand was made by Lyttleton Price, in behalf of the speaker, the plaintiff herein, that Curtis do not record or treat the proceedings after said adjournment as the proceedings of the House. Yet Curtis, as secretary, is wrongfully claiming and pretending that said false and incorrect minutes are the real, true and correct journals and minutes of the House, and is threatening to continue so to do, and to record and preserve those minutes as a record of the proceedings of the House on the last day of its 15th session.

These are the essential facts disclosed by the alternative writs of mandamus.

By the writ in the first case the defendant Curtis was commanded "to record the said report of the said proceedings of the said Council, as a part of the proceedings of the fifteenth session of the Legislature of Idaho Territory," and "to expunge from the records of the said sixtieth day of the session all the proceedings assumed to have been done while S. F. Taylor is alleged to be president of the Council, and to strike from the files and records of the laws of Idaho those pretended Acts of legislation signed by S. F. Taylor as president of the Council, or show cause," etc.

The writ in the other case commanded the defendants "to bring such minutes and pretended minutes and journal of said House of Representatives into court, that the same may be corrected so as to state the facts, and that said Charles H. Reed correct the same in accordance with the facts, so that it may appear in the proper place in the minutes that said speaker asked the clerk if there was any further business before the House, and that the clerk said there was not, and that thereupon the minutes were read and approved, and that thereupon, it then being 12 o'clock midnight, the said speaker announced to the House that, the time having arrived when the session must close according to the law of Congress, he therefore now declared the House adjourned sine die, and that to the said announcement of the expiration of the time of the session there was no dissent, and that to the said order of final adjournment there was no objection; and that in every way and manner and particular said Reed make said minutes correspond with the facts, and be a full, true and complete record of said last day's session of said House of Representatives, and be nothing otherwise; and that, after being so corrected, the said speaker, H. Z. Burkhardt, may have an opportunity to sign said minutes as corrected; that the same be returned to the defendant Edward J. Curtis, as such secretary, or that, failing so to do," cause be shown, etc.

In each case there was a demurrer upon these grounds: (1) The court has no jurisdiction of the person of the defendant or of the subject of the proceeding. (2) The plaintiff has no legal capacity to sue. (3) The petition and writ do not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action or proceedings of this kind. (4) The writ is ambiguous and uncertain. In the second case an additional ground was assigned to the effect that several causes of action were improperly united. The demurrers were all sustained, and the applications for writs of mandamus denied.

Certain questions of jurisdiction raised by the appellees must be first examined. It is contended by them that the Supreme Court of Idaho has no original jurisdiction, and that, if it had, no appeal lies from its judgment in this case. Neither of these propositions are sound. The Revised Statutes of the United States expressly declare that the jurisdiction, both appellate and original, of the courts of Idaho "shall be limited by law." § 1866. And by section 8816 of the Revised Statutes of Idaho it is provided that the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of that Territory shall be original and appellate, and that "its original jurisdiction extends to the issuance of writs of mandate, review, prohibition, habeas corpus and all writs necessary to the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction." Of the power of the Legislature of Idaho to confer original jurisdiction upon the Supreme Court of the Territory in such cases, there can be no doubt. Its power extends to all rightful subjects of legislation not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States. Rev. Stat. U. S. § 1851. The jurisdiction of the several courts of the Territory is a rightful subject of legislation, and the above provision is not inconsistent with the Constitution or any Act of Congress.

It is contended, however, that the provision that each of the district courts in certain Territories, including Idaho, "shall have and exercise the same jurisdiction, in all cases arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States, as is vested in the circuit and district courts of the United States" (Rev. Stat. U. S. § 1910), confers original jurisdiction, in cases of that character, only upon the territorial district courts. But that section is not to be so interpreted. It does not forbid the Legislature from giving original jurisdiction to the district courts of the Territory in cases other than those therein named. Accordingly, by the Revised Statutes of Idaho the jurisdiction of the district courts of the Territory is extended to all civil actions for relief formerly given in courts of equity; in which the subject of litigation is not capable of pecuniary estimation; in which the subject of litigation is capable of such estimation, and which involve the title or possession of real estate, or the legality of any tax, unjust assessment, toll or municipal fine; to all special proceedings; to the issuing of writs of mandate, review, prohibition, habeas corpus and all writs necessary to the exercise of its powers, and to the trial of indictments. Rev. Stat. Idaho, § 8880. Nor does section 1910 of the Revised Statutes of the United States forbid the Territorial Legislature from conferring original jurisdiction upon the Supreme Court of the Territory in cases named in section 8816 of the Revised Statutes of Idaho, although such cases may depend upon questions arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States. If Congress had intended to confer upon the district courts of the Territories named exclusive jurisdiction in the class of cases named in section 1910, it would have so declared in express terms.

This question has been adverted to because the jurisdiction of this court to review the judgment below depends upon the inquiry whether the present case is embraced by section 2 of the Act of March 8, 1885, authorizing this court, without regard to the sum or value in dispute, to review the judgment or decree of the supreme court of a Territory, in any case in which is drawn in question the validity of an authority exercised under the United States. 23 Stat. 443, chap. 855. Do the cases now before us raise any question as to the validity of an authority exercised under the United States? We are of opinion that they do. By the Revised Statutes of the United States, the legislative power in each Territory is vested in the governor and a Legislative Assembly, the latter to consist of a Council and House of Representatives. § 1846. The alternative writ of mandamus proceeds upon the ground that a body of persons claimed, but without right, to be, respectively, the lawful Council and House of Representatives of the Territory, usurped the legislative power conferred by Congress upon the Legislative Assembly of the Territory, and passed enactments purporting to be laws of such Territory. In each case is directly drawn in question the lawful existence of those bodies as the Council and House of Representatives of the Territory, and, consequently, the authority which they have assumed, as the Legislative Assembly of the Territory, to exercise under the United States. In this respect the present case differs from Balti- more & P. R. Co. v. Hopkins, 180 U. S. 210, 225 [32: 908, 912], upon writ of error to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. In that case it was held that the words in the Act of March 3, 1885 (23 Stat. 448, chap. 355), the validity of a "statute of or an authority exercised under the United States," do not embrace a case which depends only on a judicial construction of an Act of Congress, there being no denial of the power of Congress to pass the Act, or of the right to enjoy whatever privileges are granted by it. The case now before us is within the very letter of the Act of 1885 because there is drawn in question the validity of an authority exercised under the United States. Clayton v. Utah Territory, 132 U. S. 632, 637 [33: 455, 456]. It is consequently our duty to inquire whether the court below erred in withholding the relief asked by the petitioners.

It is clear that such relief cannot be granted without deciding that the body over which George P. Wheeler presided was not the lawful House of Representatives; that the one over which S. F. Taylor presided was not the lawful Council; and that the minutes filed with the secretary of the Territory, purporting to be the record of the proceedings of the last day of the fifteenth session of the Legislature, were not true minutes of that day's session prior to its legal termination, but were, in part, minutes of the proceedings of persons who did not constitute the Council and House of Representatives of the Territory. Those facts being determined in favor of the petitioners the court is, in effect, asked to take these minutes into its own custody or under its control; to cause them to be corrected in accordance with the facts as alleged by the petitioners to exist; to order them, after being thus corrected, to be filed in the office of the secretary of the Territory, as the only true records of the legislative proceedings in question; and to require that officer to expunge from the files and records of the laws of the Territory the Acts passed while Taylor and Wheeler assumed to be the presiding officers, respectively, of the Council and House of Representatives of the Territory. And this relief, it is to be observed, is not asked by anyone claiming to have a beneficial interest in defeating or in sustaining the enactments passed by the two bodies alleged to have usurped the functions of a legislative assembly. Rev. Stat. Idaho, § 4978.

We are all of opinion that there was no error in denying these applications for writs of mandamus. We have not been referred to any adjudged case that would justify a court in giving the relief asked by the petitioners. And we do not suppose that such a case can be found in any State whose powers of government are distributed—as is the case in the Territory of Idaho—among separate, independent and co-ordinate departments, the legislative, the executive and the judicial. 12 Stat. 808, chap. 97; Rev. Stat. U. S. 1841, 1846, 1907. "One branch of the government," this court said in the Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U. S. 700, 718 [25: 496, 501], "cannot encroach on the domain of another without danger. The safety of our institutions depends in no small degree on a strict observance of this salutary rule."

It is not one of the functions of a court to make up the records of the proceedings of legislative bodies. Nor can it be required, in a case not involving the private interests of parties, to determine whether particular bodies, assuming to exercise legislative functions, constitute a lawful legislative assembly. Such a question might indeed arise in a suit depending upon an enactment passed by such an assembly. And it might be that, in a case of that character, and under some circumstances, the court would be compelled to decide whether such an enactment was passed by a legislature having legal authority to enact laws. How far in the decision of such a question the judiciary would be concluded by the record of the proceedings of those bodies, deposited by the person whose duty it was to keep it with the officer designated by law as its custodian, are questions we have no occasion at this time to consider. It is sufficient for the disposition of the present case to say that the court below properly refused to lay its hands upon what purported to be the record of the proceedings of the Legislative Assembly of Idaho, in the custody of the secretary of that Territory, and to cause changes or alterations to be therein made.

The cases cited by the appellants do not assert any different doctrines in respect to the power of the courts over the record of the proceedings of a co-ordinate department of government. They go no further than to assert the rule that a writ of mandamus, where there is no other adequate remedy, may be granted to compel inferior tribunals, corporations and public officers or agents to perform purely ministerial duties, in respect to which there is no discretion to be exercised. Rev. Stat. Idaho, § 4977. Such cases do not sustain the proposition that the judiciary, by means of writs of mandamus operating upon the officers of legislative bodies, may supervise the making up of the records of the proceedings of those bodies, or cause alterations to be made in such records as prepared by the officer whose duty it was to prepare them. Much less do they justify the court, in a case that does not involve the private rights of litigants, to determine whether particular bodies of persons constituted a lawful legislative assembly.

The judgment in each case is affirmed.

APPPEAL from a judgment of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Virginia discharging upon habeas corpus Wilson Loney from imprisonment under a warrant of arrest from a justice of the peace of the City of Richmond, Virginia, upon a complaint charging him with perjury in giving his deposition as a witness before a notary public of the city in the case of a contested election of a member of the House of Representatives of the United States. Affirmed.

Opinion below, 38 Fed. Rep. 101.

Statement by Mr. Justice Gray:

This was a writ of habeas corpus, granted upon the petition of Wilson Loney, by the circuit court of the United States, to the police sergeant of the City of Richmond, in the State of Virginia, who justified his detention of the prisoner under a warrant of arrest from a justice of the peace for that city upon a complaint charging him with willful perjury committed on February 2, 1889, in giving his deposition as a witness before a notary public of the city in the case of a contested election of a member of the House of Representatives of the United States.

The circuit court discharged the prisoner, upon the ground that the offense charged against him was punishable only under § 5392 of the Revised Statutes, and was within the exclusive cognizance of the courts of the United States. 38 Fed. Rep. 101. The respondent appealed to this court.

Messrs. R. A. Ayers, Atty-Gen. of Virginia, and J. B. Tucker for appellant.
(No counsel for appellee.)

Mr. Justice Gray delivered the opinion of the court:

By the Constitution, the judicial power of the United States is vested in the courts of the United States. Art. 3, sec. 1. By the statutes of the United States, those courts have jurisdiction, exclusive of the courts of the several States, of "all crimes and offenses cognizable under the authority of the United States" (Rev. Stat. § 711, cl. 1); and the circuit courts of the United States have exclusive cognizance of all such crimes and offenses, except where otherwise provided by law, the principal exception being where concurrent jurisdiction is given to the district courts of the United States (Rev. Stat. § 629, cl. 20; Act of August 19, 1888, chap. 866, § 1, 25 Stat. 434); and it is declared, by way of greater caution, that nothing contained in the Crimes Act of the United States "shall be held to take away or impair the jurisdiction of the courts of the several States under the laws thereof." Rev. Stat. § 5323.

The House of Representatives of the United States is made by the Constitution the judge of the elections, returns and qualifications of its own members. Art. 1, sec. 5.

Congress has regulated by law the form in which notice of a contested election may be given and answered, and the time and manner in which depositions on oath of witnesses in such cases may be taken and returned to the House of Representatives by a judge of any court of the United States, or of a court of record of any State, or by any mayor or recorder of a city, or by any register in bankruptcy or notary public, or, if the parties so agree, by any officer authorized to take depositions by the laws of the State or of the United States; and has provided for the punishment of such witnesses failing to attend and testify after being duly summoned. Rev. Stat. §§ 105-180; Act of March 2, 1887, chap. 318 (24 Stat. 445).

Congress has also enacted that every person, having taken an oath to testify truly, "before a competent tribunal, officer or person, in any case in which a law of the United States authorizes an oath to be administered," who willfully and contrary to such oath states any material matter which he does not believe to be true, is guilty of perjury, and shall be punished by fine and imprisonment. Rev. Stat. § 5392.

The laws of Virginia indeed provide that notaries public shall be appointed by the governor of the State; and may take "any oath or affidavit required by law, which is not of such nature that it must be made in court." Virginia Code of 1887, §§ 923, 173. But the oath of a witness in the case of a contested election of a member of the House of Representatives of the United States is not required by any law of Virginia, but is an oath authorized to be administered by the laws of the United States, and by those laws only; and the witness gives his testimony in obedience to those laws, and not in the performance of any duty which he owes to the State in which his testimony is taken.

Any one of the officers designated by Congress to take the depositions of such witnesses (whether he is appointed by the United States, such as a judge of a federal court or a register in bankruptcy, or by the State, such as a judge of one of its courts of record, a mayor or recorder of a city, or a notary public, performs this function, not under any authority derived from the State, but solely under the authority conferred upon him by Congress, and in a matter concerning the government of the United States.

Testimony taken with the single object of being returned to and considered by the House of Representatives of the United States exercising the judicial power, vested in it by the Constitution, of judging of the elections of its members, and taken before an officer designated by Congress as competent for this purpose and deriving his authority to do this from no other source, stands upon the same ground as testimony taken before any judge or officer of the United States, and perjury in giving such testimony is punishable in the courts of the United States. United States v. Bailey, 84 U. S. 9 Pet. 288 [9: 118].

There are cases (the most familiar of which are those of making and uttering counterfeit money) in which the same act may be a violation of the laws of the State, as well as of the laws of the United States, and be punishable by the judiciary of either. Fox v. Ohio, 46 U. S. 5 How. 410 [12: 218]; United States v. Marigold, 50 U. S. 9 How. 560 [18: 257]; Moore v. Illinois, 55 U. S. 14 How. 18 [14: 306]; Ex parte Siebold, 100 U. S. 371, 890 [25: 717, 724]; Cross v. North Carolina, 182 U. S. 131 [38: 287].

But the power of punishing a witness for testifying falsely in a judicial proceeding belongs peculiarly to the government in whose tribunals that proceeding is had. It is essential to the impartial and efficient administration of justice in the tribunals of the nation, that witnesses should be able to testify freely before them, unrestrained by legislation of the State, or by fear of punishment in the state courts. The administration of justice in the national tribunals would be greatly embarrassed and impeded if a witness testifying before a court of the United States, or upon a contested election of a member of Congress, were liable to prosecution and punishment in the courts of the State upon a charge of perjury, preferred by a disappointed suitor or contestant, or instigated by local passion or prejudice.

A witness who gives his testimony, pursuant to the Constitution and laws of the United States, in a case pending in a court or other judicial tribunal of the United States, whether he testifies in the presence of that tribunal, or before any magistrate or officer (either of the nation or of the State) designated by Act of Congress for the purpose, is accountable for the truth of his testimony to the United States only; and perjury committed in so testifying is an offense against the public justice of the United States, and within the exclusive jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and cannot therefore be punished in the courts of Virginia under the general provision of her statutes that "if any person, to whom an oath is lawfully administered on any occasion, willfully swear falsely on such occasion touching any material matter or thing," he shall be guilty of perjury. Virginia Code of 1887, § 3741.

It has accordingly been held by the Supreme Court of New Hampshire, in an able opinion of Chief Justice Parker, that the courts of a State have no jurisdiction of the crime of perjury committed in an examination before a commissioner under the United States Bankrupt Act (State v. Pike, 15 N. H. 83); by Mr. Justice Bradley, affirming a decision of Judge Erskine, as well as by the Supreme Courts of Tennessee and of Georgia, that the state courts have no jurisdiction of perjury in testifying before a commissioner of the circuit court of the United States (Ex parte Bridges, 2 Woods, 428; S. C. sub nom. Brown v. United States, 14 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 566; State v. Shelley, 11 Lea (Tenn.) 594; Ross v. State, 55 Ga. 192); and by the courts of other States, that they have no jurisdiction of perjury in making an affidavit under the Acts of Congress relating to the sale of public lands. State v. Adams, 4 Blackf. 146; People v. Kelly, 88 Cal. 145; State v. Kirkpatrick, 32 Ark. 117.

The decisions in the Supreme Courts of Pennsylvania and of New Hampshire, cited for the appellant, holding that the judiciary of a State has jurisdiction of perjury committed in a proceeding for naturalization before a court of the State, under authority of Congress, tend rather to support than to oppose our conclusion; for they were put upon the ground that the proceeding for naturalization was a judicial proceeding in a court of the State, as it doubtless was. Rump v. Commonwealth, 30 Pa. 475; State v. Whittemore, 50 N. H. 245; Spratt v. Spratt, 29 U. S. 4 Pet. 593, 408 [7: 597, 902].

The courts of Virginia having no jurisdiction of the matter of the charge on which the prisoner was arrested, and he being in custody, in violation of the Constitution and laws of the United States, for an act done in pursuance of those laws by testifying in the case of a contested election of a member of Congress, law and justice required that he should be discharged from such custody, and he was rightly so discharged by the circuit court on writ of habeas corpus. Rev. Stat. §§ 751, 761; Ex parte Royall, 117 U. S. 241 [29: 868].

Judgment affirmed.

CHARLES GREEN.

(See S. C. Re Green, Reporter's ed. 377-380.)

Illegal voting for presidential electors—power of State to punish—indictment containing two charges—secs. 5511, 5514, U. S. Rev. Stat.—illegal voting for member of Congress—habeas corpus.

1. The State has power to punish for illegal and fraudulent voting for presidential electors.
2. The including, in one indictment and sentence, of illegal voting both for a representative in Congress and for presidential electors, does not go to the jurisdiction of the state court, but is, at the worst, mere error, which cannot be inquired into by writ of habeas corpus.
3. Sections 5511 and 5514 of the Revised Statutes were made for the security and protection of elections held for representatives or delegates in Congress, and do not impair or restrict the power of the State to punish fraudulent voting in the choice of its electors.

4. A person imprisoned under the judgment of a corporation court of a city of Virginia, sentencing him to imprisonment and fine on his conviction on an indictment for unlawfully voting at an election held in that city for a representative in Congress and for electors of President and Vice-President, cannot be discharged by a United States circuit court, on habeas corpus.

Submitted Jan. 21, 1890. Decided Mar. 24, 1890.

A PPEAL from a judgment of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Virginia, discharging, upon habeas corpus, the prisoner, Charles Green, from his imprisonment under a judgment of the Hustings or Corporation Court of the City of Manchester, Virginia, sentencing him to imprisonment upon his conviction by a jury upon an indictment for unlawfully voting for a representative in Congress and for electors of President and Vice-President, he being disqualified so to vote. Reversed.

Statement by Mr. Justice Gray:

This was a writ of habeas corpus, granted upon the petition of Charles Green, by the circuit court of the United States, to the sergeant and jailer of the City of Manchester in the State of Virginia, who justified his detention of the prisoner under a judgment of the hustings or corporation court of the city, sentencing him to be imprisoned in the city jail for five weeks and to pay a fine of five dollars, upon his conviction by a jury on an indictment charging him with unlawfully, knowingly, corruptly and with unlawful intent voting at an election held in that city for a representative in Congress and for electors of President and Vice-President of the United States on November 6, 1888, being disqualified by a previous conviction for petty larceny.

By the Code of Virginia of 1887, general elections are held throughout the State on the fourth Tuesday in May, and on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, in each year, for all officers required by law to be chosen at such elections respectively (§ 109); persons convicted of bribery at an election, embezzlement of public funds, treason, felony or petit larceny, are disqualified to vote (§ 62); elections are by ballot containing the names of all persons intended to be voted for and designating the office of each (§ 122); members of the House of Representatives of the United States are chosen by the qualified voters of the respective congressional districts at the general election in November, 1888, and in every second year thereafter (§ 52); electors for President and Vice-President of the United States are chosen by the qualified voters of the State at the election held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1888, and on the corresponding day in each fourth year thereafter, or at such other time as may be appointed by Congress (§§ 54, 55); and any person, who shall knowingly vote in any election district in which he does not reside and is registered, or vote more than once at the same election, "or, not being a qualified elector, vote at any election with an unlawful intent," shall be punished by imprisonment in jail not exceeding one year, and by fine not exceeding $1000. § 3851.

The circuit court was of opinion "that the United States courts for this district have sole and exclusive jurisdiction to hear and determine the matters and things alleged in the bill of indictment found in the said Hustings Court of Manchester, upon the ground that the Acts of Congress in such case made and provided (Rev. Stat. §§ 5511, 5514) have defined the offense charged in the said indictment and prescribed the penalty therefor, and that the United States courts have sole and exclusive jurisdiction thereof, and that the said Hustings or Corporation Court of Manchester had no jurisdiction of the matters and things charged in the said indictment against the said Charles Green;" and therefore adjudged that the prisoner be discharged. The respondent appealed to this court.

Messrs. R. A. Ayers, Atty-Gen. of Virginia, and J. R. Tucker for appellant.
(No counsel for appellee.)

Mr. Justice Gray delivered the opinion of the court:

In this case, as in Loney's Case [ante, p. 949], just decided, the question presented is whether the courts of the State of Virginia had jurisdiction of the charge against the prisoner. But that is the only respect in which the two cases have any resemblance.

By the Constitution of the United States, the electors for President and Vice-President in each State are appointed by the State in such manner as its Legislature may direct; their number is equal to the whole numbers of senators and representatives to which the State is entitled in Congress; no senator or representative or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector; and the electors meet and vote within the State, and thence certify and transmit their votes to the seat of government of the United States. The only rights and duties, expressly vested by the Constitution in the national government, with regard to the appointment or the votes of presidential electors, are by those provisions which authorize Congress to determine the time of choosing the electors and the day on which they shall give their votes, and which direct that the certificates of their votes shall be opened by the president of the Senate in the presence of the two Houses of Congress, and the votes shall then be counted. Constitution, art. 2, sec. 1; Amendments, art. 12.

The sole function of the presidential electors is to cast, certify and transmit the vote of the State for President and Vice-President of the nation. Although the electors are appointed and act under and pursuant to the Constitution of the United States, they are no more officers or agents of the United States than are the members of the State Legislatures when acting as electors of federal senators, or the people of the States when acting as electors of representatives in Congress. Constitution, art. 1, secs. 2, 3.

In accord with the provisions of the Constitution, Congress has determined the time as of which the number of electors shall be ascertained, and the days on which they shall be appointed and shall meet and vote in the States, and on which their votes shall be counted in Congress; has provided for the filling by each State, in such manner as its Legislature may prescribe, of vacancies in its college of electors; and has regulated the manner of certifying and transmitting their votes to the seat of the national government, and the course of proceeding in there opening and counting them. Rev. Stat. §§ 181-148; Acts of February 8, 1887, chap. 90 (24 Stat. 373); October 19, 1888, chap. 1216 (25 Stat. 618).

Congress has never undertaken to interfere with the manner of appointing electors, or, where (according to the now general usage) the mode of appointment prescribed by the law of the State is election by the people, to regulate the conduct of such election, or to punish any fraud in voting for electors; but has left these matters to the control of the States.

Sections 5511 and 5514 of the Revised Statutes, referred to in the order of the circuit court, were, as observed by this court in Coy's Case, 127 U. S. 731, 751 [82: 274, 278], made for the security and protection of elections held for representatives or delegates in Congress, and do not impair or restrict the power of the State to punish fraudulent voting in the choice of its electors.

The question whether the State has concurrent power with the United States to punish fraudulent voting for representatives in Congress is not presented by the record before us. It may be that it has. Ex parte Siebold, 100 U. S. 371 [25: 717]. But even if the State has no such power in regard to votes for representatives in Congress, it clearly has such power in regard to votes for presidential electors, unaffected by anything in the Constitution and laws of the United States; and the including, in one indictment and sentence, of illegal voting both for a representative in Congress and for presidential electors, does not go to the jurisdiction of the state court, but is, at the worst, mere error, which cannot be inquired into by writ of habeas corpus. Ex parte Crouch, 112 U. S. 178 [28: 690]; Re Coy, 127 U. S. 756-759 [82: 280, 281].

Judgment reversed, and case remanded for further proceedings in conformity with this opinion.

APPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York dismissing a suit in equity for the infringement of letters-patent No. 218,447, granted March 18, 1879, to Carl Pohl for an improvement in barrel and cask-scrubbing machines. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Opinion below, 89 Fed. Rep. 782.

Messrs. Grosvenor P. Lowrey, B. F. Thurston, Clarence A. Seward, J. M. Deuel and Noah Davis for appellants.

Mr. William J. Townsend for appellee.

Mr. Justice Blatchford delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit in equity, brought on the 16th of April, 1889, in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York, by Carl Pohl and Charles Zoller against The Anchor Brewing Company, a corporation, for the infringement of letters-patent No. 218,447, granted March 18, 1879, on an application filed January 3, 1879, to Carl Pohl, for an "improvement in barrel and cask-scrubbing machines."

The patent is granted on its face for the term of seventeen years from March 18, 1879, "subject to the limitation prescribed by sec. 4887, Rev. Stat., by reason of German patent dated September 6, 1877, and French patent dated September 8, 1877." It appears, by translations into English of the German and French patents, annexed to the bill, that the German patent began to run September 6, 1877, and its longest duration was until December 12, 1891, and that the French patent began to run from September 8, 1877, and ran for fifteen years.

The defendant put in a plea to the bill, setting forth that, at the time when Pohl applied for the United States patent, and at the time it was issued, he was a citizen of the Empire of Germany; that, on the 6th of September, 1877, a German patent was issued to him for the same invention, for the term of fifteen years; that, under the German Patent Law of May 25, 1877, he was required to pay certain annuities on the German patent, and to work the invention in the Empire of Germany in the manner and for the term specified by that law; that in default thereof, the term of the German patent would expire, and the rights and privileges of the patentee under it would become forfeited and cease; that Pohl neglected and failed to pay the annuities, and to work the invention in the Empire of Germany in the manner and time required by that law, whereby and under the provisions of that law the German patent became forfeited in 1880, and the term thereof expired; that, by reason thereof, and under the provisions of section 4887 of the Revised Statutes, the United States patent expired and the term thereof ended in 1880, and prior to the commencement of this suit, and, at the time it was brought, the plaintiff had no title to the patent and no rights under it; that, on the 8d of September, 1877, a patent was issued to Pohl for the same invention by the proper authorities of the government of France, for the term of fifteen years, and subject to the provisions of the French Patent Law of July 5, 1844; that, under those provisions, a patentee who failed to pay his annuity as required by that law, before the beginning of each year of the duration of his patent, or who failed to put his invention in working order in France within two years from the signature of the patent, or who ceased such working during two consecutive years, would forfeit all right under the patent; that Pohl neglected and failed to pay his annuity as required by such law, and failed to put his alleged invention in working order in France within two years from the signature of the patent, and ceased such working during two consecutive years, whereby, under the provisions of the French Patent Law, the French patent was forfeited and the time and term thereof expired, and the rights of Pohl thereunder ceased; and that, under the provisions of section 4887 of the Revised Statutes, the United States patent expired and the term thereof ended prior to the commencement of this suit, and at that time the plaintiffs had no title to the patent and no exclusive rights thereunder.

The plea was set down for argument, and the circuit court, held by Judge Wallace, sustained the plea and dismissed the bill. To review that decree the plaintiffs have appealed.

Section 4887 of the Revised Statutes, on which the question involved in this case arises, reads as follows: "No person shall be debarred from receiving a patent for his invention or discovery, nor shall any patent be declared invalid, by reason of its having been first patented or caused to be patented in a foreign country, unless the same has been introduced into public use in the United States for more than two years prior to the application. But every patent granted for an invention which has been previously patented in a foreign country shall be so limited as to expire at the same time with the foreign patent, or, if there be more than one, at the same time with the one having the shortest term, and in no case shall it be in force more than seventeen years." The particular question involved is as to the meaning of the language of the second paragraph of the section.

The United States patent in the present case, granted March 18, 1879, was granted for an invention which had been patented previously, in September, 1877, in Germany and in France. It must be, therefore, by the terms of section 4887, so limited as to expire at the same time with that of the two patents, German and French, "having the shortest term." The German patent on its face appears to have been granted for a term extending from September 6, 1877, to December 12, 1891; and the French patent for a term extending for fifteen years from September 3, 1877, that is, until September 3, 1892. If the United States patent does not expire until the end of the term expressed on the face of that one of the two patents, German and French, which has the shortest term so expressed on its face, it does not expire until the end of the term so expressed on the face of the German patent, namely, December 12, 1891; and so it had not expired when this suit was commenced, and has not yet expired. On the other hand, if it expired when the German patent became forfeited by reason of the facts alleged in the plea in regard to it, or when the French patent became forfeited by reason of the facts alleged in the plea in regard to it, the United States patent expired prior to the commencement of this suit.

The opinion of the circuit court in the present case (39 Fed. Rep. 782) proceeded upon the view that the "term" of the foreign patent, referred to in section 4887, was not the original term expressed in it, but its period of actual existence; and that the United States patent expired when the foreign patent having the shortest term was terminated by its lapsing or becoming forfeited in consequence of the failure of the patentee to comply with the requirements of the foreign patent law. The circuit court regarded the decision of this court in Bate Refrigerating Co. v. Hammond, 129 U. S. 151 [32: 645], made in January, 1889, as requiring such decision.

The question involved in the present case has been decided by several of the circuit courts.

In Holmes Electrical Protective Co. v. Metropolitan Burglar Alarm Co., 21 Fed. Rep. 458, in the Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York, in August, 1884, it was held by Judge Wheeler that section 4887 meant that the term of the United States patent should be as long as the remainder of the term for which the foreign patent was granted, without reference to incidents occurring after the grant of the foreign patent; that that section referred to the fixing of the term of the foreign patent, and not to the keeping of it in force; and that the term of the United States patent was not affected by the fact that a prior English patent had been suffered to lapse by the nonpayment of a tax.

In Paillard v. Bruno, 29 Fed. Rep. 864, in the Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York, in December, 1886, it was held by Judge Wallace, that, under section 4887, a United States patent, for an invention which had been patented previously in England for the term of fourteen years, did not expire until fourteen years from the date of the English patent, notwithstanding the grant of the latter patent had terminated by the failure of the patentee to pay a stamp duty required to be paid as a condition of the continuance of the grant beyond the term of three years.

In Bate Refrigerating Co. v. Gillett, 31 Fed. Rep. 809, in the Circuit Court for the District of New Jersey, in August, 1887, before Mr. Justice Bradley, it was held that where an English patent was granted for a term certain, provided that, if the patentee should not pay a stamp duty within a certain time, the patent should cease and determine, a United States patent afterwards granted for the invention was not affected by a forfeiture of the foreign patent subsequently incurred by a failure to perform such condition; that the term of the English patent fixed the term of the United States patent; that the subsequent fate of the English patent had no effect upon the United States patent; and that the life of each, after its inception, proceeded independently of the life of the other. As authority for this view, Mr. Justice Bradley cited the cases above referred to, of Holmes Electrical Protective Co. v. Metropolitan Burglar Alarm Co. and Paillard v. Bruno.

Prior to the decision of the circuit court in the present case, and in May, 1889, in Huber v. N. O. Nelson Mfg. Co., 88 Fed. Rep. 880, in the Circuit Court for the Eastern District of Missouri, before Judge Thayer, it was held that a United States patent, granted after an English patent for the same invention had lapsed and become void by reason of the non-payment of a stamp duty, was granted without authority of law. This decision was made on the interpretation which the court gave to the case of Bate Refrigerating Co. v. Hammond.

But we think that the question involved in the present case is not the same as that decided in Bate Refrigerating Co. v. Hammond, and is not controlled by the decision in that case. There, a United States patent was granted in November, 1877, for seventeen years. A patent for the same invention had been granted in Canada to the same patentee for five years from January, 1877. The Canadian patent was, in December, 1881, extended for five years from January, 1882, and also for five years from January, 1887, under a Canadian Statute passed in 1872. The question involved was whether, under section 4887, the United States patent expired in January, 1882, or in January, 1892. This court, limiting itself to the precise question involved, said that it was "of opinion that, in the present case, where the Canadian Statute under which the extensions of the Canadian patent were granted, was in force when the United States patent was issued, and also when that patent was applied for, and where, by the Canadian Statute, the extension of the patent for Canada was a matter entirely of right, at the option of the patentee, on his payment of a required fee, and where the fifteen years' term of the Canadian patent has been continuous and without interruption, the United States patent does not expire before the end of the fifteen years' duration of the Canadian patent." This was said on the view, expressed elsewhere in the opinion, that the Canadian patent did not expire, and it never could have been said properly that it would expire, before January, 1892. The ground of this conclusion was, that the "term" of the Canadian patent granted in January, 1877, was by the Canadian Statute at all times a term of fifteen years' duration, made continuous and uninterrupted by the action of the patentee, as a matter entirely of right, at his own option.

By parity of reasoning, as applied to the present case, section 4887 requires that the United States patent shall be so limited as to expire at the same time with the term limited by the foreign patent issued prior to the issuing of the United States patent, having then the shortest time to run. There is nothing in the Statute which admits of the view that the duration of the United States patent is to be limited by anything but the duration of the legal term of the foreign patent in force at the time of the issuing of the United States patent, or that it is to be limited by any lapsing or forfeiture of any portion of the term of such foreign patent, by means of the operation of a condition subsequent, according to the foreign statute. In saying that "every patent granted for an invention which has been previously patented in a foreign country shall be so limited as to expire at the same time with the foreign patent," the Statute manifestly assumes that the patent previously granted in a foreign country is one granted for a definite term; and its meaning is, that the United States patent shall be so limited as to expire at the same time with such term of the foreign patent. Such term was held, in Bate Refrigerating Co. v. Hammond, to be fifteen years and not five years.

This view is made conclusive by the requirement of section 4887, that if there be more than one prior foreign patent, the United States patent shall be so limited as to expire at the same time with that one of such foreign patents "having the shortest term." This means the foreign patent which, at the time the United States patent is granted, has then the shortest term to run, irrespective of the fact that the foreign patent may afterwards lapse or become forfeited by the non-observance of a condition subsequent prescribed by the foreign statute.

In the view that section 4887 is to be read as if it said that the United States patent is to be so limited as to expire at the same time with the expiration of the term of the foreign patent, or if there be more than one, at the same time with the expiration of the term of the one having the shortest term, the interpretation we have given to it is in harmony with the interpretation of the words "expiration of term" in analogous cases. Oakley v. Schoonmaker, 15 Wend. 226; Beach v. Nixon, 9 N. Y. 85; Farnum v. Platt, 8 Pick. 389. In those cases it was held that the words "expiration of term" do not mean expiration of term through a forfeiture by breach of a condition, but mean expiration by lapse of time.

The decree of the Circuit Court is reversed, and the case is remanded to that court with a direction to overrule, with costs, the plea of the defendant, to assign it to answer the bill, and to take such further proceedings as shall not be inconsistent with the opinion of this court.

knowledge by creditor—remotely subsequent creditor—business reverses—depreciation of property—property paid for by wife—presumption.

1. Very clear and direct testimony is essential to support an adjudication that a transfer of property is fraudulent and void as against a subsequent creditor.
2. In order to defeat for fraud a settlement made by a husband upon his wife, it must be intended to defraud existing creditors, or creditors whose rights are expected shortly to supervene, or creditors whose rights may and do so supervene.
3. Even a voluntary conveyance from husband to wife is good as against subsequent creditors, unless executed as a cover for future schemes of fraud.
4. A person who had knowledge of such conveyance two years before he entered into the contract which is the basis of his claim, cannot say that he was defrauded thereby.
5. Where one who made such conveyance did not purpose to, and did not, enter upon any new business, and had at the time an abundance of money to pay all his debts and afterwards paid them, the conveyance will be free from the imputation of fraud, especially as against a remotely subsequent creditor.
6. Subsequent unexpected depreciation in the value of real estate or unexpected reverses in business do not show fraud in intent or fraud in result.
7. Where such conveyance was of property of which the wife was the equitable owner, or in which she had a large equitable interest, by reason of her moneys having paid for the same and for a large share of the improvements thereon, the conveyance was not voluntary but upon good consideration.
8. The court never presumes fraud; carelessness in the dealings between husband and wife does not tend to establish fraud.

Argued Jan. 31, 1890. Decided March 24, 1890.

APPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York that certain transfers of property made by John Schreyer to his wife were fraudulent and void as against a creditor, and that he, as trustee, convey certain real estate and bonds and mortgages to the assignee in bankruptcy. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Opinion below, 25 Fed. Rep. 88.

Messrs. F. R. Coudert and A. O. Salter, for appellant:

The law does not presume fraud, but the reverse.

The fact of indebtedness at the time does not invalidate the conveyance.

As to subsequent creditors, neither the fact of indebtedness nor the absence of consideration will alone establish fraud. The fraudulent intent must be clearly and positively proven.

Herring v. Richards, 1 McCr. 574; Ford v. Johnston, 7 Hun, 568; Dyggert v. Remerschnider, 82 N. Y. 649.

The subsequent creditor must show intent to defraud subsequent creditors.

Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court:

The question in this case is whether certain transfers of property made by John Schreyer to his wife, Anna Maria Schreyer, were fraudulent and void as against Peter J. Vanderbilt, a creditor of John Schreyer. The case is here on appeal from a decree of the Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York, brought by the assignee in bankruptcy of Schreyer against Schreyer individually, and as executor, etc., of his wife, now deceased. The circuit court (25 Fed. Rep. 83) found that the transfers were fraudulent, and decreed that the bankrupt, as executor and trustee, convey the real estate and bonds and mortgages hereafter described to the assignee in bankruptcy. From such decree this appeal has been taken. The facts are these: On January 21, 1871, Schreyer conveyed to his wife the following real estate situated in the City of New York: Nos. 348 and 350 West 39th Street and Nos. 351, 353 and 355 West 42d Street. The title was passed from Schreyer to his wife, by conveyance to Edward Sharkey, and from him to Mrs. Schreyer. On October 15, 1870, Schreyer and his wife conveyed No. 420 West 40th Street to George Gebhart and No. 422 West 40th Street to Matthew L. Ritchie, who each thereupon executed mortgages for $5,000 to Mrs. Schreyer. These conveyances and mortgages were all recorded in 1871. Notice was thus given, by public record, of title in Mrs. Schreyer to both the real estate and the mortgages. Thereafter, and in 1874, buildings were erected on the two lots last mentioned, the mortgages for $5,000 surrendered and two new mortgages taken—one from Gebhart to Mrs. Schreyer for $7,750 on premises No. 420 West 40th Street, and one from Ritchie to Mrs. Schreyer for $8,850 on premises No. 422 West 40th Street. The claim of Vanderbilt arose in this way: On February 2, 1874, a building contract was entered into between George Gebhart and Matthew L. Ritchie, as owners of premises Nos. 420 and 422 West 40th Street, with Vanderbilt, whereby he covenanted to erect two buildings on said premises for the sum of $8,175, to be paid in the following manner: "When the said houses are topped out the payment of five thousand ($5,000) dollars, by assignment of mortgage held by John Schreyer on the property of Anna Maria Schreyer, No. 350 West 42d Street, in the City of New York; three thousand one hundred and seventy-five ($3,175) dollars when the houses are fully completed as above." On May 5, 1874, Vanderbilt had so far completed his contract that he was entitled to an assignment of the bond and mortgage. He then demanded and received from Schreyer not only an assignment, but a guaranty of the bond and mortgage. There was no new consideration for this guaranty. In 1876 a prior mortgage on the premises covered by the bond and mortgage assigned as above set forth was foreclosed, and swept away the entire property, so that this bond and mortgage became worthless; whereupon Schreyer was sued on his guaranty and judgment recovered thereon. On September 17, 1878, John Schreyer was adjudged a bankrupt upon a creditor's petition, filed August 23, 1878. Several claims were proved against his estate in bankruptcy, but all have been satisfied except that of Vanderbilt; so that, while this action was brought by an assignee in bankruptcy, it was really for the sole benefit of Vanderbilt. On September 6, 1876, Mrs. Schreyer died, leaving a will by which her property was devised and bequeathed to her children; her husband was named as executor; and he, individually and as executor, was the defendant in this suit. And now the contention of the plaintiff below is, that the conveyances of January 21, 1871, and the two mortgages from Gebhart and Ritchie to Mrs. Schreyer in 1874, were fraudulent and void as against the claim of Vanderbilt. The conveyances were made and recorded more than three years prior to the building contract, out of which Vanderbilt's claim arose; and, while the mortgages to Mrs. Schreyer were executed and recorded during the same year with the building contract, yet the obligation assumed by Schreyer was a voluntary one, without consideration, and after a contract expressly providing for payment in another way, was conditional, and only became a fixed indebtedness two years thereafter, when by the foreclosure proceedings the worthlessness of the guaranteed bond and mortgage was developed. Obviously, very clear and direct testimony is essential to support an adjudication that these various transfers were fraudulent and void as against this subsequent creditor. In determining the rules applicable to such transactions reference should be had not only to the decisions of this court, but also to those of the courts of New York, where the parties lived and the transactions took place. Allen v. Massey, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 351 [21: 542]; Graham v. La Crosse & M. R. Co. 102 U. S. 148 [26: 106]; Wallace v. Penfield, 106 U. S. 260, 263, 264 [27: 147, 148, 149].

In a recent case in the Court of Appeals of New York (Todd v. Nelson, 109 N. Y. 316, 327, 12 Cent. Rep. 217, 220), that court thus stated the law: "The theory upon which deeds conveying the property of an individual to some third party have been set aside as fraudulent in regard to subsequent creditors of the grantor has been that he has made a secret conveyance of his property while remaining in the possession and seeming ownership thereof, and has obtained credit thereby, while embarking in some hazardous business requiring such credit, or the debts which he has incurred were incurred soon after the conveyance, thus making the fraudulent intent a natural and almost a necessary inference, and in this way he has been enabled to obtain the property of others who were relying upon an appearance which was wholly delusive. Such are the cases cited by the learned counsel for the appellants." See also Phillips v. Wooster, 36 N. Y. 412; Curtis v. Fox, 47 N. Y. 299; Dunlap v. Hawkins, 59 N. Y. 842; Carr v. Breesee, 81 N. Y. 584, and Phenix Bank v. Stafford, 89 N. Y. 405.

Turning now to the cases in this court: It was said in Smith v. Vodge, 92 U. S. 183 [28: 481]: "The law of this case is too well settled to admit of doubt. In order to defeat a settlement made by a husband upon his wife, it must be intended to defraud existing creditors, or creditors whose rights are expected shortly to supervene, or creditors whose rights may and do supervene, the settler purposing to throw the hazards of business in which he is about to engage upon others, instead of honestly holding his means subject to the chance of those adverse results to which all business enterprises are liable. Sexton v. Wheaton, 21 U. S. 8 Wheat. 229 [5: 608]; Mullen v. Wilson, 44 Pa. 418; Stileman v. Ashdown, 2 Atk. 481." In Graham v. La Crosse & M. R. Co., 102 U. S. 148, 154 [26: 106, 108], it was said: "It seems clear that subsequent creditors have no better right than subsequent purchasers to question a previous transaction in which the debtor's property was obtained from him by fraud, which he has acquiesced in, and which he has manifested no desire to disturb. Yet, in such a case, subsequent purchasers have no such right." In Wallace v. Penfield, 106 U. S. 260, 262 [27: 147, 148], in which it appeared that the husband transferring property to his wife was indebted at the time of the transfer, though not to the party complaining of the transaction, the court observed: "His indebtedness existing at the time of the settlement upon the wife, as well as that which arose during the period of the improvements, was subsequently, and without unreasonable delay, fully discharged by him. Commenced in 1868, they were all, with trifling exceptions, completed and paid for before the close of the summer of 1869. So far as the record discloses, no creditor, who was such when the settlement was made or the improvements were going on, was materially hindered by the withdrawal by Williams, from his means or business, of the sums necessary to pay for the land and improvements. Those who seek, in this suit, to impeach the original settlement, or to reach the means he invested in improving his wife's land, became his creditors some time after the improvements (with slight exceptions not worth mentioning) had been made and paid for. If they trusted him in the belief that he owned the land, it was negligent in them so to do, for the conveyance of February 11, 1868, duly acknowledged, was filed for record within a few days after its execution." And in Horbach v. Hill, 112 U. S. 144, 149 [28: 670, 672], this language was used: "The complainant, not showing that he was at the time a creditor, cannot complain. Even a voluntary conveyance is good as against subsequent creditors, unless executed as a cover for future schemes of fraud." From these authorities, it is evident that the rule obtaining in New York, as well as recognized by this court, is that even a voluntary conveyance from husband to wife is good as against subsequent creditors; unless it was made with the intent to defraud such subsequent creditors; or there was secrecy in the transaction by which knowledge of it was withheld from such creditors, who dealt with the grantor upon the faith of his owning the property transferred; or the transfer was made with a view of entering into some new and hazardous business, the risk of which the grantor intended should be cast upon the parties having dealings with him in the new business. Tested by these rules, it is impossible to sustain an adjudication, upon the testimony in this case, that the transfer of either the real estate or the bonds and mortgages was fraudulent as against the creditor Vanderbilt.

Assuming, in the first instance, that both transfers were purely voluntary, the deeds to Mrs. Schreyer were made and recorded three years before the building contract was signed, or the work done, out of which Vanderbilt's claim arose. There was thus that constructive notice referred to in Wallace v. Penfield, supra, as sufficient. Further, on May 21st, 1872, Vanderbilt entered into a written contract with Mrs. Schreyer to do the mason work in the construction of a building on the lots conveyed, the contract price being $10,500. He thus had actual as well as constructive notice, more than two years before he entered into this last contract, that Mrs. Schreyer was the owner of these lots. With such knowledge he entered into the last contract, and thereafter accepted Schreyer's guaranty. How can he then say, with such knowledge, that he was defrauded by those conveyances? Is it possible to suppose that the Schreyers, when they made those conveyances, looked forward three years, and anticipated that Gebhart and Ritchie would seek to improve their real estate, and obtain pecuniary assistance from them, and, with that provision, planned to defraud anyone who might rely upon Mr. Schreyer's guaranty? Further than that, Schreyer did not at the time purpose to, and did not in fact, change his regular business, or enter upon any new business. From 1864 his business was that of a stair-builder, which business he prosecuted steadily until he sold out, in 1876, six years after the conveyances. Notwithstanding these conveyances, he retained all the property used in his stair-building business, was in debt only from five hundred to one thousand dollars, and had money in bank, accounts due him and personal property used in his business, aggregating from ten to twenty thousand dollars. It is true that some $12,000 of mechanic's liens had been filed against buildings which he owned, and which had been recently constructed; but these liens were by sub-contractors, with possibly one or two minor exceptions. Money for their payment was deposited with certain trust companies; and, as the amounts due were adjudicated, they were paid out of moneys thus deposited. Could anything be clearer than that these conveyances were free from all imputation of fraud, as against anybody, and especially as against such a remotely subsequent creditor?

While the transaction as to the bonds and mortgages is nearer in point of time to the creation of the indebtedness to Vanderbilt, it is so remote in fact as also to be free from imputation of fraud. The circumstances surrounding the creation of this debt must be stated a little more in detail: Gebhart and Ritchie owned the lots; they were each subject to two mortgages; one was a mortgage of $3,750, given to Ellen E. Ward, from whom the Schreyers had originally purchased the lots; and one to Mrs. Schreyer, originally $5,000, but reduced by payments to about $2,200. Desiring to build, in the belief that the rents from new buildings on the front of the lots could be used to pay off their indebtedness, they arranged with the Schreyers for an advance of the amount that should be needed in addition to the sums they could borrow on mortgages from the Ward estate. The Ward estate agreed to loan $10,000 on each lot and contemplated building. In pursuance of this arrangement, Mrs. Schreyer released her mortgages, new ones were executed to the Ward estate for $10,000 on each lot, and the difference in money ($6,000 and over) was paid to Gebhart and Ritchie, respectively, and by them handed to the Schreyers; and, when the buildings were completed, new mortgages were executed to Mrs. Schreyer for the $2,200 of her original mortgage, and the excess of the cost above the amount furnished by the Ward estate. Schreyer, who was a practical builder, superintended the construction of the buildings. Vanderbilt made a contract with Gebhart and Ritchie for the mason work, as heretofore stated. He entered into this contract with knowledge that the $5,000 bond and mortgage which Schreyer proposed to transfer in part payment was second and subordinate to a prior mortgage of $16,000. He must have assumed, when he made the contract, that the property mortgaged was good for both mortgages; and, according to the testimony, it was then considered worth from thirty to thirty-five thousand dollars. When he had so far completed his contract as to be entitled to the assignment of his bond and mortgage, he demanded its guaranty from Schreyer; and he, in order that there might be no delay in the work, gave the required guaranty. Two years thereafter, owing to depreciation in value of real estate, the property covered by this $5,000 bond and mortgage was sold under foreclosure of the $16,000 mortgage, and realized only enough to pay that. Hence, Schreyer became liable on his guaranty. Is there anything in these facts to show fraud in intent or fraud in result? Obviously not. Vanderbilt entered into his contract with full knowledge of all the circumstances, unquestionably considering the $5,000 bond and mortgage well secured, and willing to take his chances of its payment on foreclosure, if not otherwise. Schreyer, making no representations or concealments, doubtless acted in the same belief; and when, after partial completion of the contract, he, to prevent delay in the future work, guaranteed payment of the bond and mortgage, he did so in the belief that it was amply secured, and that he was assuming little or no risk in his guaranty. If fraud or wrong was intended on his part, obviously he would have refused to guarantee, and left Vanderbilt to take that which his contract entitled him to. The very fact of his voluntarily assuming a risk which he was under no obligations to assume, and which in no manner inured to his benefit, is satisfactory evidence that he had no thought of fraud. The subsequent depreciation of the value of real estate, and the failure to realize on the sale thereafter more than the first $16,000 mortgage, was something anticipated by neither party. It was one of those vicissitudes unexpected and unlooked for—not planned for—and doubtless an astonishment to all the parties. All the arrangements for the execution of these second mortgages to Mrs. Schreyer were made before any guarantee or personal liability on the part of Schreyer was demanded or thought of, and it does not appear that he was in debt to anyone at the time the arrangements were so made. Surely this unnecessary and voluntary assumption on his part in no manner indicates fraud in the arrangements already entered into and subsequently carried out, for the execution of these bonds and mortgages to Mrs. Schreyer. In the case of Carr v. Breese, 81 N. Y. 584, which was like this in presenting an unexpected depreciation in the value of property, the court justly observed: "Reverses came unexpectedly, while in the pursuit of his ordinary business, without any intention on his part to defraud his creditors, and it may be said that, without any fault on his part, except a want of human foresight, he became embarrassed and insolvent. It is not apparent that Breese had in view, at the time of the execution of the deed to his wife, any such result, or that he in any way contributed to produce the result which followed, for the purpose of defrauding his creditors and enjoying the advantages to be derived from the provisions made for his wife. Under such circumstances, the presumption of any fraudulent intent is rebutted, and it is manifest that he had done no more than any business man has a right to do, to provide against future misfortune when he is abundantly able to do so." Further, as negating any fraud in intent, a year after this guarantee, and when undoubtedly there must have been developing some probability of liability therefrom, Schreyer purchased other real estate and took the title in his own name. Still again, not only did he continue in his regular business of stair-building after these transactions, but it is evident from his bank books, produced in evidence, that his business was of considerable magnitude, for between August 26, 1869, and September 6, 1876, a period of about seven years, and including the time of these transactions, his deposits amounted to $391,296.44.

We have thus far considered the case, as to these transfers from Schreyer to his wife, as if they were purely voluntary; but according to his testimony, and there is none contradicting it, they were far from voluntary, but rather the passing of the legal title to his wife, of property of which she was prior thereto the equitable owner, or in which she had at least a large equitable interest. She had between twenty-five hundred and three thousand dollars in money when they were married, in April, 1854. She purchased the leasehold interest in the lots on 39th Street, paying therefor, out of her own moneys, $500 each. They lived on one of the lots, and the building on the other was rented. Unquestionably, therefore, the rents belonged to her. She also kept boarders for a number of years, two of them living with her for at least ten years, paying $5 per week each. The balance of the money she had when married she passed over to him from time to time for improvements on the property, or use in his business. It is true that afterwards buildings of considerable value were put upon these lots; and we do not wish to be understood as affirming that the entire cost of the property was the proceeds of her investment, or her earnings. All that the testimony fairly discloses is, that at the time of her marriage she was possessed of separate property, which was the foundation and largely the source of these subsequent accumulations. So that the conveyances in 1871 were not purely voluntary, but meritorious and upon good consideration. The same may be said as to the bonds and mortgages placed in her name in 1874.

It is objected by the appellees that Schreyer's testimony is not to be depended upon, because contradictory, confused and uncertain; that there is no definiteness in it as to amounts and dates; and that wrong in the transactions is evident, because the moneys received for rent after the conveyances were deposited by Schreyer in his own name in bank, and were obviously managed and handled by him as his own, as no accounts were kept between husband and wife of their separate moneys, but all were mingled in one fund, in his hands. But does all this indicate fraud? If his testimony is worthless and to be rejected, then there is practically no testimony interpreting those transactions, and the court never presumes fraud. The very confusion and carelessness in the dealings between husband and wife make against rather than in favor of the claim of fraud. There is no evidence that he was in debt at the time of these conveyances, at least beyond a trifling amount, which was subsequently paid; and if the parties had intended fraud and wrong, unquestionably their accounts would have been kept carefully and accurately, and books would now be presented showing such accounts. Husband and wife evidently saw no necessity of dealing with each other at arm's length; the title to the property was placed in her name when there was no legal or equitable reason why it should not be done; and the rents and other cash receipts were not unnaturally kept in one account and handled as one fund. The lack of substantial indebtedness and the record of the transfer being established, the carelessness of their dealings tends to prove honesty rather than to establish fraud.

Again, it is objected that the conduct of Schreyer, in respect to the bankrupt proceedings, is suspicious; that the bankrupt proceedings, though nominally at the instance of a creditor, were really at his instance; that the bankrupt and the creditor found their counsel in the same office; and that the other claims proved against him were in some suspicious way fixed up and adjusted, leaving only Vanderbilt's claim unpaid. Conceding all that is claimed by counsel in reference to these bankrupt proceedings in 1878, it is difficult to deduce therefrom any evidence of wrong in the transactions in 1871 and 1874. It may be that Schreyer did not want to pay Vanderbilt's claim; and it may be, as claimed by counsel, that he improperly sought the assistance of the bankrupt court to be relieved from liability therefrom; but it would be a very unjust conclusion from such facts, that in 1871, when he made the conveyances to his wife, and in 1874, when he made the arrangement for the execution of the bonds and mortgages to his wife, anterior to any known or expected liability to Vanderbilt, he was acting with a view of subsequently going through bankruptcy, or defrauding Vanderbilt or any other creditor.

Recapitulating, the conveyances in 1871 were meritorious, upon good consideration, made by one in debt in only a trifling sum, and retaining an abundance of property for the discharge of those debts, and who in fact subsequently, and as they became due, paid them—made by one continuing and expecting to continue in the same profitable and not hazardous business in which he had been engaged for nearly a score of years, with no thought of entering upon any new or hazardous business, and more than three years before any liability to Vanderbilt was incurred or even thought of. And the placing of the notes, bonds and mortgages in 1874 in Mrs. Schreyer's name was in pursuance of an arrangement entered into when the husband was not in debt, and when no obligation, fixed or contingent, to Vanderbilt had been entered into or thought of.

Under these circumstances it is error to hold that the transactions were fraudulent and void as against Vanderbilt. The decree of the Circuit Court must be reversed, and the case remanded, with instructions for further proceedings in accordance with the views herein expressed.

THOMAS D. HASTINGS.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 401-405.)

Lien of corporation on its stock for debt of stockholder—law of Michigan—statutory notice of lien—certificate of stock not negotiable paper—ignorance of purchaser no waiver.

1. Where by general law a lien is given to a corporation upon its stock for the indebtedness of the stockholder, it is valid and enforceable against all the world.
2. The law of Michigan under which manufacturing corporations may be organized (§ 4143, 1 How. Stat.; § 17, Act 187, Laws 1875), that a corporation shall at all times have a lien upon all the stock or property of its members invested therein, for all debts due from them to such corporation, is a general law as decided by the Supreme Court of Michigan, which decision is conclusive in this court, and everywhere, as to its character.
3. Wherever paper of a nature similar to this is issued, under authority granted by general statute, whoever deals with that paper is charged with notice of all limitations and burdens attached to it by such statute, whether the party lives in or out of the State.

4. It is unnecessary to enter upon the certificate of stock any statement of the limitations and burdens which the law casts upon all such paper; and the omission to state such limitations upon the face of the paper is not a waiver by the corporation of the benefits thereof.
5. Such a certificate is not negotiable in either form or character; and like every non-negotiable paper, whoever takes it does so subject to its equities and burdens; and though ignorant of such equities and burdens, his ignorance does not relieve the paper therefrom, or enable him to hold it discharged therefrom.
6. This lien of a corporation may be waived, but mere ignorance on the part of the purchaser of the fact of the existence of the lien does not destroy it. It constitutes no waiver on the part of the corporation.

Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court:

On July 22, 1884, George O. Sweet was the owner of twelve hundred shares of the capital stock of a corporation organized under the Laws of the State of Michigan, known as George H. Hammond & Company, as evidenced by two certificates of stock (which were alike in everything, except numbers of shares and dates); and of one of which, with indorsements, the following is a copy:

"George H. Hammond & Company.

"Capital stock, $1,500,000. Shares, $25 each.
Number 5. Shares, 800.

"This is to certify that George O. Sweet is entitled to eight hundred shares of $25 each of the capital stock of George H. Hammond & Company. Transferable only on the books of the Company, in person or by attorney, on the surrender of this certificate.

"———. [L. s.]"

These certificates had theretofore been pledged to the National Bank of Illinois, a bank located in the City of Chicago. On that day, in pursuance of the pledge, the stock was sold, and purchased by the defendant in error, Thomas D. Hastings. During all the time that Sweet owned the stock he was indebted to the corporation George H. Hammond & Company. After his purchase Mr. Hastings presented the certificates to the officers of the corporation, and demanded a transfer. This was refused, on the ground that the corporation had a lien upon the stock for the amount of Sweet's indebtedness to it. Thereupon this action was brought.

George H. Hammond & Company was a manufacturing corporation created in October, 1881, under the laws of the State of Michigan, with its principal office in the City of Detroit, 962

Michigan, and Sweet was, during the time of these transactions, a resident of and doing business in the City of Chicago, selling the property of the corporation on commission.

The Law of Michigan under which manufacturing companies may be organized, and under which George H. Hammond & Company was created and exists, has, since 1875, contained this provision (Section 4143, 1 Howell's Annotated Statutes; section 17 of Act 187, Laws 1875): "The stock of every such corporation shall be deemed personal property, and be transferred only on the books of such corporation, in such form and manner as their by-laws shall prescribe; and such corporation shall at all times have a lien upon all the stock or property of its members invested therein, for all debts due from them to such corporation." The general Act (1 Howell, sec. 4868) provides, as to all corporations, that a transfer of stock shall not be valid except as between the parties, unless entered on the books of the company, showing the names of the parties by and to whom transferred, the number and designation of shares, and the date of the transfer. The bank was ignorant of Sweet's indebtedness to the corporation when it lent its money on the security of the stock, and of course Hastings, though notified thereof at the time of the sale, succeeded to all the rights of the bank. On these facts the circuit judge, held that the purchaser took the stock discharged of any lien, and submitted to the jury only the question of the value of the stock; this having been found by its verdict, judgment was entered therefor, and the corporation now alleges error. The single question is, whether the corporation had a lien upon the stock for Sweet's indebtedness, as against the claims of the bank and the purchaser. This question must be answered in the affirmative; for the rule is clear and unquestioned, that where by general law a lien is given to a corporation upon its stock for the indebtedness of the stockholder, it is valid and enforceable against all the world. Union Bank v. Laird, 15 U. S. 2 Wheat. 390 [4: 269]; Brent v. Washington Bank, 35 U. S. 10 Pet. 596 [9: 547]; Cecil Nat. Bank v. Watsontown Bank, 105 U. S. 217, 221 [26: 1039, 1042]; Rogers v. Huntingdon Bank, 12 Serg. & R. 77; Sevall v. Lancaster Bank, 17 Serg. & R. 284; Presbyterian Congregation v. Carlisle Bank, 5 Pa. 345, 348; Farmers Bank v. Iglehart, 6 Gill, 50; Reese v. Bank of Commerce, 14 Md. 271; Hartford First Nat. Bank v. Hartford L. & A. Ins. Co. 45 Conn. 22; Bishop v. Globe Co. 185 Mass. 132; Bohmer v. City Bank, 77 Va. 445.

The law under which this corporation was organized was a general law. So it has been decided by the Supreme Court of Michigan (Newberry v. Detroit & L. S. Iron Mfg. Co. 17 Mich. 141, 151), where it is said: "The law in question is a public Act, and all are charged with knowledge of its provisions." This construction by the Supreme Court of the State which enacted the law is conclusive in this court, as well as everywhere, as to its character. The law in terms provides for a lien, and that being a public law all are charged with knowledge of its provisions. Generally, wherever paper of a nature similar to this is issued, under authority granted by general statute, whoever deals with that paper is charged with notice of all limitations and burdens attached to it by such statute. And this is true whether the party lives in or out of the State by which the law was enacted. See authorities cited, supra. It was unnecessary to enter upon the certificate any statement of the limitations and burdens which the law casts upon all such paper; and the omission to state such limitations upon the face of the paper is not a waiver by the corporation of the benefits thereof.

In the case in 2 Wheaton, supra, where the Act of Incorporation gave a lien, this court, by Mr. Justice Story, said: "The certificate, issued to Patton for the fifty shares held by him (which is in the usual form), declares the shares to be 'transferable at the said bank, by the said Patton, or his attorney, on surrendering this certificate.' No person, therefore, can acquire a legal title to any shares, except under a regular transfer, according to the rules of the bank; and if any person takes an equitable assignment, it must be subject to the rights of the bank, under the Act of Incorporation, of which he is bound to take notice."

Repeated efforts have been made to have certificates of stock declared negotiable paper, but they have been unsuccessful. Such a certificate is not negotiable in either form or character; and like every non-negotiable paper, whoever takes it does so subject to its equities and burdens; and though ignorant of such equities and burdens his ignorance does not relieve the paper therefrom, or enable him to hold it discharged therefrom. It is objected that upon the face of this certificate it is nowhere stated that "George H. Hammond & Company" is a corporation. While this is not expressly stated, it clearly appears; and even if it were not so, the certificate is non-negotiable paper, and the party had no right to deal with it as though it were otherwise. He takes it subject to the burdens that in fact rested upon it.

Technical matters are suggested by counsel, but we deem it unnecessary to notice them. The circuit judge unquestionably, as appears from the record, ruled upon the substantial question considered by us. We think his ruling erroneous, and the case must therefore be reversed. That this lien of a corporation may be waived cannot be doubted. Cecil Nat. Bank v. Watertown Bank, 105 U. S. 217, 221 [26: 1089, 1041]. Perhaps when all the facts are developed, as they can be on the new trial, matters may be disclosed sufficient to establish a waiver; but mere ignorance on the part of the purchaser of the fact of the existence of the lien does not destroy it. It constitutes no waiver on the part of the corporation.

Judgment reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial.

Patent right—claim—specification—construction of patent—disclaimer—application of old process—mechanism for turning from metal—want of invention.

1. A claim is to be construed in connection with the explanation contained in the specification, and it may be so drawn as in effect to make the specification an essential part of it; but the specification and drawings are usually looked at only for the purpose of better understanding the meaning of the claim, and not for the purpose of changing it.
2. The claim is a statutory requirement, prescribed for the purpose of making the patentee define precisely what his invention is, and should be construed in accordance with the plain import of its terms.
3. Where the patent is for a combination, it cannot be permitted to read into it any delicate adjusting apparatus not originally included in the claim.
4. The invention claimed in this case is not restricted to lathes for turning sewing-machine needles, nor did the patentee by disclaimer place any such limit upon the construction of the patent.
5. The application of an old process or machine to a similar or analogous subject, with no change in the manner of applying it and no result substantially distinct in its nature, will not sustain a patent, even if the new form of result has not before been contemplated.
6. The application to the turning of machine awls and needles from metal, of mechanism old and familiar in the art of wood turning, is not invention, and is not patentable.

A PPEALS from decrees of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Massachusetts, dismissing suits in equity for the infringement of letters-patent granted May, 10, 1859, to Charles and Andrew Spring for an improvement in lathes, the patent having been extended for seven years from May 10, 1873.

Affirmed.

Opinion below, 21 Fed. Rep. 630.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

These are appeals from decrees of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Massachusetts, dismissing bills in equity brought on account of alleged infringement of letters-patent granted May 10, 1859, to Charles and Andrew Spring, for an "Improvement in Lathes for Turning Irregular Forms." The patent was extended for seven years from May 10, 1873. The bills were filed May 27, 1879.

The opinion of the circuit court was announced September 30, 1884, but by reason of the interposition of petitions for rehearing, the final decree was not entered until April 17, 1886.

The specification is as follows:

"To all whom it may concern:

"Be it known that we, Charles and Andrew Spring, both of Boston, in the County of Suffolk and State of Massachusetts, have invented a new combination designed for turning such articles as are to be brought to a point or are to be finished or turned at one end, and therefore cannot conveniently be held to be operated upon otherwise than by the opposite end; and we do hereby declare that the following, taken in connection with the accompanying drawings which form part of this specification, is a clear, full and exact description of our invention and sufficient to enable those skilled in the art to practice it. Fig. 2 is a perspective view embodying our invention, and Fig. 1 is a plan exhibiting more in detail some of its parts. c represents the head stock and b the tail stock of a lathe fixed upon a bed, d. The spindle a is supported and rotated in the manner usual in lathes, and carries a chuck which seizes and holds by one end the article o to be operated upon. The spindle l in the tail stock k is capable of traversing backwards and forwards in the axial line of the lathe's rotation, but does not itself rotate. This movement may be accomplished by the means usual for this purpose in lathes. The carriage m is raised from the lathe bed d in the support n, on which it is guided in movements towards and from o by means of the usual 'ways.' Rotation of the screw p causes the movements of the carriage m, and the set-screw s is used to gauge the diameter of the article operated upon, which it does by striking on n, which is fixed to the lathe bed and arrests further onward movement of m. Fixed upon m and partaking of its movements is the arrangement which modifies the movement of the tool-carrier. This arrangement consists of two principal parts, q and r; q is pivoted to n by screw t, and is held in any desired position by the screws u, q being slotted where these screws pass through it into m. It may here be mentioned that this provision for the adjustment of q is for the purpose of giving any required taper to o, and that the screws v aid in the adjustment of q. The piece r is connected with q by the guide rods w passing through the latter and fixed in the former. Compressed spiral springs around w act to draw r and the roll shown in dotted lines, Fig. 1, towards q. The carriage x rests upon and slides over q and r, and bears with it the tool-holder y, which is of angular form and can slide within x toward and from o. It is to y that the roll before mentioned, as shown in dotted lines, Fig. 1, is fixed, x being slotted where it passes through to admit of movement of y. A portion of x extends upwards, and is made to fit in a hole bored for that purpose in the spindle l. To admit of nice adjustment of the tool c the piece z is pivoted to y, and raised and lowered by operating at the end opposite the pivot, the set-screw a', and holding screw b'; z is extended above and over the tool c, so that by the action of the set-screw d' the tool is confined to or released from y. On that side of x preceding the tool in its cutting movement toward the chuck, and forming a part of or fixed to x, is a yoke arranged to contain a die, e'. This die is made in two parts, having a hole through them, half in each part, of just the diameter of the material from which the finished article is to be formed. This hole in the die is made and kept concentric with the axis of the lathe's rotation by set-screws, one of which acts on opposite sides of each half, and also one from the top and another from beneath. The sides of q and r, with which the roll fixed in y comes into contact, should conform nearly to the general outline of the article to be turned. A slot is made in q from that side touching the roll, and in about the center of its thickness. Within this slot may be placed any desirable pattern projecting beyond the acting face of q, and this pattern may be adjustable. In the particular instance illustrated q and r are formed for turning awls or machine needles. The pattern e', which is adjustable by means of the set-screw n', is pivoted in q and serves to shape the shank of the awl or needle, while the pattern o', which is adjustable along the length of q as well as outward from it, serves to form and shape the point. A groove is formed in q, as shown in dotted lines, Fig. 1, in which the pivot of o' is permitted to slide, and the pattern is held in position by the pinch produced by the action of the screws u u. The material from which any article is to be turned by the use of our invention must be cylindrical and straight, and the hole in the die must be of its diameter. The carriage x is forced forward and drawn back by the spindle l, and the direction of its movement is at all times parallel with the axis of the lathe's rotation. The tool-holder y partakes of the movement x, and is at the same time moved toward and from the piece to be turned by the action of the shaping mechanism described as existing in q, r, e' and o' upon the roll or pin fixed in y and passing through x. The arrangement of the shaping mechanism illustrated by the drawing is that designed and adapted to the formation of awls or machine needles. The action of the springs upon the guide rods w draws r against the roll fixed in y and keeps it constantly pressed against q and the projecting parts of the adjustable formers e' and o' therein arranged. The form and adjustment of e' govern the shape of that part of the awl between its haft and shaft, and the form and adjustment o', the shape of the point, and, as o' is adjustable along the length of g, any length of awl or needle within the limits of the machine can be brought to a point. Provision is made for giving any desired amount of taper to the shape of the needle or awl by the inclination of g, obtainable by pivoting on t, and adjustable by the screws e. The tool is adjusted and held in the best position for cutting by the screws d' a' b', and the diameter of the article to be turned is varied by the action of screw p and gauged by the screws s. The chuck used to hold the material to be operated on may be any of the well-known forms of gripping or holding chucks that hold fast by one end the article which is to be turned. We prefer to use such a chuck as we have fully described in an application for letters-patent bearing even date herewith. Prior to our invention, awls and needles have been brought to a point by grinding by hand, a process which evidently is apt to leave the point out of the center of the needle, and the part near the haft has either been left with a square shoulder or else curved by the action of a separate tool from that which formed the shaft, sometimes used as a hand tool. Amongst the advantages derived from the use of our invention may be mentioned that the article is turned perfectly true at one operation, and no time is lost by rechucking, hand-tooling or grinding.

"Having described our invention, what we claim therein as new and desire to secure by letters-patent of the United States is—

"The combination of a gripping chuck, by which an article can be so held by one end as to present the other free to be operated upon, with a rest preceding the cutting tool, when it is combined with a guide cam, or its equivalent, which modifies the movement of the cutting tool, all operating together for the purpose set forth."

The causes were heard before Mr. Justice Gray and the district judge, and the opinion of the court was delivered by the latter as follows (21 Fed. Rep. 680):

"NELSON, J.: These suits are bills in equity for the infringement of patent No. 23,957, granted to Charles and Andrew Spring May 10, 1859, for an improvement in lathes for turning irregular forms. The invention, as described in the specification, is a new combination designed for turning such articles as are to be brought to a point or are to be finished or turned at one end, and therefore cannot conveniently be held to be operated upon otherwise than by the opposite end. It consists (1st) of a gripping chuck, by which the article is held by one end so as to present the other end free to be operated upon; (2d) a rest preceding the cutting tool, to afford support to the article in the operation of turning; (3d) a cutting tool; and (4th) a guide cam, or its equivalent, which modifies the movement of the cutting tool. The chuck may be of any of the well-known forms of gripping or holding chucks, which hold the article to be turned fast by one end. The material to be turned must be cylindrical and straight. In the drawings annexed, the guide cam is of a form suitable for turning awls or machine needles, and the plaintiffs contend that their machine, as patented, was intended to be and is a lathe for turning sewing-machine needles or awls. The claim is for 'the combination of a gripping chuck, by which an article can be so held by one end as to present the other free to be operated upon, with a rest preceding the cutting tool, when it is combined with a guide cam or its equivalent, which modifies the movement of the cutting tool, all operating together for the purpose set forth.'

"The defendants have proved, by testimony which we cannot doubt, that as long ago as the year 1845, and perhaps still earlier, a machine was in use in the shop of William Murdock, in Winchendon, Massachusetts, which contained all the elements and the precise combination of the Spring patent. It had the gripping chuck, the rest preceding the cutting tool, the cutting tool, and, instead of the guide cam, its equivalent, a pattern, all the parts arranged, combined and operating in the same manner as in the Spring machine. It had, in addition, a fixed cutting tool preceding the rest, which served to reduce the material to the cylindrical form in which it is first received in the Spring lathe. But this extra tool formed no part and was wholly independent of the other combination. The machine still had all the elements of the Spring lathe in the same combination. The Murdock lathe was used for turning tapering wooden skewers or spindles for use in spinning yarn. It was not constructed so as to be capable of turning awls or machine needles from metal.

"It has been decided by the supreme court that 'the application of an old process or machine to a similar or analogous subject, with no change in the manner of application, and no result substantially distinct in its nature, will not sustain a patent, even if the new form of result has not before been contemplated.' Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Locomotive E. S. Truck Co. 110 U. S. 490 [28: 222].

"Applying this rule to the present case, we are of opinion that the application to the turning of machine awls and needles from metal, of mechanism old and familiar in the art of wood turning, is not invention, and is not patentable. We therefore decide that the Murdock lathe was an anticipation of the Spring invention, and that the complainants' patent is void for want of novelty. This view of the case renders it unnecessary for us to consider the other matters urged in defense of the complainants' suit at the argument.

"The entry in each case will be: bill dismissed, with costs."

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

Doubtless a claim is to be construed in connection with the explanation contained in the specification, and it may be so drawn as in effect to make the specification an essential part of it; but since the inventor must particularly specify and point out the part, improvement or combination which he claims as his own invention or discovery, the specification and drawings are usually looked at only for the purpose of better understanding the meaning of the claim, and certainly not for the purpose of changing it and making it different from what it is. As remarked by Mr. Justice Bradley, in White v. Dunbar, 119 U. S. 47 52 [30: 303, 304]: "The claim is a statutory requirement, prescribed for the very purpose of making the patentee define precisely what his invention is; and it is unjust to the public, as well as an evasion of the law, to construe it in a manner different from the plain import of its terms."

The patentees state that they "have invented a new combination designed for turning such articles as are to be brought to a point or are to be finished or turned at one end, and therefore cannot conveniently be held to be operated upon otherwise than by the opposite end." In the drawings attached to the patent, q and r are the guide cam or pattern specially referred to in the specification, and it is said that "in the particular instance illustrated q and r are formed for turning awls or machine needles," and that "the arrangement of the shaping mechanism illustrated by the drawing is that designed and adapted to the formation of awls or machine needles." They also say that "the material from which any article is to be turned by the use of our invention must be cylindrical and straight;" and that "the chuck used to hold the material to be operated on may be any of the well-known forms of gripping or holding chucks that hold fast by one end the article which is to be turned."

The claim is couched in plain and unambiguous language, and is "The combination of a gripping chuck, by which an article can be so held by one end as to present the other free to be operated upon, with a rest preceding the cutting tool, when it is combined with a guide cam, or its equivalent, which modifies the movement of the cutting tool, all operating together for the purpose set forth." The alleged improvement is in the mode of producing turned articles of "irregular forms," and the purpose set forth is the turning of such articles as are to be brought to a point or to be turned or finished at one end, and which ought therefore to be held by the opposite end in order to be operated upon. The material is not specified, but it must be cylindrical and straight.

The complainant's expert testifies on cross-examination: "The patent is for a combination. The new part consists of elements, each and all of them old and familiar in pre-existing combinations. They are therefore the gripping chuck; the supporting rest preceding the cutting tool; a cutting tool having the reciprocating motion towards and from the axis of the piece to be operated upon, under the control of a guide cam or former, so organized as to be also under the constant control of delicate adjusting apparatus, by which the required diameter of a piece to be operated upon may be constantly preserved without disturbing the functional performance of former and cutting tool, substantially as set forth and described, all operating together for the purpose set forth. It is, then, the combination of these several elements, as organized, which constitutes the new part." But the combination claimed is the combination of a gripping chuck, a rest preceding the cutting tool, a cutting tool and a guide cam or its equivalent; and complainants cannot now be permitted to read into it any delicate adjusting apparatus not originally included in the claim, and then insist, in the words of the witness, that there is "a margin of patentable novelty."

The Springs completed their first machine in September or October, 1857. Their patent was issued May 10, 1859.

As found by the circuit court, the testimony leaves no doubt that as early as 1845, William Murdock used a lathe at Winchendon, Massachusetts, for turning pointed skewers of wood. This had a chuck; a cutting tool; a rest preceding the cutting tool, and a pattern governing the movement of the cutting tool, to shape the skewer to the desired form; or, in other words, all the elements of the Spring combination, as claimed.

Defendants' expert, Brevoort, correctly says: "This Murdock device shows the combination of a holding chuck which holds the material at one end while the other end is left free, a rest preceding a cutting tool, which latter is controlled in its movements by guide or former, so that the parts operating together will produce irregular forms. Now, this is the invention referred to in the claim of the Spring patent, and this Murdock lathe undoubtedly contains the invention recited in the Spring patent, with the exception that in the Murdock lathe the parts are adapted for turning wood, while in the Spring device they are more especially adapted for turning metal." And he continues: "I understand that this Murdock lathe was used for turning large numbers of yarn skewers, such as were used at one time in mills where cotton goods were manufactured. 'Defendants' Exhibit Murdock Skewer, W. G. H., Sp. Ex'r,' shows one of these skewers, and when I compare this skewer with a sewing-machine needle, as the question requested me to do, I find that both the needle and the skewer are brought to a point, the Murdock lathe, the Spring device and the Pernot lathe all being adapted for producing points upon the articles subjected to their action, the only difference being that the Pernot and Spring lathes were adapted for making points on metal, while the Murdock lathe is adapted for making points on wooden blanks, all of the three lathes referred to, as well as the Wright lathe and the Waymoth lathe, being so constructed as to produce the desired configuration upon the surface of the turned blank by using a pattern or former of the desired shape. In all the lathes referred to by me in this testimony the irregular form of the article turned is reached by the former, guide or pattern causing the cutting tool, as it was slid toward the holding or gripping chuck, to approach or recede from the axial line of the work, and in all these lathes the cutting tool is preceded by a rest through a hole in which the work revolves, leaving one end of the work free, while the other is held and turned by the chuck."

There is nothing in the specification about the nature of the material to be used, nor is the device limited to the production of awls and needles, although the drawings show that mode of applying the invention, and "the particular instance illustrated" is that "designed and adapted to the formation of awls or machine needles." But the invention claimed is not restricted to lathes for turning sewing-machine needles, nor did the patentees by disclaimer place any such limit upon the construction of the patent.

The rule laid down in Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Locomotive E. S. Truck Co., 110 U. S. 490 [28: 222], that the application of an old process or machine to a similar or analogous subject, with no change in the manner of applying it, and no result substantially distinct in its nature, will not sustain a patent, even if the new form of result has not before been contemplated, has been applied in very many cases by this court. Thompson v. Boisselier, 114 U. S. 1 [29: 76]; Peters v. Active Mfg. Co., 129 U. S. 580 [32: 788]; Peters v. Hanson, 129 U. S. 542 [32: 742]; Aron v. Manhattan Railway Co., 132 U. S. 84 [38: 272]; Watson v. Cincinnati, I. St. L. & C. R. Co., 132 U. S. 161 [38: 295].

In the employment of the chuck, the rest, the cutting tool and the guide cam, in the making of awls and needles, the patentees displayed the skill of their calling, which involved "only the exercise of the ordinary faculties of reasoning upon the materials supplied by a special knowledge, and the facility of manipulation which results from its habitual and intelligent practice." Hollister v. Benedict Mfg. Co., 118 U. S. 59, 78 [28: 901, 905]. The purpose of Murdock, in reference to the wooden skewer, was the same as the purpose of the Springs in reference to articles of any material which could be worked up on their machines. The claim was certainly broad enough to include Murdock's invention, and no disclaimer was ever filed; and even with a limitation as to the article, patentable novelty was not present, within the rule upon that subject. The art of turning is the art of turning, whether applied to wood or metal; and it would seem that there was here nothing more than the substitution of one material for another, without involving an essentially new mode of construction. And be that as it may, there was no restriction as to material. Operation in metal would, of course, demand variations in organization, but not necessarily anything more than would result from the experience of the intelligent mechanic.

The Springs did not claim a combination of a slotted guide cam, an adjusting screw, a spring, guiding rods, etc., with a former, a cutting tool, a rest and a gripping chuck, and as it stands the claim was, in the existing state of the art, for an analogous or double use, and not patentable.

The Circuit Court was clearly right, and its decree is affirmed.

(See B. C. Reporter's ed. 398-401.)

Review of judgment of District of Columbia—special finding of facts or special verdict.

1. Where there is no bill of exceptions presented, for the review of a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, nor any finding of facts, nor any case stated analogous to a special verdict, stating the ultimate facts and presenting questions of law only, this court cannot review the same.
2. An agreement that the parties may refer to and rely upon all the grounds of action or defense to be found in the voluminous records of two equity cases in other courts, including the pleadings and evidence and orders and decrees therein, cannot take the place of a special verdict of a jury or special finding of facts by the court so as to enable this court to determine the questions of law thereon arising.

Argued March 11, 1890. Decided March 24, 1890.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action to recover assessments on shares of stock. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

This is an action at law commenced in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia by the plaintiff in error against the defendant in error on the 11th day of December, 1888, to recover certain amounts, for the payment of which the defendant was alleged to be liable upon an assessment levied on shares of stock in the National Express and Transportation Company of Virginia, held by him.

The defendant demurred to the declaration, but subsequently it was agreed that the demurrer should be overruled, and a stipulation was filed to the effect that the court should consider the cause as if there had been pleaded the general issue and certain other pleas in the stipulation named, and as if issue had been joined thereon; that the cause should be heard upon an "agreed statement of facts," annexed as part of the stipulation, with leave to any party to refer to Exhibits X and Y, therewith filed; that a jury was thereby waived; that the cause might be submitted to the court to hear and decide upon said agreed statement of facts, exhibits and pleadings; and that either party might "rely upon any and all grounds of action or defense arising from said agreed statement of facts, exhibits and pleadings." The statement referred to was to the effect that the defendant was a subscriber for and assignee of the number of shares of the capital stock of the National Express and Transportation Company of Virginia in respect of which he was sued; that a certain deed of trust was as set forth in the record, therewith filed, marked "Exhibit X;" that Exhibit X was the record of a certain cause between W. W. Glenn and the National Express and Transportation Company of Virginia, in the Chancery Court of the City of Richmond, in the State of Virginia, afterwards removed into the Circuit Court of Henrico County, Virginia; and that on the 8th day of August, 1886, one Reynolds, claiming to be a stockholder of said company, filed his bill against said company in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Virginia, and certain proceedings were therein had, as would appear from the record in that cause, filed and marked "Exhibit Y." It was agreed that the laws of the State of Virginia might be referred to as a part of the statement of facts, and certain other matters of fact were set forth, not material to be repeated here.

The cause came on at special term, the demurrer was overruled, and the stipulation filed "with an agreed statement of facts thereto annexed, and with exhibits, marked 'X' and 'Y,'" and thereupon the cause was certified to the general term of the court to be heard there in the first instance, "upon said stipulation and agreed statement of facts thereto annexed and exhibits therewith filed and the pleadings, in accordance with the provisions of the stipulation aforesaid." A hearing was accordingly had at general term, and judgment rendered in favor of the defendant with costs, and the plaintiff sued out a writ of error from this court.

Messrs. M. F. Morris, Walter D. Davidge, Eugene Carusi and Reginald Fendall for defendant in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

No bill of exceptions was taken in this case, nor was there any finding of facts by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, nor any case stated by the parties analogous to a special verdict and stating the ultimate facts of the case, presenting questions of law only. What is styled here an "agreed statement of facts" is an agreement as to certain matters, and that the parties might refer to and rely upon any and all grounds of action or defense to be found in two voluminous exhibits, marked "X" and "Y," being the records of two equity causes in other courts, including all the pleadings and evidence, as well as the orders and decrees therein. The effect of some of that evidence and of the conclusions of fact to be drawn from it is controverted. It is impossible for us to regard this stipulation as taking the place of a special verdict of a jury, or a special finding of facts by the court, upon which our jurisdiction could properly be invoked to determine the questions of law thereon arising. And while the case is governed by the rule laid down in Campbell v. Boyreau, 62 U. S. 21 How. 223 [16: 96], yet, even if the statutory provisions in relation to the trial of causes without the intervention of a jury by the circuit courts of the United States were applicable, the result upon this record would be the same. Raimond v. Terrebonne Parish, 132 U. S. 192 [38: 809]; Andes v. Slawson, 130 U. S. 435 [32: 989]; Bond v. Dustin, 112 U. S. 604 [28: 885]; Lyons v. Lyons Nat. Bank, 19 Blatchf. 279.

The judgment must be affirmed.

THE CHICAGO, MILWAUKEE, AND ST.
PAUL RAILWAY COMPANY,
Plf. in Err.,
v.

THE STATE OF MINNESOTA, ex rel.
THE RAILROAD AND WAREHOUSE COMMISSION OF THE STATE OF MINNESOTA.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 418-466.)

Charter of Minnesota railroad company, when not a contract—charter, when subject to future legislation—exemption—power of State—rates of toll—power to regulate—state construction of statute—Minnesota law, giving powers to commission, unconstitutional—due process of law—judicial investigation—hearing and notice—reasonableness of railroad rates—right of company.

1. The ninth section of the charter of the Minneapolis & Cedar Valley Railroad Company giving power to the directors of that company to make rules as to rates of toll does not constitute an irrevocable contract with that company that it shall have the right for all future time to prescribe its rates of toll, free from all control by the Legislature of the State.
2. A railroad corporation takes its charter, containing such a provision, subject to the general law of the State, and to such changes as may be made in such general law, and subject to future constitutional provisions and future general legislation, in the absence of any prior contract with it exempting it from liability to such future general legislation.
3. Exemption from future general legislation, either by a constitutional provision or by an Act of the Legislature, does not exist unless it is given expressly or unless it follows by an implication equally clear with express words.
4. The grant of power by section 9 of the charter, to the directors of the company, to make needful rules and regulations touching the rates of toll and the manner of collecting the same, does not deprive the State of its general authority itself to regulate the rates of toll to be collected by the company.

5. This power to regulate is not a power to destroy, and limitation is not the equivalent of confiscation.
6. The construction put upon a Minnesota statute by the Supreme Court of Minnesota must be accepted by this court.
7. A law which, as construed by the Supreme Court of the State, allows a railroad commission to establish rates for railroads which are final, without issue made, or inquiry had, as to their reasonableness, and forbids the courts to stay the hands of the commission if the rates established by it are unequal and unreasonable, conflicts with the Constitution of the United States.
8. So construed, it deprives the company of its right to a judicial investigation by due process of law, and substitutes therefor, as an absolute matter, the action of a railroad commission which is not clothed with judicial functions and does not possess the machinery of a court of justice.
9. Where no hearing is provided for, no summons or notice to the company, before the commission has found what it is to find and declared what it is to declare, and no opportunity provided for the company to introduce witnesses before the commission, there is not the semblance of due process of law.
10. The question of the reasonableness of a rate of charge for transportation by a railroad company is eminently a question for judicial investigation, requiring due process of law for its determination.
11. If the company is deprived of the power of charging reasonable rates for the use of its property, and such deprivation takes place in the absence of a judicial investigation, it is deprived of the use of its property, and, in effect, of the property itself, without due process of law and in violation of the Constitution of the United States.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Minnesota, awarding a writ of mandamus against the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company, requiring it to comply with the order of the Railroad and Warehouse Commission of that State by changing its tariffs of rates and charges and substituting therefor the rates recommended by said Commission. Reversed.

The facts are fully stated in the opinion.

Reported below, 38 Minn. 281.

This case and the following case of The Minneapolis Eastern Railway Co. v. State of Minnesota, ex rel. Railroad and Warehouse Commission, were argued together.

Messrs. John W. Cary, J. H. Howe, W. H. Norris and W. C. Goudy for plaintiffs in error in both cases.

The following are the points and authorities made and cited by Mr. John W. Cary, for plaintiffs in error:

The court erred in holding that the Legislature of Minnesota is authorized to fix the rates and charges for transportation because the exercise of such a power would impair the obligation of the contract contained in the charter.

Mr. Justice Blatchford delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a writ of error to review a judgment of the Supreme Court of the State of Minnesota, awarding a writ of mandamus against the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Company.

The case arose on proceedings taken by the Railroad and Warehouse Commission of the State of Minnesota, under an Act of the Legislature of that State approved March 7, 1887 (General Laws of 1887, chap. 10), entitled "An Act to Regulate Common Carriers, and Creating the Railroad and Warehouse Commission of the State of Minnesota, and Defining the Duties of Such Commission in Relation to Common Carriers." The Act is set forth in full in the margin.*

The ninth section of that Act creates a commission to be known as the "Railroad and Warehouse Commission of the State of Minnesota," to consist of three persons to be appointed by the governor by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The first section of the Act declares that its provisions shall apply to any common carrier "engaged in the transportation of passengers or property wholly by railroad, or partly by railroad and partly by water, when both are used under a common control, management or arrangement, for a carriage or shipment from one place or station to another, both being within the State of Minnesota."

The second section declares "that all charges made by any common carrier, subject to the provisions of this Act, for any service rendered or to be rendered in the transportation of passengers or property as aforesaid, or in connection therewith, or for the receiving, delivering, storage or handling of such property, shall be equal and reasonable; and every unequal and unreasonable charge for such service is prohibited and declared to be unlawful."

The eighth section provides that every common carrier subject to the provisions of the Act shall print and keep for public inspection schedules of the charges which it has established for the transportation of property; that it shall make no change therein except after ten days' public notice, plainly stating the changes proposed to be made and the time when they will go into effect; that it shall be unlawful for it to charge or receive any greater or less compensation than that so established and published, for transporting property; that it shall file copies of its schedules with the Commission, and shall notify such Commission of all changes proposed to be made; that in case the Commission shall find at any time that any part of the tariffs of charges so filed and published is in any respect unequal or unreasonable, it shall have the power, and it is authorized and directed, to compel any common carrier to change the same and adopt such charge as the Commission "shall declare to be equal and reasonable," to which end the Commission shall, in writing, inform such carrier in what respect such tariff of charges is unequal and unreasonable, and shall recommend what tariff shall be substituted therefor; that in case the carrier shall neglect for ten days after such notice to adopt such tariff of charges as the Commission recommends, it shall be the duty of the latter to immediately publish such tariff as it has declared to be equal and reasonable, and cause it to be posted at all the regular stations on the line of such carrier in Minnesota, and it shall be unlawful thereafter for the carrier to charge a higher or lower rate than that so fixed and published by the Commission; and that, if any carrier subject to the provisions of the Act shall neglect to publish or file its schedules of charges, or to carry out such recommendation made and published by the Com-

*CHAPTER 10.

AN ACT TO REGULATE COMMON CARRIERS, AND CREATING THE RAILROAD AND WAREHOUSE COMMISSION OF THE STATE OF MINNESOTA, AND DEFINING THE DUTIES OF SUCH COMMISSION IN RELATION TO COMMON CARRIERS.

Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of Minnesota:

SECTION 1. (a) That the provisions of this Act shall apply to any common carrier or carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property wholly by railroad, or partly by railroad and partly by water, when both are used under a common control, management or arrangement, for a carriage or shipment from one place or station to another, both being within the State of Minnesota.

Provided, That nothing in this Act shall apply to street railways or to the carriage, storage or handling by any common carrier of property, free or at reduced rates for the United States, or for the State of Minnesota, or for any municipal government or corporation within the State, or for any charitable purpose, or to or from fairs and expositions for exhibition thereat (or stock for breeding purposes), or to the issuance of mileage, excursion or commutation passenger tickets, at rates made equal to all, or to transportation to stock shippers with cars, and nothing in the provisions of this Act shall be construed to prevent common carriers, subject to the provisions of this Act, from issuing passes for the free transportation of passengers.

(b) The term "railroad" as used in this Act shall include all bridges or ferries used or operated in connection with any railroad, and also all the road in use by any corporation operating a railroad, whether owned or operated under a contract, agreement or lease; and the term "transportation" shall include all instrumentalities of shipment or carriage.

SEC. 2. (a) That all charges made by any common carrier, subject to the provisions of this Act, for any service rendered or to be rendered in the transportation of passengers or property as aforesaid, or in connection therewith, or for the receiving, delivering, storage or handling of such property shall be equal and reasonable; and every unequal and unreasonable charge for such service is prohibited and declared to be unlawful:

Provided, That one carload of freight of any kind or class shall be transported at as low a rate per ton, and per ton per mile, as any greater number of carloads of the same kind and class from and to the same points of origination or destination.

(b) It shall be unlawful for any common carrier, subject to the provisions of this Act, to make or give any unequal or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person, company, firm, corporation or locality, or any particular description of traffic, in any respect whatsoever, or to subject any particular person, company, firm, corporation or locality, or any particular description of traffic, to any unequal or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatsoever.

SEC. 3. (a) That all common carriers, subject to the provisions of this Act, shall, according to their respective powers, provide, at the point of connection, crossing or intersection, ample facilities for transferring cars, and for accommodating and transferring passengers, and traffic of all kinds and classes, from their lines or tracks, to those of any other common carrier whose lines or tracks may connect with, cross or intersect their own, and shall afford all equal and reasonable facilities for the interchange of cars and traffic between their respective lines, and for the receiving, forwarding and delivering of passengers and property and cars to and from their several lines and those of other common carriers connecting therewith, and shall not discriminate in their rates and charges between such connecting lines, or on freight coming over such lines; but this shall not be construed as requiring any common carrier to use for another common carrier its tracks, equipments or terminal facilities without reasonable compensation.

(b) That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this Act to enter into any combination, contract or agreement, expressed or implied, to prevent, by change of mission, it shall be subject to a writ of mandamus "to be issued by any judge of the supreme court or of any of the district courts" of the State, on application of the Commission, to compel compliance with the requirements of section 8 and with the recommendation of the Commission, and a failure to comply with the requirements of the mandamus shall be punishable as and for contempt, and the Commission may apply also to any such judge for an injunction against the carrier from receiving or transporting property or passengers within the State until it shall have complied with the requirements of section 8 and with the recommendation of the Commission, and for any willful violation or failure to comply with such requirements or such recommendation of the Commission, the court may award such costs, including counsel fees, by way of penalty, on the return of said writs and after due deliberation thereon, as may be just.

On the 22d of June, 1887, the Boards of Trade Union of Farmington, Northfield, Faribault and Owatonna, in Minnesota, filed with the Commission a petition in writing, complaining that the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Company, being a common carrier engaged in the transportation of property wholly by railroad, for carriage or shipment from Owatonna, Faribault, Dundas, Northfield and Farmington, to the Cities of St. Paul and Minneapolis, all of those places being within the State of Minnesota, made charges for its services in the transportation of milk from said Owatonna, Faribault, Dundas, Northfield and Farmington to St. Paul and Minneapolis, which were unequal and unreasonable, in that it charged 4 cents per gallon for the transportation of milk from Owatonna to St. Paul and Minneapolis, and 8 cents per gallon from Faribault, Dundas, Northfield and Farmington, to the said cities; and that such charges were unreasonably high, and subjected the traffic in milk between said points to unreasonable prejudice and disadvantage. The prayer of the petition was that such rates be declared unreasonable, and the carrier be compelled to change the same and adopt such rates and charges as the Commission should declare to be equal and reasonable.

A statement of the complaint thus made was forwarded by the Commission, on the 29th of June, 1887, to the Railway Company, and it was called upon by the Commission, on the 6th of July, 1887, to satisfy the complaint or answer it in writing at the office of the Commission in St. Paul, on the 13th of July, 1887.

On the 30th of June, 1887, Mr. J. F. Tucker, the assistant general manager of the Railway Company, addressed a letter from Milwaukee to the secretary of the Commission, saying: "I have your favor of the 29th, with complaint as to milk rates being unreasonable and unequal. They may be unequal if unreasonable. They are unreasonably low for the service performed—by passenger train—and are 25 per cent less than the same commodity is charged into New York, with longer distances and hundred times larger volume in favor of New York. I am frank to say it is hard to appreciate complaints from boards of trade that $\frac{1}{5}$ of a cent per gallon on milk handled on passenger train one mile time or schedule, or by carriage in different cars, or by any other means or devices, the carriage or freight from being continuous from the place of shipment to the place of destination; and no break of bulk, stoppage or interruption made by such common carrier shall prevent the carriage of freight from being treated as one continuous carriage from the place of shipment to the place of destination, unless such break, stoppage or interruption was made in good faith for some necessary purpose and without any intent to avoid or unnecessarily interrupt such continuous carriage or to evade any of the provisions of this Act.

(c) Every common carrier operating a railway in this State shall, without unreasonable delay, furnish, start and run cars for the transportation of persons and property, which, within a reasonable time theretofore, is offered for transportation at any of its stations on its line of road and at the junctions of other railroads, and at such stopping places as may be established for receiving and discharging passengers and freights; and shall take, receive, transport and discharge such passengers and property at, from and to such stations, junctions and places, on and from all trains advertised to stop at the same, for passengers and freights, respectively, upon the due payment, or tender of payment, of tolls, freight or fare therefor, if such payment is demanded. Every such common carrier shall permit connections to be made and maintained in a reasonable manner with its side tracks to and from any warehouse, elevator or manufactory without reference to its size or capacity; provided, that this shall not be construed so as to require any common carrier to construct or furnish any side track off from its own land; provided further, that where stations are ten (10) miles or more apart the common carrier, when required to do so by the railroad and warehouse commissioners, shall construct and maintain a side track for the use of shippers between such stations.

(d) Whenever any property is received by any common carrier subject to the provisions of this Act, to be transported from one place to another within this State, it shall be unlawful for such common carrier to limit in any way, except as stated in its classification schedule, hereinafter provided for, its common-law liability with reference to such property while in its custody as a common carrier (as hereinbefore mentioned); such liability must include the absolute responsibility of the common carrier for the acts of its agents in relation to such property.

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this Act, to enter into any contract, agreement or combination with any other common carrier or carriers for the division or pooling of business of different and competing railroads, or to divide between them the aggregate or net proceeds of the earnings of such railroads, or any portion thereof; and in case of an agreement for the pooling of their business aforesaid each day of its continuance shall be deemed a separate offense.

SEC. 5. That if any common carrier, subject to the provisions of this Act, shall, directly or indirectly, by any special rate, rebate, drawback or other device, charge, demand, collect or receive from any person or persons a greater or less compensation for any service rendered, or to be rendered, in the transportation of passengers or property subject to the provisions of this Act, than it charges, demands, collects or receives from any other person or persons for doing for him or them a like and contemporaneous service in the transportation of passengers or property, such common carrier shall be deemed guilty of unjust discrimination, which is hereby prohibited and declared to be unlawful.

SEC. 6. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier, subject to the provisions of this Act, to charge or receive any greater compensation for the transportation of passengers or of like kind or class and quantity of property, for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line, the shorter being included within the longer distance; but this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier, subject to the provisions of this Act, to charge or receive as great compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance.

Provided, however, That upon application to the Commission appointed under the provisions of this Act, such common carrier may, in special cases, after investigation by the commissioners, be au-is unreasonable. With what is the comparison made that enables such a conclusion? It's not first-class rates by freight train, and was made low to encourage the trade, under the hope and promise that, when the trade were fostered, it would be advanced. This, as usual, has been forgotten."

On the 18th of July, 1887, at the office of the Commission in St Paul, the Company appeared by J. A. Chandler, its duly authorized attorney, and the Boards of Trade Union by its attorney, and the Commission proceeded to investigate the complaint. An investigation of the rates charged by the Company for its services in transporting milk from Owatonna, Faribault, Dundas, Northfield and Farmington, to St. Paul and Minneapolis, was made by the Commission, and it found that the charges of the Company for transporting milk from Owatonna and Faribault to St. Paul and Minneapolis were 8 cents per gallon in ten-gallon cans; that such charges were unequal and unreasonable; and that the Company's tariff of rates for transporting milk from Owatonna and Faribault to those cities, filed and published by it as provided by chapter 10 of the Laws of 1887, was unequal and unreasonable; and the Commission declared that a rate of 2½ cents per gallon in ten-gallon cans was an equal and reasonable rate for such services.

On the 4th of August, 1887, the Commission made a report in writing, which included the findings of fact upon which its conclusions were based, its recommendation as to the tariff which should be substituted for the tariff so found to be unequal and unreasonable, and also a specification of the rates and charges which it declared to be equal and reasonable. This paper was in the shape of a communication, dated at St. Paul, August 4, 1887, signed by the secretary of the Commission and addressed to the Company. It said: "It appearing from your schedule of rates and charges for the transportation of milk over and upon the Iowa and Minnesota Division of your road, that you charge, collect and receive for the transportation of milk over and upon said line from Owatonna and Faribault to the Cities of St. Paul and Minneapolis three cents per gallon, in ten-gallon cans, and from Dundas, Northfield and Farmington to said Cities of St. Paul and Minneapolis two and one half cents per gallon, in cans of like capacity, and complaint having been made that such rates and charges are unequal and unreasonable, and that the services performed by you in such transportation are not reasonably worth the said sums charged therefor; and this Commission having thereupon, pursuant to the provisions of section eight of an Act entitled 'An Act to Regulate Common Carriers, and Creating the Railroad and Warehouse Commission of the State of Minnesota, and Defining the Duties of Such Commission in Relation to Common Carriers,' approved March 7, 1887, examined the cause and reasonableness of said complaint, and finding, pursuant to subdivision (e) of said section, that your said tariff of rates, so far as appertains to the transportation of milk to the Cities of St. Paul and Minneapolis from the other places above named, and inasmuch as said tariff provides for or requires the charging or col-thorized to charge less, for longer than for shorter distances, for the transportation of passengers or property; and the Commission may from time to time prescribe the extent to which such designated common carrier may be relieved from the operation of this section of this Act.

SEC. 7. (a) That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier, subject to the provisions of this Act, to charge or receive any greater compensation, per ton per mile, for the contemporaneous transportation of the same class of freight for a longer than for a shorter distance over the same line, in the same general direction, or from the same original point of departure, or to the same point of arrival; but this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier, subject to the provisions of this Act, to charge as high a rate per ton per mile for a longer as for a shorter distance.

(b) Whenever any railway company doing business in this State shall be unable, from any reasonable cause, to furnish cars at any railway station or side track, in accordance with the demands made by all persons demanding cars at such stations or side tracks for the shipment of grain or other freight, such cars as are furnished shall be divided as equally as may be among the applicants until each shipper shall have received at least one car, when the balance shall be divided ratably in proportion to the amount of daily receipts of grain, or other freight, to each shipper, or to the amount of grain offered at such station on side tracks.

(c) There shall in no case be more than one terminal charge for switching or transferring any car, whether the same is loaded or empty, within the limits of any one city or town. If it is necessary that any car pass over the tracks of more than one company, within such city or town limits, in order to reach its final destination, or to be returned therefrom to its owner or owners, then the company first switching or transferring such car shall be entitled to receive the entire charge to be made therefor and shall be liable to the company or companies doing the subsequent switching or transferring thereof for its or their reasonable and equitable share of the compensation received; and if the companies so jointly interested therein cannot agree upon the share thereof which each is entitled to receive, the same shall be determined by the Board of Railroad and Warehouse Commissioners, whose decision thereon shall be final and conclusive upon all parties interested, and the said Board are authorized to establish such rules, regulations in that behalf as to them may seem just and reasonable and not in conflict with this Act.

SEC. 8. (a) That every common carrier, subject to the provisions of this Act, shall, within sixty (60) days after this Act shall take effect, print and thereafter keep for public inspection, schedules showing the classification, rates, fares and charges for the transportation of passengers and property of all kinds and classes which such common carrier has established, and which are in force at the time, upon its railroad, as defined by the first (1st) section of this Act. This schedule printed as aforesaid by such common carrier shall plainly state the places upon its railroad between which property and passengers will be carried, and shall contain "classification of freight" in force upon each the lines of such railroad, a distance tariff, and a table of interstation distances, and shall also state separately the terminal charges, and any rules or regulations which in any wise change, affect or determine any part of the aggregate of such aforesaid rates, fares and charges. Such schedules shall be plainly printed in large type, and copies, for the use of the public, shall be kept in every depot or station upon any such railroad, in such places and in such form that they can be conveniently inspected.

(b) No change of classification shall be made and no change shall be made in the rates, fares and charges, which have been established and published as aforesaid, by any common carrier, in compliance with the requirements of this section, except after ten (10) days' public notice, which notice shall plainly state the changes proposed to be made in the schedules then in force, and the time when the changed schedules will go into effect, and the proposed changes will be shown by printing new schedules, or shall be plainly indicated upon the schedules in force at the time and kept for public inspection.

(c) And when any common carrier shall have established and published its classifications, rates, fares and charges in compliance with the provisions lection of a greater compensation than two and one half cents per gallon, is unreasonable and excessive: Therefore said Commission recommends and directs that you, the said Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Company, shall alter and change your said schedule by the adoption and substitution of a rate not to exceed two and one half cents per gallon for the services aforesaid from the Cities of Owatonna and Faribault, or either of them, to said St. Paul and Minneapolis. The Commission, as at present advised, approves of the custom and arrangement which, it is informed, has been adopted and is now in use by the Minnesota & Northwestern R. R. Co., of collecting two and one half cents per gallon on all milk transported by it, regardless of distance; but this expression of opinion is no part of the decision, notice or order in this case."

This report was entered of record, and a copy furnished to the Boards of Trade Union, and a copy was also delivered, on the 4th of August, 1887, to the Company, with a notice to it to desist from charging or receiving such unequal and unreasonable rates for such services. The Commission thus informed the Company in writing in what respect such tariff of rates and charges was unequal and unreasonable, and recommended to it in writing what tariff should be substituted therefor, to wit, the tariff so found equal and reasonable by the Commission.

The Company neglected and refused, for more than ten days after such notice, to substitute or adopt such tariff of charges as was recommended by the Commission. The latter thereupon published the tariff of charges which it had declared to be equal and reasonable, and caused it to be posted at the station of the Company in Faribault on the 14th of October, 1887, and at all the regular stations on the line of the Company in Minnesota prior to November 12, 1887, and in all things complied with the Statute.

The tariff so made, published and posted was dated October 13, 1887, and was headed: "Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company. (Iowa and Minnesota Division.) Freight Tariff on Milk from Owatonna and Faribault to St. Paul and Minneapolis, taking effect October 15, 1887," and prescribed a charge of $2\frac{1}{2}$ cents per gallon in ten-gallon cans from either the Owatonna Station or the Faribault Station to either St. Paul or Minneapolis, to be the legal, equal and reasonable maximum charge and compensation for such service, and declared that the same was in force and effect in lieu and place of the charges and compensation theretofore demanded and received therefor by the Company.

On the 6th of December, 1887, the Commission, by the attorney-general of the State, made an application to the Supreme Court of the State for a writ of mandamus to compel the Company to comply with the recommendation made to it by the Commission, to change its tariff of rates on milk from Owatonna and Faribault to St. Paul and Minneapolis, and to adopt the rates declared by the Commission to be equal and reasonable. The application set forth the proceedings hereinbefore detailed; that the Company had refused to carry out the recommendation so made, published and posted of this section, it shall be unlawful for such common carrier to charge, demand, collect or receive from any person or persons a greater or less compensation for the transportation of passengers or property or for any service in connection therewith, than is specified in such published schedule of classifications, rates, fares and charges as may at the time be in force.

(d) Every common carrier, subject to the provisions of this Act, shall file with the Commission hereafter provided for in section ten (10) of this Act, copies of its schedules of classifications, rates, fares and charges which have been established and published in compliance with the requirements of this section, and shall promptly notify said Commission of all changes proposed to be made in the same. Every [such] common carrier shall also file with said Commission copies of all contracts, agreements or arrangements with other common carriers in relation to any traffic affected by the provisions of this Act, to which contracts, agreements or arrangements it may be a party. And in cases where passengers or freight pass over lines or routes operated by more than one common carrier, and the several common carriers operating such lines or routes establish joint schedules of rates or fares, or charges or classifications for such lines or routes, copies of such joint schedules shall also, in like manner, be filed with said Commission. Such joint schedules of rates, fares, charges and classifications, for such lines, so filed as aforesaid, shall also be made public by such common carriers in the same manner as hereinbefore provided for the publication of tariffs upon its own lines.

(e) That in case the Commission shall at any time find that any part of the tariffs of rates, fares, charges or classifications so filed and published as hereinbefore provided, are in any respect unequal or unreasonable, it shall have the power and is hereby authorized and directed to compel any common carrier to change the same and adopt such rate, fare, charge or classification as said Commission shall declare to be equal and reasonable. To which end the Commission shall, in writing, inform such common carrier, in what respect such tariffs of rates, fares, charges or classifications are unequal and unreasonable, and shall recommend what tariffs shall be substituted therefor.

(f) In case such common carrier shall neglect or refuse for ten (10) days after such notice to substitute such tariff of rates, fares, charges or classifications, or to adopt the same as recommended by the Commission, it shall be the duty of said Commission to immediately publish such tariff of rates, fares, charges or classifications as they had declared to be equal and reasonable, and cause the same to be posted at all the regular stations on the line of such common carrier in this State, and thereafter it shall be unlawful for such common carrier to charge or maintain a higher or lower rate, fare, charge or classification than that so fixed and published by said Commission.

(g) If any common carrier, subject to the provisions of this Act, shall neglect or refuse to publish or file its schedule of classifications, rates, fares or charges or any part thereof as provided in this section, or if any common carrier shall refuse or neglect to carry out such recommendation made and published by such Commission, such common carrier shall be subject to a writ of mandamus, to be issued by any judge of the supreme court, or of any of the district courts of this State upon application of the Commission, to compel compliance with the requirements of this section and with the recommendation of the Commission, and failure to comply with the requirements of said writ of mandamus shall be punishable as and for contempt, and the said Commission, as complainants, may also apply to any such judge for a writ of injunction against such common carrier from receiving or transporting property or passengers within this State until such common carrier shall have complied with the requirements of this section and the recommendation of said Commission; and for any willful violation or failure to comply with such requirements or such recommendation of said Commission, the court may award such costs, including counsel fees, by way of penalty, on the return of said writs and after due deliberation thereon, as may be just.

SEC. 9. (a) That a Commission is hereby created and established, to be known as the "Railroad and Warehouse Commission of the State of Minnesota," by the Commission; that it continued to charge 3 cents per gallon for the transportation of milk in ten-gallon cans from Owatonna and Faribault to St. Paul and Minneapolis; that said charge was unequal, unreasonable and excessive; that 2½ cents per gallon for the transportation by it of milk in ten-gallon cans from Owatonna and Faribault to St. Paul and Minneapolis was the maximum reasonable charge for the service; that any rate therefor in excess of 2½ cents per gallon in ten-gallon cans was unequal, unreasonable and excessive; that 3 cents per gallon in ten-gallon cans was a higher rate than was charged for the same distances on passenger trains by any express company or by any other railroad company in Minnesota, engaged in transporting milk to St. Paul or Minneapolis; that 2½ cents per gallon in ten-gallon cans was the highest rate charged for like distances on passenger trains by any such company; that the milk transported by the Company to St. Paul and Minneapolis, over its Iowa and Minnesota Division (extending from Calmar, in Iowa, to LeRoy, in Minnesota, and from LeRoy, through Owatonna and Faribault, to St. Paul and Minneapolis), large quantities of which milk were shipped from Faribault, was so transported by the Company on a passenger train which ran daily from Owatonna to St. Paul and Minneapolis; and that the Company, by means of such excessive charges, subjected the traffic in milk at Faribault and Owatonna to undue and unreasonable prejudice and disadvantage.

Thereupon, an alternative writ of mandamus was issued by the court, returnable before it on the 14th of December, 1887.

On the 23d of December, 1887, the Company filed its return to the alternative writ, in which it set up:

(1) That it was not competent for the Legislature of Minnesota to delegate to a Commission a power of fixing rates for transportation, and that the Act of March 7, 1887, so far as it attempted to confer upon the Commission power to establish rates for the transportation of freight and passengers, was void under the Constitution of the State;

(2) That the Company, as the owner of its railroad, franchises, equipment and appurtenances, and entitled to the possession and beneficial use thereof, was authorized to establish rates for the transportation of freight and passengers, subject only to the provision that such rates should be fair and reasonable; that the establishing of such rates by the State against the will of the Company was pro tanto a taking of its property, and depriving it thereof, without due process of law, in violation of section 1 of article 14 of the Amendments to the Constitution of the United States; and that the making of the order of October 13, 1887, was pro tanto a taking, and depriving the Company, of its property without due process of law, in violation of said section 1, and therefore void and of no effect;

(3) That the rate of 3 cents per gallon as a freight for carrying milk in ten-gallon cans on passenger trains from Owatonna and Faribault respectively to St. Paul and Minneapolis was a reasonable, fair and just rate; that the rate of 2½ cents per gallon, in ten-gallon cans, so fixed and established by the Commission, was not a reasonable, fair or just compensation to the

which shall be composed of three (3) commissioners, who shall be appointed by the governor, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

(b) The commissioners first appointed under this Act shall continue in office for the term of one (1), two (2) and three (3) years respectively, and until their successors are appointed and qualified, beginning with the first (1st) Monday of January, A. D. 1889; the term of each to be designated by the governor, but their successors shall be appointed for a term of three (3) years, and until their successors are appointed and qualified, except that any person chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the commissioner whom he shall succeed. Any commissioner may be removed by the governor for inefficiency, neglect of duty or malfeasance in office. Said commissioners shall not engage in any other business, vocation or employment while acting as such commissioners. No vacancy in the Commission shall impair the right of the remaining commissioners to exercise all the powers of the Commission.

(c) Vacancies occasioned by removal, resignation or other cause shall be filled by the governor as provided in case of original appointments. Not more than two of the commissioners appointed shall be members of the same political party. No person in the employ of or holding any official relation to any common carrier subject to the provisions of this Act, or any law of this State, or owning stocks or bonds, or other property thereof, or who is in any manner interested therein, shall enter upon the duties of or hold such office.

(d) The decision of a majority of the Commission shall be considered the decision of the Commission on all questions arising for its consideration. Before entering upon the duties of his office each commissioner shall make and subscribe and file with the secretary of state an affidavit in the following form: "I do solemnly swear (or affirm, as the case may be) that I will support the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of the State of Minnesota, and that I will faithfully discharge my duties as a member of the Railroad and Warehouse Commission of the State of Minnesota, according to the best of my ability; and I further declare that I am not in the employ of, or holding any official relation to, any common carrier within this State; nor am I in any manner interested in any stock, bonds or other property of such common carrier."

(e) Each commissioner so appointed and qualified shall enter into bonds [to] of the State of Minnesota, to be approved by the governor, in the sum of twenty thousand ($20,000) dollars, conditioned for the faithful performance of his duty as a member of such Commission, which bond shall be filed with the secretary of state.

(f) The Commission shall conduct its proceedings in such a manner as will best conduce to the proper dispatch of business and to the ends of justice. A majority of the commissioners shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, but no commissioner shall participate in any hearing or proceeding in which he has any pecuniary interest. Said Commission may from time to time make or amend such general rules or orders as may be requisite for the order and regulation of proceedings before it, including forms of notices and service thereof, which shall conform as nearly as may be to those in use in the courts of this State. Any party may appear before said Commission and be heard in person or by attorney. Every vote and official act of the Commission shall be entered of record and its proceedings shall be public upon the request of either party interested, or at the discretion of the Commission. Said Commission shall have an official seal which shall be judicially noticed. Any member of the Commission may administer oaths and affirmations. The principal office of the Commission shall be in the City of St. Paul, where its general session shall be held.

(g) Whenever the convenience of the public or of the parties may be promoted, or delay or expenses prevented thereby, the Commission may hold special sessions in any part of the State. It may, by one or more of the commissioners, prosecute any inquiry necessary to its duties in any part of the State, into any matter or question of fact pertaining to the business of any common carrier subject to the provisions of this Act.

(h) The attorney-general of the State of Min-

Company for the service rendered; and that the establishing of such rate by the Commission, against the will of the Company, was pro tanto a taking of its property without due process of law, in violation of said section 1.

The case came on for hearing upon the alternative writ and the return, and the Company applied for a reference to take testimony on the issue raised by the allegations in the application for the writ and the return thereto, as to whether the rate fixed by the Commission was reasonable, fair and just. The court denied the application for a reference, and rendered judgment in favor of the relator and that a peremptory writ of mandamus issue. An application for a reargument was made and denied. The terms of the peremptory writ were directed to be, that the Company comply with the requirements of the recommendation and order made by the Commission on the 4th of August, 1887, and change its tariff of rates and charges for the transportation of milk from Owatonna and Faribault to St. Paul and Minneapolis, and substitute therefor the tariff recommended, published and posted by the Commission, to wit, the rate of 2½ cents per gallon of milk in ten-gallon cans from Owatonna and Faribault to St. Paul and Minneapolis, being the rates published by the Commission and declared to be equal and reasonable therefor. Costs were also adjudged against the Company. To review this judgment, the Company has brought a writ of error.

The opinion of the supreme court is reported in 38 Minn. 281. In it the court in the first place construed the Statute on the question as to whether the court itself had jurisdiction to entertain the proceeding, and held that it had. Of course, we cannot review this decision.

It next proceeded to consider the question as to the nature and extent of the powers granted to the Commission by the Statute in the matter of fixing the rates of charges. On that subject it said: "It seems to us that, if language means anything, it is perfectly evident that the expressed intention of the Legislature is that the rates recommended and published by the Commission (assuming that they have proceeded in the manner pointed out by the Act) should be not simply advisory, nor merely prima facie equal and reasonable, but final and conclusive as to what are lawful or equal and reasonable charges; that, in proceedings to compel compliance with the rates thus published, the law neither contemplates nor allows any issue to be made or inquiry had as to their equality and reasonableness in fact. Under the provisions of the Act, the rates thus published are the only ones that are lawful, and therefore, in contemplation of law, the only ones that are equal and reasonable; and, hence, in proceedings like the present, there is, as said before, no fact to traverse, except the violation of the law in refusing compliance with the recommendations of the Commission. Indeed, the language of the Act is so plain on that point that argument can add nothing to its force."

It then proceeded to examine the question of the validity of the Act under the Constitution of Minnesota, as to whether the Legislature was authorized to confer upon the Commission the powers given to the latter by the Statute. It held that, as the Legislature had the power itself to regulate charges by railroads, it could nesota shall be ex officio attorney for the Commission, and shall give them such counsel and advice as they may from time to time require; and he shall institute and prosecute any and all suits which said Railroad and Warehouse Commission may deem it expedient and proper to institute, and he shall render to such Railroad and Warehouse Commission all counsel, advice and assistance necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act, or of any law of this State, according to the true intent and meaning thereof. It shall likewise be the duty of the county attorney of any county in which suit is instituted or prosecuted, to aid in the prosecution of the same to a final issue upon the request of such Commission. Said Commission are hereby authorized, when the facts in any given case shall in their judgment warrant, to employ any and all additional legal counsel that they may think proper, expedient and necessary to assist the attorney-general or any county attorney in the conduct and prosecution of any suit they may determine to bring under the provisions of this Act, or of any law of this State.

SEC. 10. (a) That the Commission hereby created shall have authority to inquire into the management of the business of all common carriers, subject to the provisions of this Act, and shall keep itself informed as to the manner and method in which the same is conducted, and shall have the right to obtain from such common carriers full and complete information, necessary to enable the Commission to perform the duties and carry out the objects for which it was created; in order to enable said commissioners efficiently to perform their duties under this Act, it is hereby made their duty to cause one of their number to visit the various stations on the lines of each railroad as often as practicable, after giving twenty (20) days' notice of such visit and the time and place thereof in the local newspapers, and at least once in twelve (12) months to visit each county in the State in which is or shall be located a railroad station and personally inquire into the management of such railroad business, and for this purpose all railroad companies and common carriers, and their officers and employees, are required to aid and furnish each member of the Railroad and Warehouse Commission with reasonable and proper facilities, and each or all of the members of said Commission shall have the right, in his or their official capacity, to pass free on any railroad trains on all railroads in this State, and to enter and remain in at all suitable times, any and all cars, offices or depots, or upon the railroads of any railroad company, in this State in the performance of official duties; and whenever, in the judgment of the Commission, it shall appear that any common carrier fails in any respect or particular to comply with the laws of this State, or whenever, in their judgment, any repairs are necessary upon its railroad, or any addition to or change of its stations or station-houses is necessary, or any change in the mode of operating its road or conducting its business is reasonable or expedient in order to promote the security, convenience and accommodation of the public, said Commission shall inform such railroad company, by a notice thereof in writing, to be served as a summons in civil actions is required to be served by the statutes of this State in actions against corporations, certified by the Commission's clerk or secretary, and if such common carrier shall neglect or refuse to comply with such order, then the Commission may, in its discretion, cause suits or proceedings to be instituted to enforce its orders as provided in this Act.

SEC. 11. (a) That in case any common carrier, subject to the provisions of this Act, shall do, cause to be done or permit to be done, any act or thing in this Act prohibited or declared to be unlawful, or shall omit to do any act, matter or thing in this Act required to be done, such common carrier shall be liable to the person or persons, party or parties, injured thereby for the full amount of damages sustained in consequence of any such violation of the provisions of this Act, together with a reasonable counsel or attorney's fee to be fixed by the court in every case of recovery, which attorney's fees shall be taxed and collected as part of the costs in the case.

(b) That any person or persons, party or parties, claiming to be damaged by the action or non-action of any common carrier, subject to the provisions of this Act, may either make complaint to the Commisdelegate to a Commission the power of fixing such charges, and could make the judgment or determination of the Commission as to what were reasonable charges final and conclusive.

The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Company is a corporation organized under the laws of Wisconsin. The line of railroad owned and operated by it in the present case extends from Calmar, in Iowa, to LeRoy, in Minnesota, and from LeRoy, through Owatonna and Faribault, to St. Paul and Minneapolis, the line from Calmar to St. Paul and Minneapolis being known as the "Iowa and Minnesota Division," and being wholly in Minnesota from the point where it crosses the state line between Iowa and Minnesota. It was constructed under a charter granted by the Territory of Minnesota to the Minneapolis & Cedar Valley Railroad Company, by an Act approved March 1, 1856 (Laws of 1856, chap. 166, p. 325), to construct a railroad from the Iowa line, at or near the crossing of said line by the Cedar River, through the valley of Strait River to Minneapolis. Section 9 of that Act provided that the directors of the corporation should have power to make all needful rules, regulations and by-laws touching "the rates of toll and the manner of collecting the same;" and section 13, that the company should have power to unite its railroad with any other railroad which was then, or thereafter might be, constructed in the Territory of Minnesota, or adjoining States or Territories, and should have power to consolidate its stock with any other company or companies.

By an Act passed March 3, 1857, chap. 99

(11 Stat. 195), the Congress of the United States made a grant of land to the Territory of Minnesota to aid in constructing certain railroads. By an Act of the Legislature of the Territory, approved May 22, 1857 (Laws of 1857, extra session, p. 20), a portion of such grant was conferred upon the Minneapolis & Cedar Valley Railroad Company. Subsequently, in 1860, the State of Minnesota, by proper proceedings, became the owner of the rights, franchises and property of that company. By an Act approved March 10, 1862, chap. 17 (Special Laws of 1862, p. 226), the State incorporated the Minneapolis, Faribault & Cedar Valley Railroad Company, and conveyed to it all the franchises and property of the Minneapolis & Cedar Valley Railroad Company which the State had so acquired; and by an Act approved February 1, 1864 (Special Laws of 1864, p. 164), the name of the Minneapolis, Faribault & Cedar Valley Railroad Company was changed to that of the Minnesota Central Railway Company. That Company constructed the road from Minneapolis and St. Paul to LeRoy, in Minnesota; and the road from LeRoy to Calmar, in Iowa, and thence to McGregor, in the latter State, was consolidated with it. In August, 1867, the entire road from McGregor, by way of Calmar, LeRoy, Austin, Owatonna and Faribault, to St. Paul and Minneapolis, was conveyed to the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Company, which succeeded to all the franchises so granted to the Minneapolis & Cedar Valley Railroad Company.

It is contended for the Railway Company that the State of Minnesota is bound by the sion, as hereinafter provided for, or may bring suit in his or their own behalf for the recovery of the damages for which such common carrier may be liable under the provisions of this Act, in any district court of this State of competent jurisdiction; but such person or persons shall not have the right to pursue both of said remedies at the same time.

(c) In any action brought for the recovery of damages the court before which the same shall be pending may compel any director, officer, receiver, trustee or agent of any corporation or company, defendant in such suit, to attend, appear and testify in such case, and may compel the production of the books and papers of such corporation or company, party to any such suit; the claim that any such testimony or evidence may tend to criminate the person giving such evidence shall not excuse such witness from testifying, but such evidence shall not be used against such person on the trial of any criminal proceeding.

SEC. 12. That any common carrier, subject to the provisions of this Act, or whenever such common carrier is a corporation, any director or officer thereof, or any receiver, trustee, lessee, agent or person acting for, or employed by, such corporation, who, alone or with any other corporation, company, person or party, shall willfully do or cause to be done, or shall willfully suffer or permit to be done, any act, matter or thing in this Act prohibited or declared to be unlawful, or who shall aid or abet therein, or shall willfully omit or fail to do any act, matter or thing in this Act required to be done, or shall cause or willingly suffer or permit any act, matter or thing so directed or required by this Act to be done, not to be so done, or shall aid or abet therein any such omission, or shall be guilty of any willful infraction of this Act, or shall aid or abet therein, shall be deemed guilty of a violation of the provisions of this Act and shall, upon conviction thereof in any district court of the State within the jurisdiction of which such offense was committed, be subject to a penalty of not less than two thousand five hundred (2,500) dollars or more than five thousand (5,000) dollars for the first offense, and not less than five thousand (5,000) dollars or more than ten thousand (10,000) dollars for each subsequent offense.

SEC. 13. (a) That any person, firm, corporation or association, or any mercantile, agricultural or manufacturing society, or any body politic or municipal organization, complaining of anything done or omitted to be done by any common carrier subject to the provisions of this Act, in contravention of the provisions thereof, may apply to said Commission by petition, which shall briefly state the facts.

(b) Whereupon a statement of the charges thus made shall be forwarded by the Commission to such common carrier, who shall be called upon to satisfy the complaint, or to answer the same in writing within a reasonable time, to be specified by the Commission. If such common carrier, within the time specified, shall make reparation for the injury alleged to have been done, said carrier shall be relieved of liability to the complainant only, for the particular violation of law thus complained of. If such carrier shall not satisfy the complaint within the time specified, or there shall appear to be any reasonable ground for investigating said complaint, it shall be the duty of the Commission summarily to investigate the matter complained of, in such manner and by such means as it shall deem proper. No complaint shall at any time be dismissed because of absence of direct damages to the complainant. And for the purposes of this Act the Commission shall have power to require the attendance of witnesses and the production of all books, papers, contracts, agreements and documents relating to any matter under investigation, and, to that end, may invoke the aid of any of the courts of this State, in requiring the attendance of witnesses and the production of books, papers and documents, under the provisions of this Act.

(c) Any of the district courts of this State, within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on, shall, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpoena issued by the commissioners to any common carrier subject to the provisions of this Act, or, when such common carrier is a corporation, to an officer or agent thereof, or to any person connected therewith, if proceedings are instituted in the name of such Commission as plaintiffs, issue an order requiring such common carrier, officer or agent, or person, to show cause why such contumacy or refusal should not be punished as and for contract made by the Territory in the charter granted to the Minneapolis & Cedar Valley Railroad Company; that a contract existed that the Company should have the power of regulating its rates of toll; that any legislation by the State infringing upon that right impairs the obligation of the contract; that there was no provision in the charter or in any general statute reserving to the Territory or to the State the right to alter or amend the charter; and that no subsequent legislation of the Territory or of the State could deprive the directors of the Company of the power to fix its rates of toll, subject only to the general provision of law that such rates should be reasonable.

But we are of opinion that the general language of the ninth section of the charter of the Minneapolis & Cedar Valley Railroad Company cannot be held to constitute an irrevocable contract with that company that it should have the right for all future time to prescribe its rates of toll, free from all control by the Legislature of the State.

It was held by this court in Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Miller, 183 U. S. 75 [33: 267], in accordance with a long course of decisions both in the state courts and in this court, that a railroad corporation takes its charter, containing a kindred provision with that in question, subject to the general law of the State, and to such changes as may be made in such general law, and subject to future constitutional provisions and future general legislation, in the absence of any prior contract with it exempting it from liability to such future general legislation in respect of the subject matter involved; and that exemption from future general legislation, either by a constitutional provision or by an Act of the Legislature, cannot be admitted to exist unless it is given expressly or unless it follows by an implication equally clear with express words.

There is nothing in the mere grant of power, by section 9 of the charter, to the directors of the company, to make needful rules and regulations touching the rates of toll and the manner of collecting the same, which can be properly interpreted as authorizing us to hold that the State parted with its general authority itself to regulate, at any time in the future when it might see fit to do so, the rates of toll to be collected by the company.

In Stone v. Farmers L. & T. Co., 116 U. S. 807, 825 [29: 686, 642], the whole subject is fully considered, the authorities are cited, and the conclusion is arrived at that the right of a State reasonably to limit the amount of charges by a railroad company for the transportation of persons and property within its jurisdiction cannot be granted away by its Legislature unless by words of positive grant or words equivalent in law; and that a statute which grants to a railroad company the right "from time to time to fix, regulate and receive the tolls and charges by them to be received for transportation," does not deprive the State of its power, within the limits of its general authority, as controlled by the Constitution of the United States, to act upon the reasonableness of the tolls and charges so fixed and regulated. But, after reaching this conclusion, the court said contempt; and if upon the hearing the court finds that the inquiry is within the jurisdiction of the Commission, and that such contumacy or refusal is willful and the same is persisted in, such contumacy or refusal shall be punished as though the same had taken place in an action pending in the district court for any judicial district in this State. The claim that any such testimony or evidence may tend to criminate the person giving such evidence shall not excuse such witness from testifying; but such evidence or testimony shall not be used against such persons on the trial of any criminal proceeding.

SEC. 14. (a) Whenever an investigation shall be made by said Commission, it shall be its duty to make a report in writing in respect thereto, which shall include the findings of fact upon which the conclusions of the Commission are based, together with its recommendation as to what reparation, if any, should be made by the common carrier to party or parties who may be found to have been injured; and such findings so made shall thereafter, in all judicial proceedings, be deemed prima facie evidence as to each and every fact found. All reports of investigations made by the Commission shall be entered of record, and a copy thereof shall be furnished to the party who may have complained, and to any common carrier that may have been complained of, and the record thereof shall be public.

(b) If in any case in which an investigation shall be made by said Commission it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Commission, either by testimony of witnesses or other evidence, that anything has been done or omitted to be done by any common carrier, in violation of the provisions of this Act or of any law cognizable by said Commission, or that any injury or damages has been sustained by the party or parties complaining, or by other parties aggrieved in consequence of any such violation, it shall be the duty of the Commission to forthwith cause a copy of its report in respect thereto to be delivered to such common carrier, together with a notice to said common carrier to cease and desist from such violation and to make reparation for the injury so found to have been done, within a brief but reasonable time, to be specified by the Commission; and if within the time specified it shall be made to appear to the Commission that such common carrier has ceased from such violation of law, and has made reparation for the injury found to have been done, in compliance with the report and notice of the Commission, or to the satisfaction of the party complaining, a statement to that effect shall be entered of record by the Commission, and the said common carrier shall thereupon be relieved from further liability or penalty for such particular violation of law.

(c) But if said common carrier shall neglect or refuse, within the time specified, to desist from such violation of law, and make reparation for the injury done in compliance with the report and notice of the Commission as aforesaid, it shall be the duty of the Commission to forthwith certify the fact of such neglect or refusal, and forward a copy of its report and such certificate to the attorney-general of the State for redress and punishment as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 15. (a) That it shall be the duty of the attorney-general to whom said Commission may forward its report and certificate, as provided in the next preceding section of this Act, when it shall appear from such report that any injury or damages has been sustained by any party or parties by reason of such violation of law by such common carrier, to forthwith cause suit to be brought in the district court in the judicial district wherein such violation occurred, on behalf and in the name of the person or persons injured, against such common carrier, for the recovery of damages for such injury as may have been sustained by the injured party, and the cost and expenses of such prosecution shall be paid out of the appropriation hereinafter provided for for the uses and purposes of this Act.

(b) And the said court shall have power to hear and determine the matter on such short notice to the common carrier complained of as the court shall deem reasonable; and such notice shall be served on such common carrier, his or its officers, agents or servants, in such manner as the court shall direct; and said court shall proceed to hear and determine the matter speedily, and without the formal pleading and proceedings applicable to ordinary suits in equity, but in such manner as to do justice in the premises; and to this end such court

(p. 381 [644]): "From what has thus been said, it is not to be inferred that this power of limitation or regulation is itself without limit. This power to regulate is not a power to destroy, and limitation is not the equivalent of confiscation. Under pretense of regulating fares and freights, the State cannot require a railroad corporation to carry persons or property without reward; neither can it do that which in law amounts to a taking of private property for public use without just compensation, or without due process of law."

There being, therefore, no contract or chartered right in the Railroad Company which can prevent the Legislature from regulating in some form the charges of the Company for transportation, the question is whether the form adopted in the present case is valid.

The construction put upon the Statute by the Supreme Court of Minnesota must be accepted by this court, for the purposes of the present case, as conclusive and not to be re-examined here as to its propriety or accuracy. The supreme court authoritatively declares that it is the expressed intention of the Legislature of Minnesota, by the Statute, that the rates recommended and published by the Commission, if it proceeds in the manner pointed out by the Act, are not simply advisory, nor merely prima facie equal and reasonable, but final and conclusive as to what are equal and reasonable charges; that the law neither contemplates nor allows any issue to be made or inquiry to be had as to their equality or reasonableness in fact; that, under the Statute, the rates published by the Commission are the only ones that are lawful, and therefore in contemplation of law the only ones that are equal and reasonable; and that, in a proceeding for a mandamus under the Statute, there is no fact to traverse except the violation of law in not complying with the recommendations of the Commission. In other words, although the Railroad Company is forbidden to establish rates that are not equal and reasonable, there is no power in the courts to stay the hands of the Commission, if it chooses to establish rates that are unequal and unreasonable.

This being the construction of the Statute by which we are bound in considering the present case, we are of opinion that, so construed, it conflicts with the Constitution of the United States in the particulars complained of by the Railroad Company. It deprives the Company of its right to a judicial investigation, by due process of law, under the forms and with the machinery provided by the wisdom of successive ages for the investigation judicially of the truth of a matter in controversy, and substitutes therefor, as an absolute finality, the action of a Railroad Commission which, in view of the powers conceded to it by the state court, cannot be regarded as clothed with judicial functions or possessing the machinery of a court of justice.

Under section 8 of the Statute, which the Supreme Court of Minnesota says is the only one which relates to the matter of the fixing by the Commission of general schedules of rates, and which section, it says, fully and exclusively provides for that subject, and is complete in itself, all that the Commission is required to do shall have power if it thinks fit to direct and prosecute, in such mode and by such persons as it may appoint, all such inquiries as the court may think needful to enable it to form a just judgment in the matter of such petition. And on such hearing the report of said Commission shall be prima facie evidence of the matters therein stated.

(c) And if it be made to appear to such court, on such hearing, or on report of any such person or persons, that the lawful order or requirement of such Commission, drawn in question, has been violated or disobeyed, it shall be lawful for such court to issue a writ of injunction, or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, to restrain such common carrier from further continuing such violation or such disobedience of such order or requirement of said Commission, and enjoining obedience to the same; and in case of any disobedience of any such writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, it shall be lawful for such court to issue writs of attachment, or any other process of said court incident or applicable to writs of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, against such common carrier, and, if a corporation, against one or more of the directors, officers or agents of the same, or against any owner, lessee, trustee, receiver or other person failing to obey such writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise; and said court may, if it shall think fit, make an order directing such common carrier or other person so disobeying such writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, to pay such sum of money, not exceeding for each carrier or person in default the sum of five hundred ($500) dollars for every day after a day to be named in the order, that such carrier or other person shall fail to obey such injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise; and such moneys shall be payable as the court shall direct, either to the party complaining, or into court to abide the ultimate decision of the court; and payment thereof may, without prejudice to any other mode of recovering the same, be enforced by attachment or order in the nature of a writ of execution, in like manner as if the same had been recovered by a final decree in personam in such court.

Either party to such proceeding before said court may appeal to the Supreme Court of the State, under the same regulations now provided by law in respect to security for such appeal; but such appeal shall not operate to stay or supersede the order of the court or the execution of any writ or process thereon, unless the court hearing or deciding such case should otherwise direct; and such court may, in every such matter, order the payment of such costs and counsel fees as shall be deemed reasonable.

(d) In case the attorney-general shall not, within a period of ten (10) days after the making of any order by the Commission, commence judicial proceedings for the enforcement thereof, any railroad company, or other common carrier affected by such order, may at any time within the period of thirty (30) days after the service [of it] upon him or it of such order, and before commencement of proceedings, appeal therefrom to the district court of any judicial district through or into which his or its route may run, by the service of a written notice of such appeal upon some member or the secretary of such Commission. And upon the taking of such appeal, and the filing of the notice thereof, with the proof of service, in the office of the clerk of such court, there shall be deemed to be pending in such court a civil action of the character and for the purposes mentioned in sections eleven (11) and fifteen (15) of this Act. Upon such appeal, and upon the hearing of any application for the enforcement of any such order made by the Commission or by the attorney-general, the court shall have jurisdiction to examine the whole matter in controversy, including matters of fact as well as questions of law, and to affirm, modify or rescind such order in whole or in part, as justice may require; and in case of any order being modified, as aforesaid, such modified order shall, for all the purposes contemplated by this Act, stand in place of the original order so modified.

No appeal as aforesaid shall stay or supersede the order appealed from in so far as such order shall relate to rates of transportation or to modes of transacting the business of the appellant with the public, unless the court hearing or deciding such case shall so direct.

is, on the filing with it by the railroad company of copies of its schedules of charges, to "find" that any part thereof is in any respect unequal or unreasonable, and then it is authorized and directed to compel the company to change the same and adopt such charge as the Commission "shall declare to be equal and reasonable," and, to that end, it is required to inform the company in writing in what respect its charges are unequal and unreasonable. No hearing is provided for, no summons or notice to the company before the Commission has found what it is to find and declared what it is to declare, no opportunity provided for the company to introduce witnesses before the Commission, in fact, nothing which has the semblance of due process of law; and although, in the present case, it appears that, prior to the decision of the Commission, the Company appeared before it by its agent, and the Commission investigated the rates charged by the Company for transporting milk, yet it does not appear what the character of the investigation was or how the result was arrived at.

By the second section of the Statute in question, it is provided that all charges made by a common carrier for the transportation of passengers or property shall be equal and reasonable. Under this provision, the carrier has a right to make equal and reasonable charges for such transportation. In the present case, the return alleged that the rate of charge fixed by the Commission was not equal or reasonable, and the supreme court held that the Statute deprived the Company of the right to show that judicially. The question of the reasonableness of a rate of charge for transportation by a railroad company, involving as it does the element of reasonableness both as regards the company and as regards the public, is eminently a question for judicial investigation, requiring due process of law for its determination. If the company is deprived of the power of charging reasonable rates for the use of its property, and such deprivation takes place in the absence of an investigation by judicial machinery, it is deprived of the lawful use of its property, and thus, in substance and effect, of the property itself, without due process of law and in violation of the Constitution of the United States; and in so far as it is thus deprived, while other persons are permitted to receive reasonable profits upon their invested capital, the company is deprived of the equal protection of the laws.

It is provided by section 4 of article 10 of the Constitution of Minnesota of 1857, that "lands may be taken for public way, for the purpose of granting to any corporation the franchise of way for public use," and that "all corporations, being common carriers, enjoying the right of way in pursuance to the provisions of this section, shall be bound to carry the mineral, agricultural and other productions and manufactures on equal and reasonable terms." It is thus perceived that the provision of section 2 of the Statute in question is one enacted in conformity with the Constitution of Minnesota.

The issuing of the peremptory writ of mandamus in this case was therefore unlawful, because in violation of the Constitution of the United States; and it is necessary that the relief administered in favor of the plaintiff in

SEC. 16. (a) That whenever facts, in any manner ascertained by said Commission, shall, in its judgment, warrant a prosecution, it shall be the duty of said Commission to immediately cause suit to be instituted and prosecuted against any common carrier who may violate any of the provisions of this Act, or of any law of this State. All such prosecutions shall be in the name of the State of Minnesota, except as is otherwise provided in this Act, or in any law of this State, and may be instituted in any county in the State through or into which the line of any common carrier so sued may extend, and all penalties recovered under the provisions of this Act, or of any law of this State, in any suit instituted in the name of the State, shall be immediately paid into the state treasury by the sheriff or other officer or person collecting the same; and the same shall be by the state treasurer placed to the credit of the general revenue fund.

(b) For the purposes of this Act, except its penal provisions, the district courts of this State shall be deemed to be always in session.

SEC. 17. (a) That the Commission is hereby directed to require annual reports from all common carriers subject to the provisions of this Act, to fix the time and prescribe the manner in which said reports shall be made, and to require from such carriers specific answers to all questions upon which the Commission may need information. Such annual reports shall show in detail the amount of capital stock issued, the amounts paid therefor, and the manner of payment for the same, the dividends paid, the surplus fund, if any, and the number of stockholders, the funded and floating debts and the interest paid thereon; the cost and value of the carrier's property, franchises and equipment, the number of employes and the salary paid each class, the amounts expended for improvements each year, how expended, and the character of such improvements; the earnings and receipts of each branch of business, and from all sources, the operating and other expenses; the balance of profit and loss; and complete exhibit of the financial operations of the carrier each year, including an annual balance-sheet; also the total number of acres of land received as grants either from the United States or from the State of Minnesota, the number [of] acres of said grants sold, and average price received per acre, the number acres of grants unsold and the appraised value per acre. Such detailed reports shall also contain such information in relation to rates or regulations concerning fares or freights and agreements, arrangements or contracts with express companies, telegraph companies, sleeping and dining car companies, fast-freight lines, and other common carriers, as the Commission may require, with copies of such contracts, agreements or arrangements.

(b) And the Commission may, within its discretion, for the purpose of enabling it the better to carry out the purposes of this Act, prescribe (if in the opinion of the Commission it is practicable to prescribe such uniformity and methods of keeping accounts) a period of time within which all common carriers, subject to the provisions of this Act, shall have, as near as may be, a uniform system of accounts, and the manner in which such accounts shall be kept.

SEC. 18. (a) That such commissioners shall, on or before the first (1st) day of December in each year, and oftener if required by the governor to do so, make a report to the governor of their doings for the preceding year, containing such facts, statements and explanations as will disclose the actual workings of the system of railroad transportation in its bearings upon the business and prosperity of the people of this State, and such suggestions in relation thereto as to them may seem appropriate.

(b) They shall also, at such times as the governor shall direct, examine any particular subject connected with the conditions and management of such railroads, and report to him in writing their opinion thereon, with their reasons therefor. Said commissioners shall also investigate and consider what, if any, amendment or revision of the Railroad Laws of this State the best interests of the State demand, and they shall make a special biennial report on said subject to the governor. All such reports made to the governor shall be by him transmitted to the Legislature at the earliest practicable time.

(c) Nothing in this Act contained shall in any way abridge or alter the remedies now existing at common law or by statute, but the provisions of error should be a reversal of the judgment of the supreme court awarding that writ, and an instruction for further proceedings by it not inconsistent with the opinion of this court.

In view of the opinion delivered by that court, it may be impossible for any further proceedings to be taken other than to dismiss the proceeding for a mandamus, if the court should adhere to its opinion that, under the Statute, it cannot investigate judicially the reasonableness of the rates fixed by the Commission. Still, the question will be open for review; and the judgment of this court is, that the judgment of the Supreme Court of Minnesota, entered May 4, 1888, awarding a peremptory writ of mandamus in this case, be reversed, and the case be remanded to that court, with an instruction for further proceedings not inconsistent with the opinion of this court.

Mr. Justice Miller, concurring.*

I concur with some hesitation in the judgment of the court, but wish to make a few suggestions of the principles which I think should govern this class of questions in the courts. Not desiring to make a dissent, nor a prolonged argument in favor of any views I may have, I will state them in the form of propositions:

1. In regard to the business of common carriers limited to points within a single State, that State has the legislative power to establish the rates of compensation for such carriage.

2. The power which the Legislature has to do this can be exercised through a commission which it may authorize to act in the matter, such as the one appointed by the Legislature of Minnesota by the Act now under consideration.

3. Neither the Legislature, nor such commission acting under the authority of the Leg-

*This and the dissenting opinion by Mr. Justice Bradley, which follows, are also entitled in the case of The Minneapolis E. R. Co. v. State of Minnesota, post, p. 985.

this Act are in addition to such remedies. Provided, That no pending litigation shall in any way be affected by this Act.

SEC. 19. Each commissioner shall receive an annual salary of three thousand ($3,000) dollars, payable in the same manner as the salaries of other state officers. The commissioners shall appoint a secretary, who shall receive an annual salary of eighteen hundred ($1,800) dollars, payable in like manner. Said secretary shall, before entering upon the duties of his office, make and file with the secretary of state an affidavit in the following form: "I do solemnly swear or affirm (as the case may be) that I will support the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of the State of Minnesota, and that I will faithfully discharge my duties as secretary of the Railroad and Warehouse Commission of the State of Minnesota, according to the best of my ability; and I further declare that I am not in the employ of, or holding any official relation to, any common carrier or grain warehouseman, within said State; nor am I, in any manner, interested in any stock, bonds or other property of such common carrier or grain warehouseman." The said secretary so appointed and qualified shall enter into bonds to the State of Minnesota, to be approved by the governor, in the sum of ten thousand ($10,000) dollars, conditioned for the faithful performance of his duty as secretary of such Commission, which bond shall be filed with the secretary of state. The Commission shall have authority to employ and fix the compensation for such other employees as it may find necessary to the proper performance of its duties, subject to the approval of the governor of the State.

The commissioners shall be furnished with a suitable office and all necessary office supplies. Witnesses summoned before the Commission shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the district courts of the State.

4. In either of these classes of cases there is an ultimate remedy by the parties aggrieved, in the courts, for relief against such oppressive legislation, and especially in the courts of the United States, where the tariff of rates established either by the Legislature or by the commission is such as to deprive a party of his property without due process of law.

5. But until the judiciary has been appealed to to declare the regulations made, whether by the Legislature or by the commission, voidable for the reasons mentioned, the tariff of rates so fixed is the law of the land, and must be submitted to both by the carrier and the parties with whom he deals.

6. That the proper, if not the only, mode of judicial relief against the tariff of rates established by the Legislature or by its commission, is by a bill in chancery asserting its unreasonable character and its conflict with the Constitution of the United States, and asking a decree of court forbidding the corporation from exacting such fare as excessive, or establishing its right to collect the rates as being within the limits of a just compensation for the service rendered.

7. That until this is done it is not competent for each individual having dealings with the carrying corporation, or for the corporation with regard to each individual who demands its services, to raise a contest in the courts over the questions which ought to be settled in this general and conclusive method.

8. But in the present case, where an application is made to the Supreme Court of the able office and all necessary office supplies. Witnesses summoned before the Commission shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the district courts of the State.

All the expenses of the Commission, including all necessary expenses for transportation incurred by the commissioners or by their employes under their order, in making any investigation in any other place than the City of St. Paul, shall be allowed and paid out of the state treasury on the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor, approved by the chairman of the Commission and the state auditor.

SEC. 20. That the sum of fifteen thousand ($15,000) dollars is hereby appropriated for the use and purposes of this Act for the fiscal year ending July thirty-first (31st), eighteen hundred and eighty-eight (1888), and the sum of fifteen thousand ($15,000) dollars is hereby appropriated for the use and purposes of this Act for the fiscal year ending July thirty-first (31st), eighteen hundred and eighty-nine (1889).

SEC. 21. That all Acts and parts of Acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed; Provided, That the provisions of this Act shall apply to and govern the existing Railroad and Warehouse Commissioners appointed by virtue of an Act approved March fifth (5th), eighteen hundred and eighty-five (1885), who are hereby clothed with the powers and charged with the duties and responsibilities of this Act, granted to and imposed upon the Railroad and Warehouse Commissioners of the State of Minnesota.

SEC. 22. This Act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.
Approved March 7th, 1887.

State to compel the common carriers, namely, the railroad companies, to perform the services which their duty requires them to do for the general public, which is equivalent to establishing by judicial proceeding the reasonableness of the charges fixed by the Commission, I think the court has the same right and duty to inquire into the reasonableness of the tariff of rates established by the Commission before granting such relief, that it would have if called upon so to do by a bill in chancery.

9. I do not agree that it was necessary to the validity of the action of the Commission that previous notice should have been given to all common carriers interested in the rates to be established, nor to any particular one of them, any more than it would have been necessary, which I think it is not, for the Legislature to have given such notice if it had established such rates by legislative enactment.

10. But when the question becomes a judicial one, and the validity and justice of these rates are to be established or rejected by the judgment of a court, it is necessary that the railroad corporations interested in the fare to be considered should have notice and have a right to be heard on the question relating to such fare, which I have pointed out as judicial questions. For the refusal of the Supreme Court of Minnesota to receive evidence on this subject, I think the case ought to be reversed on the ground that this is a denial of due process of law in a proceeding which takes the property of the Company, and if this be a just construction of the Statute of Minnesota it is for that reason void.

Mr. Justice Bradley, dissenting:

I cannot agree to the decision of the court in this case [these cases]. It practically overrules Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113 [24: 77], and the several railroad cases that were decided at the same time. The governing principle of those cases was that the regulation and settlement of the fares of railroads and other public accommodations is a legislative prerogative and not a judicial one. This is a principle which I regard as of great importance. When a railroad company is chartered, it is for the purpose of performing a duty which belongs to the State itself. It is chartered as an agent of the State for furnishing public accommodation. The State might build its railroads if it saw fit. It is its duty and its prerogative to provide means of intercommunication between one part of its territory and another. And this duty is devolved upon the legislative department. If the Legislature commissions private parties, whether corporations or individuals, to perform this duty, it is its prerogative to fix the fares and freights which they may charge for their services. When merely a road or a canal is to be constructed, it is for the Legislature to fix the tolls to be paid by those who use it; when a company is chartered not only to build a road, but to carry on public transportation upon it, it is for the Legislature to fix the charges for such transportation.

But it is said that all charges should be reasonable, and that none but reasonable charges can be exacted; and it is urged that what is a reasonable charge is a judicial question. On the contrary, it is pre-eminently a legislative one, involving considerations of policy as well as of remuneration; and is usually determined by the Legislature, by fixing a maximum of charges in the charter of the company, or afterwards, if its hands are not tied by contract. If this maximum is not exceeded, the courts cannot interfere. When the rates are not thus determined, they are left to the discretion of the company, subject to the express or implied condition that they shall be reasonable; express, when so declared by statute; implied by the common law, when the statute is silent; and the common law has effect by virtue of the legislative will.

Thus, the Legislature either fixes the charges at rates which it deems reasonable, or merely declares that they shall be reasonable; and it is only in the latter case, where what is reasonable is left open, that the courts have jurisdiction of the subject. I repeat: When the Legislature declares that the charges shall be reasonable, or, which is the same thing, allows the common-law rule to that effect to prevail, and leaves the matter there, then resort may be had to the courts to inquire judicially whether the charges are reasonable. Then, and not till then, is it a judicial question. But the Legislature has the right, and it is its prerogative, if it chooses to exercise it, to declare what is reasonable.

This is just where I differ from the majority of the court. They say in effect, if not in terms, that the final tribunal of arbitration is the judiciary; I say it is the Legislature. I hold that it is a legislative question, not a judicial one, unless the Legislature or the law (which is the same thing) has made it judicial, by prescribing the rule that the charges shall be reasonable, and leaving it there.

It is always a delicate thing for the courts to make an issue with the legislative department of the government, and they should never do so if it is possible to avoid it. By the decision now made we declare, in effect, that the judiciary, and not the Legislature, is the final arbiter in the regulation of fares and freights of railroads and the charges of other public accommodations. It is an assumption of authority on the part of the judiciary which, it seems to me, with all due deference to the judgment of my brethren, it has no right to make. The assertion of jurisdiction by this court makes it the duty of every court of general jurisdiction, state or federal, to entertain complaints against the decisions of the boards of commissioners appointed by the States to regulate their railroads; for all courts are bound by the Constitution of the United States, the same as we are. Our jurisdiction is merely appellate.

The incongruity of this position will appear more distinctly by a reference to the nature of the cases under consideration. The question presented before the Commission in each case was one relating simply to the reasonableness of the rates charged by the Companies,—a question of more or less. In the one case the Company charged 8 cents per gallon for carrying milk between certain points. The Commission deemed this to be unreasonable, and reduced the charge to 2½ cents. In the other case the Company charged $1.25 per car for handling and switching empty cars over its lines within the City of Minneapolis, and $1.50 for loaded cars; and the Commission decided that $1 per car was a sufficient charge in all cases. The Companies complain that the charges as fixed by the Commission are unreasonably low, and that they are deprived of their property without due process of law; that they are entitled to a trial by a court and jury, and are not barred by the decisions of a legislative Commission. The state court held that the Legislature had the right to establish such a Commission, and that its determinations are binding and final, and that the courts cannot review them. This court now reverses that decision, and holds the contrary. In my judgment the state court was right, and the establishment of the Commission, and its proceedings, were no violation of the constitutional prohibition against depriving persons of their property without due process of law.

I think it is perfectly clear, and well settled by the decisions of this court, that the Legislature might have fixed the rates in question. If it had done so, it would have done it through the aid of committees appointed to investigate the subject, to acquire information, to cite parties, to get all the facts before them, and finally to decide and report. No one could have said that this was not due process of law. And if the Legislature itself could do this, acting by its committees, and proceeding according to the usual forms adopted by such bodies, I can see no good reason why it might not delegate the duty to a board of commissioners, charged as the Board in this case was, to regulate and fix the charges, so as to be equal and reasonable. Such a board would have at its command all the means of getting at the truth and ascertaining the reasonableness of fares and freights, which a legislative committee has. It might, or it might not, swear witnesses and examine parties. Its duties being of an administrative character, it would have the widest scope for examination and inquiry. All means of knowledge and information would be at its command,—just as they would be at the command of the Legislature which created it. Such a body, though not a court, is a proper tribunal for the duties imposed upon it.

In the case of Davidson v. City of New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97 [24: 616], we decided that the appointment of a board of assessors for assessing damages was not only due process of law, but the proper method for making assessments to distribute the burden of a public work amongst those who are benefited by it. No one questions the constitutionality or propriety of boards for assessing property for taxation, or for the improvement of streets, sewers and the like, or of commissions to establish county seats, and for doing many other things appertaining to the administrative management of public affairs. Due process of law does not always require a court. It merely requires such tribunals and proceedings as are proper to the subject in hand. In the Railroad Commission Cases, 116 U. S. 307 [29: 636], we held that a board of commissioners is a proper tribunal for determining the proper rates of fare and freight on the railroads of a State. It seems to me, therefore, that the Law of Minnesota did not prescribe anything that was not in accordance with due process of law in creating such a board, and investing it with the powers in question.

It is complained that the decisions of the board are final and without appeal. So are the decisions of the courts in matters within their jurisdiction. There must be a final tribunal somewhere for deciding every question in the world. Injustice may take place in all tribunals. All human institutions are imperfect—courts as well as commissions and Legislatures. Whatever tribunal has jurisdiction, its decisions are final and conclusive unless an appeal is given therefrom. The important question always is, What is the lawful tribunal for the particular case? In my judgment, in the present case, the proper tribunal was the Legislature, or the Board of Commissioners which it created for the purpose.

If not in terms, yet in effect, the present cases are treated as if the constitutional prohibition was, that no State shall take private property for public use without just compensation,—and as if it was our duty to judge of the compensation. But there is no such clause in the Constitution of the United States. The Vth Amendment is prohibitory upon the federal government only, and not upon the state governments. In this matter,—just compensation for property taken for public use,—the States make their own regulations, by Constitution or otherwise. They are only required by the Federal Constitution to provide “due process of law.” It was alleged in Davidson v. New Orleans that the property assessed was not benefited by the improvement; but we held that that was a matter with which we would not interfere; the question was, whether there was due process of law. (96 U. S. 106 [24: 620].) If a state court renders an unjust judgment, we cannot remedy it.

I do not mean to say that the Legislature, or its constituted Board of Commissioners, or other legislative agency, may not so act as to deprive parties of their property without due process of law. The Constitution contemplates the possibility of such an invasion of rights. But, acting within their jurisdiction (as in these cases they have done), the invasion should be clear and unmistakable to bring the case within that category. Nothing of the kind exists in the cases before us. The Legislature, in establishing the Commission, did not exceed its power; and the Commission, in acting upon the cases, did not exceed its jurisdiction, and was not chargeable with fraudulent behavior. There was merely a difference of judgment as to amount, between the Commission and the Companies, without any indication of intent on the part of the former to do injustice. The board may have erred; but if they did, as the matter was within their rightful jurisdiction, their decision was final and conclusive unless their proceedings could be impeached for fraud. Deprivation of property by mere arbitrary power on the part of the Legislature, or fraud on the part of the Commission, are the only grounds on which judicial relief may be sought against their action. There was, in truth, no deprivation of property in these cases at all. There was merely a regulation as to the enjoyment of property, made by a strictly competent authority, in a matter entirely within its jurisdiction.

It may be that our Legislatures are vested with too much power, open, as they are, to influences so dangerous to the interests of individuals, corporations and society. But such is the constitution of our republican form of government; and we are bound to abide by it until it can be corrected in a legitimate way. If our Legislatures become too arbitrary in the exercise of their powers, the people always have a remedy in their hands; they may at any time restrain them by constitutional limitations. But so long as they remain invested with the powers that ordinarily belong to the legislative branch of government, they are entitled to exercise those powers, amongst which, in my judgment, is that of the regulation of railroads and other public means of intercommunication, and the burdens and charges which those who own them are authorized to impose upon the public.

I am authorized to say that Mr. Justice Gray and Mr. Justice Lamar agree with me in this dissenting opinion.

THE MINNEAPOLIS EASTERN RAILWAY COMPANY, Pf. in Err.,

THE STATE OF MINNESOTA.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 467-482.)

Prior decision followed—contract with corporation as to its rate of charges.

1. The rulings and decision in Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul R. Co. v. State of Minnesota, ante, p. 970, just decided, apply to the present case.
2. Laws of Minnesota of 1869, chap. 78, p. 95, and sec. 8 of chap. 108 of the General Laws of Minnesota of 1875, do not constitute such a contract with the corporation, as to the fixing by it of its rate of charges, as to deprive the Legislature of its power to regulate those charges.

[No. 1118.]

Argued Jan. 13, 14, 1890. Decided March 24, 1890.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Minnesota to review a judgment awarding a peremptory writ of mandamus against the Minneapolis Eastern Railway Company, commanding it to comply with the requirements of the recommendation and order made by the Railroad and Warehouse Commission of the State of Minnesota to change its tariff of rates and charges. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

This case was argued together with the preceding case of Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul R. Co. v. State of Minnesota, ante, p. 970.

Mr. James H. Howe, for plaintiff in error:

A State can make a contract with one of its own corporations, which it cannot subsequently impair.

Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Cutts, 94 U. S. 155 (24: 94).

The order in question impairs the obligation of the contract.

Mr. W. H. Norris, also for plaintiff in error:

A special corporate charter is a contract, which, in the absence of reserve power, may not be impaired.

Mr. Justice Blatchford delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a writ of error to the Supreme Court of the State of Minnesota, to review its judgment awarding a peremptory writ of mandamus against the Minneapolis Eastern Railway Company, commanding it to comply with the requirements of the recommendation and order made by the Railroad and Warehouse Commission of the State of Minnesota, on the 2d of August, 1887, and to change its tariff of rates and charges for handling and switching any car over the lines of its railway in the City of Minneapolis, regardless of the distance or the character of the freight in such car, and to substitute therefor the tariff recommended, published and posted by said Commission, to wit, the rate of $1 for handling and switching any car over its line of railway in said city, regardless of the distance or the character of the freight in such car, being the rate published by the Commission and declared to be equal and reasonable. The case arose under the same Statute considered in the case of Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. v. State of Minnesota [ante, p. 970], just decided.

The Minneapolis Eastern Railway Company was and is a railroad corporation duly created and organized under the General Railroad Law of the State of Minnesota, operating one or more lines of railway in the City of Minneapolis in that State, and a common carrier engaged in transporting freight and property by rail within the limits of that city, and more particularly engaged in the business of handling and switching cars over its line or lines of railroad within said limits, and, as such common carrier, enjoying the right to conduct its business within the State of Minnesota, subject to the provision of section 4 of article 10 of the Constitution of that State, and bound to carry minerals, agricultural and other productions, and manufactures, on equal and reasonable terms. Prior to the 7th of July, 1887, the Company had and maintained in force a schedule of its tariff of rates within the City of Minneapolis, as follows: For handling and switching empty cars over its lines of railway within the limits of the city, $1.25 per car; for handling and switching loaded cars over its lines of railway within the limits of the city, $1.50 per car; and prior thereto said schedule of rates had been published by the Company.

On the 7th of July, 1887, the Railroad Commission constituted by said Act made an order which was served upon the Company, and on the 2d of August, 1887, made a further order, a notice of which was served on the Company, in the following terms:

"Whereas, at a regular meeting of the Railroad and Warehouse Commission of the State of Minnesota, held at the office of said Commission, in the City of St. Paul, in said State, on the 7th day of July last, and pursuant to sec. 8 of an Act entitled 'An Act to Regulate Common Carriers, and Creating the Railroad and Warehouse Commission of the State of Minnesota, and Defining the Duties of Such Commission in Relation to Common Carriers,' approved March 7, 1887, a notice or order was then and there made and issued by said Commission and duly served upon you, of which the following is a copy, namely:

"Whereas, all railroad companies owning or operating terminal or switching facilities at or within the City of Minneapolis, in said State, with the exception of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company, pursuant to subdivision (d) of section 8 of an Act entitled 'An Act to Regulate Common Carriers, and Creating the Railroad and Warehouse Commission of the State of Minnesota, and Defining the Duties of Such Commission in Relation to Common Carriers,' approved March 7, 1887, have filed with this Commission copies of their several schedules of rates and charges for switching cars on their respective tracks at and within said city; and whereas it appears from said schedule that the rates and charges made by said companies vary from twenty-five cents per car for empty cars to two dollars per car for loaded cars; and whereas said Commission, after due and careful inquiry and consideration, do find that each and every charge in excess of one dollar per car for switching within the limits of said City of Minneapolis is unreasonable and an excessive compensation for the service performed: Now, therefore, it is ordered and determined by this Commission, pursuant to the authority in them vested by the aforesaid legislative Act, that all such schedules be changed by striking therefrom all charges or rates in excess of one dollar per car for the switching or transfer thereof and insert in room of the words or figures stricken out the words "one dollar" or the appropriate sign and figure therefor. It is the object and purpose of this order to establish one dollar as the maximum charge for the switching or transfer of any car at or within the limits of said city without regard to distance or the kind of goods or merchandise with which the car so switched or transferred may be loaded;

"And whereas, by the subsequent action of said Commission, of which said action you were duly notified by order of the Commission, the said order or notice should not take effect or be considered to be of binding force upon you until the fifteenth day of said month;

"And whereas you have neglected and refused for more than ten days after and since the fifteenth day of July last to substitute such tariff of rates or charges or to adopt the same as recommended and directed by said Commission, as in and by said notice and order you were recommended and required to do, and do still so neglect and refuse:

"Now, therefore, we, the said Commission, do hereby publish and declare the said tariff of rates, namely, one dollar per car for the switching or transfer of any loaded car by you within the limits of the said City of Minneapolis, as and to be the legal, equal and reasonable charge for such switching or transfer of cars by you, and that the same is now in force and effect in place of the charges and rate of compensation by you heretofore charged for such service.

"You, the said Railway Company, your agents and employes, will act accordingly or answer for a violation of the section and Act to which reference is above made."

On the 10th of January, 1889, the Commission, by the attorney-general of the State, made application in writing to the Supreme Court of the State to compel the Company to comply with the recommendations made to it by the Commission to change its tariff of rates for handling or switching cars within the City of Minneapolis, and to substitute therefor the tariff recommended by the Commission, and to adopt the rates declared by the Commission to be equal and reasonable for such services. The application set forth the schedule or tariff of rates so maintained by the Company prior to the 7th of July, 1887, for switching empty and loaded cars over its lines of railway within the limits of the City of Minneapolis, the finding of the Commission, on the 7th of July, 1887, that such schedule of rates was unequal and unreasonable, and its order establishing $1 as the maximum charge for switching or transferring any car within the limits of the city, without regard to distance or the kind of goods with which it might be loaded; that the Company had been duly notified of such action of the Commission, and had neglected, for more than ten days after the 15th of July, 1887, to substitute or adopt the tariff of charges recommended and directed by the Commission; that the Commission had duly posted and published the tariff declared by it to be equal and reasonable; and that the Company still refused to carry out the recommendation of the Commission so made, published and posted, and continued to charge the rates so specified as its schedule tariff.

An alternative writ of mandamus was applied for and issued, commanding the Company to adopt the rate of charges so declared by the Commission to be equal and reasonable for handling and switching cars within the City of Minneapolis, or to show cause why it had not done so, on the 15th of January, 1889.

By its return, filed January 21, 1889, the Company made answer to the alternative writ as follows:

"That this respondent was organized as a railway company under and by virtue of the General Laws of the State of Minnesota, on or about the 17th day of June, A. D. 1878.

"That on or about the 27th day of January, A. D. 1879, its articles of association were amended so as to declare and make the general nature of its business to be the building and operating of a railway from the City of Minneapolis, in the County of Hennepin, and State of Minnesota, to the City of St. Paul, in the County of Ramsey, in said State, with branches connecting with any and all railroads then built or thereafter to be built or secured or constructed to or into the said cities or either of them; also branches to mills and manufactories in said cities or in either of them; the said railway and branches to be constructed and operated with one or more tracks and with necessary side tracks, turn-outs and connections, and all necessary roadways, right of way, depot grounds, yards, machine shops, warehouses, elevators, station-houses, structures and buildings, rolling stock and all other real estate and personal property necessary or convenient for the operation and management of said railway.

"That the total length of its tracks heretofore constructed is about three and one-half (3½) miles, and that said tracks are and at all times have been wholly within the City of Minneapolis.

"That the total cost to this respondent of its said system of railway and of the equipment thereof is the sum of two hundred and fifty-three thousand one hundred and forty-eight dollars and eleven cents ($253,148.11), embracing the following items:

"For right of way and damage to buildings, one hundred thousand one hundred and two dollars and ninety-nine cents	$100,102 99
"For grading and surfacing, nine thousand two hundred and thirty-seven dollars and sixty-four cents	9,237 64
"For bridges, docking and trestle, sixty-four thousand seven hundred and six dollars and ninety-four cents	64,706 94

"For ties, iron and steel, track-laying, crossings, switches and side tracks, twenty-nine thousand twenty dollars and sixty-seven cents	29,020 67
"For buildings, two thousand two hundred and fifty-two dollars and seventy cents	2,252 70
"For incorporation and legal expenses and engraving, six thousand one hundred and fifteen dollars and sixteen cents	6,115 16
"For office furniture and track scales, four hundred and forty-seven dollars and fifty-five cents	447 56
"For one (1) locomotive engine and one (1) hand car, six thousand one hundred and fifty-four dollars and seventy-seven cents	6,154 77
"And for divers other items, thirty-five thousand one hundred and nine dollars and sixty-nine cents	35,109 69

"That, since the acquisition of this respondent's said right of way, the value of real estate in the City of Minneapolis, as well adjacent to said railway as in said city at large, has increased many fold, and the acquisition of said right of way would at this time cost many times the amount laid out and expended therefor by this respondent.

"That but thirty thousand ($30,000) dollars of its capital stock has ever been issued.

"That on or about the 1st day of January, A. D. 1879, this respondent, being thereunto duly authorized by law, made, executed and delivered to Sherburne S. Merrill and William H. Ferry, as mortgagees, in trust to secure the payment of the bonds hereinafter mentioned, with the interest thereon, a mortgage or deed of trust, bearing date on that day, whereby it granted, bargained, sold and conveyed unto the said trustees all its railroad then in course of construction on the west side of the Mississippi River, being much the greater proportion of its entire present system, including all the railways, ways, rights of way, depot grounds and other lands for rights of way or for railway uses; all tracks, bridges, viaducts, culverts, fences and other structures; all depots, station houses, engine-houses, car-houses, freight houses, wood-houses and other buildings; all shops then held or thereafter to be acquired or used in connection with said railroad or the business thereof, and all locomotives, tenders, cars, rolling stock or equipment; all machinery, tools, implements, fuel and materials for constructing, operating, repairing or replacing said railroad or any part thereof, or of any part of its equipment or appurtenances then held or thereafter to be acquired; also all franchises connected with or relating to said railroad, or to the construction, maintenance or use thereof then held or thereafter to be acquired by the said respondent, including the franchise to be a corporation, and all and singular the hereditaments thereunto belonging or in any wise appertaining, and all the real estate, right, title, interest, property, possession, claims and demands whatsoever, as well in law as in equity, of the said respondent of, in and to the same, and any and every part thereof; which mortgage or deed of trust expressly provided that the trust thereby created should not affect any further extension or branches of said line of railroad, or any property acquired or to be acquired for use in connection with such extension or branch, and which said mortgage or deed of trust was recorded in the office of the register of deeds in and for the said County of Hennepin, in volume 54 of mortgages, on pages 377 to 387, inclusive.

"That, under and by virtue of the said mortgage or deed of trust, and pursuant to the tenor thereof, this respondent, on or about the first day of January, 1879, made and executed in due form of law, and thereafter negotiated and disposed of, one hundred and fifty (150) bonds or writings obligatory for the sum of one thousand ($1,000) dollars each, and all of like tenor, bearing date the 1st day of January, 1879, and payable in thirty (30) years after the date thereof, with interest at the rate of seven (7) per cent per annum, payable semi-annually, on the first days of January and July in each year, upon the presentation and surrender of coupons there-to respectively annexed, representing and requiring the payment of each such installment of interest, by reason whereof this respondent became liable to pay the sum of ten thousand and five hundred ($10,500) dollars per annum for such interest on its said bonds so issued and negotiated; which mortgage is still in full force and effect and all which bonds and coupons are still outstanding and wholly unpaid.

"That all the proceeds of said stock so issued and all the proceeds of said bonds so negotiated were used in the construction and equipment of respondent's said railway.

"That all such proceeds were insufficient for that purpose, and this respondent therefore, from time to time, for that purpose, effected and further became indebted for further loans of money, without security therefor, to the amount of about ninety thousand ($90,000) dollars, all which was used in the construction and equipment aforesaid.

"That this respondent began the operation of the said railway on or about the 1st day of June, 1879, and has continued to operate the same at all times hitherto.

"That its whole business now is, and at all times has been, the receipt, transportation and delivery, commonly called switching, of cars between the tracks of other railway companies and mills, warehouses and industries situated upon its own lines within said City of Minneapolis.

"That, until the 1st day of September, 1882, it charged for its services in switching only the sum of one dollar ($1) per loaded car; that on the day last aforesaid it raised its charge for such service, and has ever since charged and received for such service the sum of one dollar and fifty cents ($1.50) per loaded car.

"That the service so rendered by this respondent is of a character which would otherwise be performed by drays or wagons, at an expense to patrons very much greater than the last-mentioned rate of charge of this respondent.

"That the rate of one dollar and fifty cents ($1.50) per loaded car above stated does not exceed, but is, a fair and reasonable charge for such service.

"This respondent further says, that from the beginning of the operation of said railway to and including the 30th day of June, 1897, notwithstanding such increase of rate, the gross earnings of this respondent were less than the amount of its operating expenses and of the interest to that date accrued upon its said mortgage bonds, by the sum of twenty-one thousand two hundred and twenty-three dollars and seventy-six cents ($21,223.76).

"That all the excess of its gross earnings over its operating expenses has been, from year to year, applied to the repayment of the aforesaid unsecured indebtedness for moneys used in construction and equipment and the interest thereon.

"That, on the 30th day of June, 1888, there nevertheless remained unpaid of the indebtedness last mentioned and interest thereon the sum of twelve thousand two hundred and eleven dollars and two cents ($12,211.02), of which last-mentioned sum, by like application of such excess, the sum of ten thousand dollars ($10,000) was paid on or before the 30th day of November, 1888, then still leaving a balance of such unsecured indebtedness and of the interest thereon, in the sum of two thousand two hundred and eleven dollars and two cents ($2,211.02).

"That, by reason of such application of the excess of gross earnings over operating expenses, no interest whatever has ever been hitherto paid, and this respondent has had no funds wherewith to pay any interest whatever, upon its aforesaid bonded indebtedness, but that the same has accumulated and remains unpaid to the amount of one hundred and five thousand ($105,000) dollars.

"This respondent further says, that, in the year ending on the 30th day of June, 1888, its last-completed fiscal year, it transported over its lines twenty-seven thousand two hundred and seventy-two (27,272) loaded cars, which was its entire business, and that it received as compensation therefor, at the rate of one dollar and fifty cents ($1.50) per car, the sum of forty thousand nine hundred and eight ($40,908) dollars, which last-mentioned sum constituted its entire receipts for that year.

"That it therewith paid its operating expenses for the same year, amounting to twenty-two thousand five hundred and eighty-three dollars and seventy-eight cents ($22,583.78), and paid the whole residue thereof on account and in reduction of its unsecured indebtedness aforesaid and the interest thereon.

"That the said year was an unusually prosperous one, and was the first year in the history of this respondent when it earned a sum equal to the amount of its operating expenses and one year's interest upon its said bonded indebtedness.

"That, induced by its gradual reduction and payment as aforesaid of its said unsecured indebtedness, the creditors of this respondent for the said unsecured indebtedness have hitherto, with the assent and at the request of this respondent, as the said interest coupons have from time to time become due, advanced the amounts thereof to the holders of said coupons, and thereupon and thereby taken the same up from such holders by way of payments for the honor and for the protection of the credit of this respondent, in order to avoid any foreclosure on the part of the holders of said bonds by reason of default in the payment of any such coupons, and that so, and not otherwise, has this respondent hitherto been able to avoid such foreclosure.

"The respondent further says, that a portion of its said railroad upon the west side of said river, about one thousand and two hundred (1,200) feet in length, is upon wooden trestle-work, which is now nearly ten (10) years old, and about one thousand one hundred (1,100) feet in length of which is so decayed and worn that the same must be almost entirely renewed and rebuilt within the current year 1889, if the operation of said railroad is to be continued.
